Strong Love Interest Depicted in Photo Features.

"Third Kiss" Premiere at Grauman's Theater.

Chambers Story at Kinema; Glyn Play Also Shows.

A sunburst of new features will illuminate the motion-picture screens this week. Some of the most unusual plays are billed. Comedy is blended very satisfactorily with drama, and the love interest supplied by such noted authors of sentimental cast as Chambers and Elinor Glyn assures popularity for this type of entertainment. There is to be a national premiere of a new Lasky feature, which will make the programme especially brilliant.

Grauman's.

The American premiere of Jesse L. Lasky's special production, "The Third Kiss," will be given at Grauman's tomorrow, and it is believed the production, which deals with an unusual domestic entanglement will prove the theme of much comment.

On the same bill with "The Third Kiss"' Sid Grauman will stage an elaborate classical dancing feature. A beautiful corps de ballet will interpret, Youth, Love, Rhythm, Art and Frivolity. Helen Scholder, 'cellist, will offer several classic music numbers.

Sid Grauman has made a discovery in vocal talent, a colored woman who desires that her real identity remain unknown. Mr. Grauman claims that if this woman were white she would rival some celebrated singers as a drawing attraction.

A new travel picture, another Bobby Bumps adventure, Grauman's International Flashes and the Literary Digest Topics will be among other numbers. Grauman's Symphony Orchestra, under Arthur Kay, conductor, has prepared an exceptional musical number as an overture to "The Third Kiss," and C. Sharp-Minor will play Rachmaninoff's Prelude at the organ.

Kinema.

Based upon Robert W. Chambers's novel of intrigue, "The Dark Star," first of the Cosmopolitan productions, makes its appearance on the screen of the Kinema Theater today, as a Paramount-Artcraft feature. Chambers's story leads its characters from New York and its suburbs across the Atlantic to Paris and into Turkey and the far corners of the East. It deals with the girl Ruhannah, whose life is a series of strange adventures.

The picture was directed by Allan Dwan, with the cast headed by Marion Davies. Miss Davies's acting in the new photoplay has been highly commended. Norman Kerry, Matt Moore, George Cooper, Dorothy Green and others portray the various roles.

The added attractions at the Kinema are to be topped by a new prologue production—an atractive ballet in an act titled "Arabian Night." There will also be a new Prizma, as well as a cartoon comedy. George Mulford and the Kinema concert orchestra and Leonard H. Clark at the organ will present the music.

California.

"The Career of Katherine Bush" from Elinor Glyn's novel is to be shown at the California Theater beginning tomorrow. This is a Famous Player-Lasky picturization and stars Catherine Calvert, known as "the lady beautiful of the screen." Miss Calvert's exceptional physical qualifications led to the choice of her to portray the title role of this subject. The supporting cast includes John Goldsworthy, Crauford Kent, Claire Whitney, Fred Burton, Mathilda Brundage,. Helen Montrose and Ann Dearing.

The special comedy feature next week will be the first of the new two-reel Mrs. Sidney Drew comedies, entitled "Bunkered." It is promised that these new fun films are of the same high standard that made those with her late husband so popular. In this first one the scenes are laid on a golf course. The overture chosen by Leader Donatelli of the California orchestra and Jesse Crawford's playing of "Poet and Peasant" on the big organ will add to the musical interest. A surprise dancing act and the usual varied features combine to make the balance of the programme.

Victory.

Bryant Washburn again comes up smiling in "Putting It Over" at the Victory, beginning today. In this play Washburn proves to be all that goes to make up a village cut-up—a regular devil-may-care cuss who tears up the town and who comes staggering out of ice cream parlors at 10 p.m. n'everything.

He suddenly wakes to find himself in the heart of New York. With princely ideas and a pauper's pocketbook he sets about amassing fame and fortune. During that trying period that he "stalls" off his anxious landlady by paying court to her daughter, but meets with little success. But when the real girl comes along and he tells her he makes $50 a week and rents a dress suit to prove it he undertakes real responsibility.

With the irate landlady threatening to pile his earthly belongings in the street for his failure to pay rent due, a brilliant idea strikes him. He capitalizes it and the next morning his $10 a week has grown to the alleged $50.

Garrick.

The photodrama of Hall Caine's novel, "The Woman Thou Gavest Me," which was two weeks recently at the California Theater, will be shown on the screen at the Garrick, starting today. The production was made in California under the direction of Hugh Ford and the cast features Katherine MacDonald, Milton Sills, Jack Holt, Fritzi Brunette and Katherine Griffith.

The unforgettable story of Mary's struggle after she had been given in marriage to a man she did not love made a vivid impression upon those who saw the production here a few months ago, and, as with all of Hall Caine's works, it brings forth a radical difference of thought. To love another while married is deemed highly immoral, but Mary is made to justify her apparent indiscretion and to proclaim her real lover the father of her child.

Quinn's Rialto.

To speak in the parlance of baseball, which furnishes the atmosphere of his latest story, Charles Ray bats an average of .1000 in "The Busher," the new Thomas H. Ince-Paramount picture, which will open an engagement at Quinn's Rialto Theater today.

The story concerns a youth in a small town, who attracts the attention of a league manager. He is promoted into professional baseball, but suffers a noticeable affliction of inflated chest and falls down on the job, just when all his home folks are at the game to see his wonderful pitching.

He takes an oath never again to play, but to save his sweetheart's home, which is jeopardized by her brother's betting, he goes again to the pitcher's slab and wins the season's "rubber" for his own home town. There is a pretty love story and the picture sparkles with humor.

Ray is supported by Colleen Moore, Jack Gilbert, and Otto Hoffman. The story was written by Earle Snell, picturized by R. Cecil Smith, and directed by Jerome Storm.

A Paramount-Flagg comedy, "The Con in Economy," and a Kineogram will also be shown.

Clune's Broadway.

Pauline Frederick in her latest picture, "The Peace of Roaring River," will be the Clune's Broadway attraction, beginning today.

In this production Miss Frederick is seen as a poor young working woman. After a long siege of illness she returns to her boarding-house home and seeks work. Her search for employment is fruitless and in desperation she answer a matrimonial advertisement which seems sincere. A correspondence ensues, which finally culminates in a letter from Madge announcing her departure for Roaring River to meet the man she has been writing to. The girl does not dream her letters have been opened by a jealous little country postmistress, who is piqued because the hero has not responded to her advances, and who, out of her jealous rage, has written to Madge in his name.

Of the many exciting scenes in this picture, the one in which the star is nearly run over by a train will cause all who see the picture to hold their breath, for it looks for a moment as if the daring actress would be instantly killed. In addition to the dramatic value of the picture there are many beautiful mountain scenes and the story is one that might, it is said, happen in every-day life.

Miss Frederick is supported by Thomas Holding, who plays opposite her and Lydia Yeamans Titus, among others.

Augmenting the feature production the sixth episode in the Houdini serial will be shown.

Symphony.

For the first time on the Pacific Coast, Samuel L. Rothapfel's Unit Programme will be presented at the Symphony Theater today. This programme consists of six distinct features, blended, under the supervision of Mr. Rothapfel himself, into a unique entertainment.

Mr. Rothapfel is known throughout the screen world as one of the most noted exhibitors, having directed the destinies of three of the largest picture theaters in the world—the Strand, Rialto and Rivoli of New York City. His novel plan of screen entertainment has added greatly to his fame.

Palace.

Gladys Leslie, the girl with the "million-dollar smile," will be featured in her latest picture, "Too Many Crooks," at the Palace this week. This photoplay, with its mystery, its sparkling humor, and its strong love interest is expected to prove one of the most popular in which the star has appeared.

The story was published in one of the popular magazines recently. In its screen version it was directed by Ralph Ince.

The supporting cast for Miss Leslie, has among the leading players Jean Paige, Huntley Gordon and others of equal note.

Several added features of interest are also on the bill.

Superba.

An emotional photodrama is scheduled to make its bow at the Superba today with three of filmdom's most talented stars in the principal roles—Hedda Nova, the Russian beauty; Thurston Hall, who

ALICE BRADY ON FILM TOUR.

Novel Plan for Starring Picture Luminary.

Features to be Made All Along Line on Tour.

Farrar's Second Big Play Well Under Way.

When Alice Brady arrives in this city next winter to play her latest drama, "Forever After," at the Mason, she will have a busy time of it. For not only will she be appearing at the Mason every night and during two matinees, but all her other working hours will be put in making a picture for Realart.

And this is not the only city in which Miss Brady will be so employed. In fact, her contract with Realart is unique, in that she will make pictures in all the cities she visits which are equipped with studios. As her route includes Boston, Philadelphia, Chicago and several other large cities, and as she will have added to her burdens that of traveling, it will be seen that she was, as a matter of fact, entirely qualified to play the name part in the Hattons' strenuous comedy, "The Indestructible Wife."

As a matter of fact, when Miss Brady returns to New York she expects to have well begun on the eight picture plays which her contract with Realart calls for. During the whole time she is on the road she will be working from 8 o'clock in the morning until 11 o'clock at night. Her husband will travel with her, and it is likely will lift many business details from her shoulders. Miss Brady's entourage will include not only the players and staffs connected with the stage play, but also all the principal people associated with her motion-picture productions, including her director, his assistant, supporting players, cameramen, business and technical staffs.

Miss Brady in "Forever After" will have the effect of personal appearances for the photoplays which are being shown at the same time in the cities where the stage play is scheduled to appear. Patrons of the photoplay, in not only the cities but the surrounding country as well, will flock to see Alice Brady in the flesh on the stage, in addition to being loyal to her as a star of the silent drama.

Geraldine Farrar's second Goldwyn picture this season is now under way with Reginald Barker directing the famous prima donna and her husband, Lou Tellegen.

This week an entire stage at the Goldwyn studios was the scene of a grand Victory ball, supposed to take place in London at the cessation of hostilities. For this affair a number of real ex-officers and service men who have served at the front were engaged to appear in their own uniforms.

Heading the list was Assistant Director Charles Stallings, who was an aviator expert in the American service. He knows the military angle very well. Among the officers who went overseas and who appeared at similar functions abroad were Lieut. Tod Burns of the English Air Corps, who is a champion swimmer as well as a noted flyer; Lieuts. F. J. Janiss and J. V. Murray of the United States service; Lieut. J. K. Pittcairn of the Canadian army, and others. Sergts. J. P. W. MARY JANE COMES HOME.

An Adventure of a Starlet, as Told by Ella, the Extra Girl.

BY GRACE KINGSLEY.

Was you ever a sweet little innocent kid, dearie, that looked up at a big, handsome house with lions on the front lawn and said to yourself, "My gawd, if only I was rich and lived in that house, how happy I'd be"? Sure, you was. That's how it was with Mary Jane Irving, who, I'll tell the world, is one of the cutest kids that ever gummed up a scene chasing in front of the camera. Mostly, dearie, these infant phenomenons knows where my Angora is pastured, but Mary Jane is different. She's got as much sense as the Encyclopedia Britannica. Really, though, we thought for a while that she was going to pine away and die. And we thought Ben Alexander was going to, too, through his only being able to see her once a week, which ain't enough for lovers, even though but seven and nine years, respectively. You see Mary Jane and Ben expect to be married now in a measly little fifteen years or so. But that wasn't the worst of being adopted by a rich family. The worst of it was how quiet little Mary Jane had to be all the time, which you know as well as I do ain't natural to no kid, whether in pictures or not. And if not brought up with the meter on, you can't put it on afterward. Also she says she realizes now that her maw is the real love of her life, Bennie or no Bennie.

Ella, the Extra Girl, was leisurely adjusting the yellowish make-up that she was affecting just then,

OF ART AND ARTISTS.

BY ANTONY ANDERSON.

On the Elgin Marbles.

My spirit is too weak; mortality
Weighs heavily on me like unwilling sleep,
And each imagined pinnacle and steep
Of godlike hardships tells me I must die
Like a sick eagle looking at the sky.
Yet 'tis a gentle luxury to weep,
That I have not the cloudy winds to keep
Fresh for the opening of the morning's eye.
Such dim-conceived glories of the brain
Bring round the heart an indescribable feud;
So do these wonders a most dizzy pain,
That mingles Grecian grandeurs with the rude
Wasting of old Time—with a billowy main,
A sun, a shadow of a magnitude.
—[John Keats.

What is Synchromism?

In the art journals and newspapers of Europe and America much has been written, for and against, in the past few years, concerning the new school of painting called synchromism by its founders, two young Americans, Morgan Russell and S. Macdonald Wright. This new school dates from 1912 and had its inception in Paris. Its first exhibition was held in the same year in Munich at the Neuer Kunst Salon. Shortly afterward, an exhibition was held in Paris at the Bernheim-Jeune galleries, Rue Royale, then in New York at the Carroll galleries, and later in New York at the Anderson gallery in the famous Forum exhibition.

S. Macdonald Wright, who spent his youth in Santa Monica and Los Angeles, is now here, and will probably remain indefinitely. It is his intention to start an art school in Los Angeles in September. Mr. Wright is a brother to Willard Huntington Wright, the well-known writer, critic and satirist. When asked to explain synchromism to the readers of Art and Artists, and to give them some idea of his methods in painting and artistic interpretation, S. Macdonald Wright responded with enthusiasm, for he is splendidly in earnest and full to the brim with his subject:

"Synchromism is the art of color, and its title means simply 'with color,'" said he. "We took this name to differentiate us from other schools, such as cubism, futurism and fauvism, because the principle on which our art is based differed radically from any school that preceded us. We conceived that painting, being the art of color, qualities not expressed by color are not of the art of painting.

"Neither of us had any desire to found a school, but we had a prejudice against being classified by a careless public in a school to which we were antipathetically opposed. As for myself, I have always, even here in Los Angeles, before I went to Paris, had what painters call a 'color vision,' and as I studied, the need for an expression that would have the greater intensity of effect, which color alone can give, became stronger.

"In 1910 I had the advantage of studying the science of color with the greatest color scientist that ever lived, Mr. Tudor-Hart, and it was while we three—Tudor-Hart, Morgan Russell and myself—worked together, that the precise application of color to esthetic expression began to take definite form in my mind. I had never been wholly satisfied with the theory of cubism, although I have always recognized its value; and futurism, the title that the American offhand applies to all modern expressions, left me as cold as the present corpse of the school. I realized that both these efforts were beside the emotional tradition of painting, which began with Delacroix and Turner, and ceased with Cezanne.

"To Cezanne I turned, and I can class myself as one of his artistic children, for Cezanne today is recognized the world over as the father of modern painting. One side of his work, his drawing and close-knit sometimes angular form, has given inspiration to the schools mentioned, but his color harmonies and his studies in color volume, while never wholly achieved, form the basis, if you will, of Synchromism. These color harmonies, limited in number with Cezanne, but of singular justness of vibration, we three made recise in studying the solar spectrum, and it is now as easy for a painter to strike a perfect chord in any color scheme on his palette as for a pianist to do the same thing on the piano.

"Such a discovery, I believe to be of inestimable value to artists, not because it permits them to put down pretty color combinations, but because the organization of the color scheme serves to bring to a greater homogeneity every element in his work. Beside this it gives him a color center about which the development of his color scheme must be a definite equilibration. The use of these scales also gives him a more precise method of expression which, I think, will do away with the stupid idea of 'inspiration' that artists have been talking for years.

"This, however, is a small and unimportant part of my artistic credo. The basis of all art is form, and if color were not capable of expressing form it would be only fit for confetti-makers. But in studying the appearance of the colors of the spectrum as they successively manifest themselves in being brought from darkness into light, I saw that some became saturated long before others, and that when I set these twelve colors down on canvas, in exactly the same sized squares, the ones that had materialized in the least light appeared to be smaller than others. In other words, these were the colors that inherently recede from the eye while those that appeared larger in these squares advanced emotionally toward one. Here was the beginning of the study of color in its manifestations of volumnear extension, and here began the definite foundation of Synchromism.

"Needless to say, painters for centuries have recognized the fact that nature in receding from the eye becomes bluish, and even the primitives utilized this method of making their backgrounds stay back. But the intermediate steps which I have for years felt existed and have unconsciously used in my most successful works, the steps from blue forward, through the entire spectrum, I now definitely placed. This was a repetition of what Russell did with the Impressionists method. They discovered that the sunlight was yellow, and that consequently its absence called up a sensation of its complementary to the eye, which was violet, but they overlooked the fact that between yellow and violet, the two extremes, lies the whole world of color.

"Russell approached form by completing the Impressionists' restricted method of depicting light, while I arrived at the sensation of colored zones that led from light to shadow by treating form with color itself. When we met we saw that light is form and vice versa, but neither of us saw fit to change his artistic approach. These methods are closely akin to the mechanism of human vision, for we are only cognizant of the visible world by means of our color sense. Line has no place in nature. It is merely man's arbitrary method of delimiting volume. Thus drawing, with me, is the delimitation of volume, and is expressed solely through color. Line is felt by this rhythmic delimitation.

"All this savors of a system of painting, and I admit that the first essays I made have all the authority and all the stpdidity of a little academy of my own! Thus an object which stood half-way in space between the foreground and background must of necessity be painted with a color which takes its inherent place halfway between yellow and violet! But I almost immediately noted the plastic shifting of colors when differently surrounded, and with this realization, what had commenced as a static system became a dynamic method. Thus it is seen that color which had before been no more than an ornament of no real significance became the functioning element out of which every quality of the picture grows. In other words, instead of drawing a picture, then putting on the tonal value and lastly letting it 'blossom' into flesh color and so forth, I conceive the picture as a unique gesture, and as I paint I draw and compose, or, as I compose I paint and draw! I sacrifice the delicate pinks of the flesh and the preoccupation of hunting colored vases in second-hand stores to a freedom of color expression. I believe that the modern mind demands a greater stimulus than can be gotten from color photography and its imitators.

"The compositional element in my work, which is the only lasting value of any work, is purely an outcome of my studies of Michaelangelo, Rubens, Greco, Veronese and Giotto, whom I consider, in spite of the strides of modern methods, the greatest figures in art. They felt the absolute necessity of basing their art on the classical philosophical discoveries of the Greeks, who, in turn, learned only from the study of the human body in movement. In spite of the fact that Synchromism has taken the last step in methods, I feel that my own art is in all probability the most classically inspired being done today. My ambition is to create an art that stands halfway between music and architecture, for I consider all art that has preceded me to be relatively oratorical."

Art in Motion Pictures.

The discovery of a new art is certainly one of the big events in the history of civilization. A few years ago the motion picture took rank with the lightest of all light amusements, it was a penny-in-the-slot affair, you peered into a little black box for a minute or two to see the animated record of a prize fight or a brief rough-stuff comedy, and presto! your fun was over.

Now the motion picture offers you entertainment for an hour, sometimes for two hours, and presents a whole novel in photoplay form. But it does much more than entertain you—it adorns the tale with a moral, besides instructing you in a hundred things you never knew before. All these in a series of photographs that are pictorially good or not, their merit depending on the artistic taste of the director and the cameraman.

It must be confessed that it took the producers of motion pictures a long time to realize that a new art had swum within their ken. Many of them don't know it, even now—they think of them as a "business" for making heaps of money, exactly as they did a dozen years ago. They refuse to take them with the seriousness they deserve, the seriousness with which they are already taken by the public and the critics. The result is—bad pictures and more bad pictures, and still more of them, against protests that are growing louder every day.

If the motion picture is anything at all, it is assuredly an art—one of the most potent of all the arts, in truth, and the most far-reaching in its effects.

The other day, while talking with Albert Parker, a man who had just come from New York to direct Clara Kimball Young in her latest photoplay, "The Eyes of Youth," and in other pictures, I discovered that he shared many of my views in regard to the artistic motion picture, and that he was diligently putting his ideas into practice. Mr. Parker is, of course, only one among many directors whose aims are of the highest, and his opinion is therefore well worth recording.

"The problem of the motion picture director," said he, "is ten times more difficult than that of the painter. When all the ingredients of his picture are ready—lighting, composition, balance, rhythm—the painter can lean back at his ease, pick up his brushes, and take all the time he wants. He may work for days on the same arrangement if he likes.

"Not so with us. Our picture changes every second, with the movement and rearrangement of the figures in it. This wouldn't be so bad, if we did not at the same time have to keep in mind dramatic as well as artistic values. To combine the two at every moment is the big problem we must meet all the time while the film is being ground out by the cameraman—and, believe me, it's a problem that sometimes stumps us. Do you wonder? Yet we've got to face it, and we've got to solve it—and we're going to keep on trying!

"Beautiful results—genuine artistic motion pictures from the first film to the last—have already been done, and it is our hope and belief that some day, not too far distant, none other will ever be produced. I am working hard for this very end in 'The Eyes of Youth.' The story lends itself to much symbolism in its pictorial interpretation, and I mean to make each motion-picture symbol as artistically beautiful as I can—a picture that the beholder may carry away with him and remember, and linger over in that remembrance."

Watching his eager, earnest face, the face of a man with an ideal, I felt sure that he would succeed in his high endeavor.

STORIES BY EDNA FERBER.

V. That's Marriage.

Theresa Platt (she that had been Terry Sheehan) watched her husband across the breakfast table with eyes that smouldered. But Orville Platt was quite unaware of any smouldering in progress. He was occupied with his eggs. How could he know that these very eggs were feeding the dull red menace in Terry Platt's eyes?

When Orville Platt ate a soft-boiled egg he concentrated on it. He treated it as a great adventure. This was Orville Platt's method of attack: First, he chipped off the top, gently. Then he bent forward and subjected it to a passionate and relentless scrutiny. Straightening—preparatory to plunging his spoon therein—he flapped his right elbow. It wasn't exactly a flap; it was a cross between a hitch and a flap, and represented external evidence of a mental state.

Terry Platt had learned to look for that flap—they had been married four years—to look for it, and to hate it with a morbid, unreasoning hate. That flap of the elbow was tearing Terry Platt's nerves into raw, bleeding fragments.

Her fingers were clenched tightly under the table, now. She was breathing unevenly. "If he does that again," she told herself, "if he does it again when he opens the second egg, I'll scream. I'll scream. I'll scream! I'll sc—"

He had scooped the first egg into his cup. Now he picked up the second, chipped it, concentrated, straightened, then—up went the elbow and down, with the accustomed flap.

The tortured nerves had snapped. Through the early morning quiet of Wetona, Wis., hurtled the shrill, piercing shriek of Terry Platt's hysteria.

"Terry! For God's sake! What's the matter!"

Terry, wild-eyed, pointed a shaking finger at him. She was laughing now uncontrollably. "Your elbow! Your elbow!"

"Elbow?" He looked down at it, bewildered; then up, fright in his eyes. "What's the matter with it?"

She mopped her eyes. Sobs shook her. "You f-f-flapped it."

"F-f-f—" The bewilderment in Orville Platt's face gave way to anger. "Do you mean to tell me that you screeched like that because my—because I moved my elbow?"

"Yes."

His anger deepened and reddened to fury. He choked. "You—you—" Then bewilderment closed down again like a fog over his countenance. "But why? I can't—"

"Because it — because I can't stand it any longer. Flapping. This is what you do. Like this."

And she did it. Did it with insulting fidelity, being a clever mimic.

"Well, all I can say is you're crazy, yelling like that, for nothing."

"It isn't nothing."

"Isn't, huh? If that isn't nothing, what is?" They were growing incoherent. "What d'you mean, screeching like a maniac? Like a wild woman? The neighbors'll think I've killed you. What d'you mean, anyway!"

"I mean I'm tired of watching it that's what. Sick and tired."

"Y'are, huh? Well, young lady, just let me tell you something—"

He told her. There followed one of those incredible quarrels, as sickening as they are human, which can take place only between two people who love each other; who love each other so well that each knows with cruel certainty the surest way to wound the other; and who stab, and tear, and claw at these vulnerable spots in exact proportion to their love.

From him—"Trouble with you is you haven't got enough to do. That's the trouble with half you women. Just lay around the house, rotting. I'm a fool, slaving on the road to keep a good-for-nothing—"

"I suppose you call sitting around hotel lobbies slaving! I suppose the house runs itself! How about my evenings? Sitting here alone, night after night, when you're on the road."

Finally, "Well, if you don't like it," he snarled, and lifted his chair by the back and slammed it down savagely, "if you don't like it, why don't you get out, h'm? Why don't you get out?"

And from her, her eyes narrowed to two slits, her cheeks scarlet:

"Why, thanks, I guess I will."

Ten minutes later he had flung out of the house to catch the 8:19 for Manitowoc. He marched down the street, his shoulders swinging rhythmically to the weight of the burden he carried—his black leather hand bag and the shiny tan sample case, battle-scarred, both from many encounters with ruthless porters and bus men and bell boys.

One week on the road, one week at home. That was his routine. The wholesale grocery trade liked Platt, and he had for his customers the fondness that a traveling salesman has who is successful in his territory.

Terry, standing in the doorway, always knew that when he reached the corner, just where Schroeder's house threatened to hide him from view, he would stop, drop the sample case, wave his hand just once, pick up the sample case and go on, proceeding backward for a step or two, until Schroeder's house made good its threat.

This morning Orville Platt did not even falter when he reached Schroeder's corner. He marched straight on, looking steadily ahead, the heavy bags swinging from either hand. Even if he had stopped—though she knew he wouldn't—Terry Platt would not have seen him. She remained seated at the disordered breakfast table, a dreadfully still figure, and sinister; a figure of stone and fire; of ice and flame. Over and over in her mind she was milling the things she might have said to him, and had not. She was too angry to cry—a dangerous state in a woman. She was what is known as cold mad, so that her mind was working clearly and with amazing swiftness, and yet as though it were a thing detached.

She sat thus for the better part of an hour, motionless, except for one forefinger, that was, quite unconsciously, tapping out a popular and cheap little air that she had been strumming at the piano the evening before, having bought it downtown that same afternoon. It had struck Orville's fancy and she had played it over and over for him.

Then she laughed a hard, high little laugh, pushed a plate away contemptuously with her hand, and walked into the sitting room. On the piano was the piece of music (Bennie Gottschalk's great song hit, "Hicky Bloo") which she had been playing the night before. She picked it up, tore it straight across once, placed the pieces back to back, and tore it across again. Then she dropped the pieces to the floor.

"You bet I'm going," she said, as though concluding a train of thought. "You just bet I'm going. Right now."

When Mrs. Orville Platt had been Terry Sheehan she had played the piano, afternoons and evenings, in the orchestra of the Bijou Theater, on Cass street, Wetona, Wis. Any one with a name like Terry Sheehan would, perforce, do well anything she might set out to do. There was nothing of genius in Terry, but there was something of fire, and much that was Irish. The combination makes for what is known as imagination in playing. She could play any tune by ear, once heard. She got the spirit of a thing, and transmitted it.

At that time motion pictures had not attained their present virulence. Vaudeville, polite or otherwise, had not yet been crowded out by the ubiquitous film. The Bijou offered entertainment of the cigar-box tramp variety, interspersed with trick bicyclists, soubrettes in slightly soiled pink, trained seals and Family Fours with lumpy legs who tossed each other about and struck Goldbergian attitudes.

Terry's mother died when the girl was 8, and Terry's father had been what is known as easy-going. A good-natured, lovable, shiftless chap in the contracting business. He drove around Wetona in a sagging, one-seated cart, and never made any money because he did honest work, and charged as little for it as men who did not. Ed Sheehan and his daughter were great friends. When he died (she was 19) they say she screamed once, like a banshee, and dropped to the floor.

After they had straightened out the muddle of books in Ed Sheehan's gritty, dusty little office, Terry turned her piano-playing talent to practical account. At 20 she was still playing at the Bijou.

Terry craved excitement. There was little chance to satisfy such craving in Wetona, but she managed to find certain means. The traveling men from the Burke House just across the street used to drop in at the Bijou for an evening's entertainment. They usually sat well toward the front, and Terry's expert playing, and the gloss of her back hair, and her piquant profile as she sometimes looked up toward the stage for a signal from one of the performers, caught their fancy, and held it.

Terry did not accept attentions promiscuously. She was too decent a girl for that. But she found herself, at the end of a year or two, with a rather large acquaintance among these peripatetic gentlemen. You occasionally saw one of them strolling home with her. Sometimes she went driving with one of them of a Sunday afternoon. And she rather enjoyed taking Sunday dinner at the Burke Hotel with a favored friend.

Terry was twenty-two when Orville Platt, making his initial Wisconsin trip for the wholesale grocery house he represented, first beheld Terry's piquant Irish profile, and heard her deft manipulation of the keys. Orville had the fat man's sense of rhythm and love of music. He had a buttery tenor voice, too, of which he was rather proud.

He spent three days in Wetona that first trip and every evening saw him at the Bijou, first row, center. He stayed through two shows each, and before he had been there fifteen minutes Terry was conscious of him through the back of her head. In fact I think that, in all innocence, she rather played up to him. Orville Platt paid no more heed to the stage, and what was occurring thereon, that if it had not been. He sat looking at Terry, and waggling his head in time to the music. Not that Terry was a beauty. But she was one of those immaculately clean types. That look of fragrant cleanliness was her chief charm.

At the end of the last performance on the second night of his visit to the Bijou, Orville waited until the audience had begun to file out. Then he leaned forward over the rail that separated orchestra from audience.

"Could you," he said, his tones dulcet, "could you oblige me with the name of that last piece you played?"

Terry was stacking her music. "George!" she called, to the drum. "Gentleman want to know the name of that last piece." And prepared to leave.

"'My Georgia Crackerjack,'" said the laconic drum.

Orville Platt took a hasty sidestep in the direction of the door toward which Terry was headed. "It's a pretty thing," he said, fervently. "An awful pretty thing. Thanks. It's beautiful."

Terry flung a last insult at him over her shoulder: "Don't thank me for it. I didn't write it."

Orville Platt did not go across the street to the hotel. He wandered up Cass street, and into the 10 o'clock quiet of Main street, and down as far as the park and back. "Pretty as a pink! And play! . . . And good, too. Good."

A fat man in love.

At the end of six months they were married. Terry was surprised into it. Not that she was not fond of him. She was; and grateful to him, as well. For, pretty as she was, no man had ever before asked Terry to be his wife.

Orville's headquarters were Wetona. They rented a comfortable, seven-room house in a middle-class neighborhood. Orville bought her a piano whose tone was so good that to her ear, accustomed to the metallic discords of the Bijou instrument, it sounded out of tune. She played a great deal at first, but unconsciously she missed the sharp spat of applause that used to follow her public performance. She would play a piece, brilliantly, and then her hands would drop to her lap. And the silence of her own sitting room would fall flat on her ears. It was better on the evenings when Orville was home. He sang, in his throaty, fat man's tenor, to Terry's expert accompaniment.

But after the first year she became accustomed to what she termed private life. She joined an afternoon sewing club, and was active in the ladies' branch of the U.C.T. She developed a knack at cooking, too, and Orville, after a week or ten days of hotel fare in small Wisconsin towns would come home to sea-foam biscuits and real soup, and honest pies and cake. Sometimes, in the midst of an appetizing meal he would lay down his knife and fork and lean back in his chair, and regard the cool and unruffled Terry with a sort of reverence in his eyes.

One year; two; three; four. Routine. A little boredom. Some impatience. She began to find fault with the very things she had liked in him: his super-neatness; his fondness for dashing suit patterns; his throaty tenor; his worship of her. And the flap. Oh, above all, that flap! That little, innocent, meaningless mannerism that made her tremble with nervousness. She hated it so that she could not trust herself to speak of it to him. That was the trouble. Had she spoken of it, laughingly or in earnest, before it became an obsession with her, that hideous breakfast quarrel, with its taunts and revilings, and open hate, might never have come to pass.

Orville, you may remember, left at 8:19 o'clock. The 11:23 bore Terry Chicagoward. She had left the house as it was—beds unmade, rooms unswept, breakfast table uncleared. She intended never to come back.

In her pocketbook she had a tidy sum saved out of the housekeeping money. She was naturally thrifty, and Orville had never been niggardly. At noon she went into the dining car and ordered a flaunting little repast of chicken salad and asparagus, and Neapolitan ice cream. The men in the dining car eyed her speculatively and with appreciation. Then their glance dropped to the third finger of her left hand, and wandered away.

It was almost 5 o'clock when she reached Chicago. She felt no uncertainty or bewilderment. She had been in Chicago three or four times since her marriage. She went to a downtown hotel. When she had tidied herself she went out. The things she did were the childish, aimless things that one does who finds herself in possession of sudden liberty. She walked up State street, and stared in the windows; came back, turned into Madison, passed a bright little shop in the window of which taffy—white and gold—was wound endlessly and fascinatingly about a double-jointed machine. She went in and bought a sackful, and wandered on down the street, munching. She had supper at one of those white-tiled sarcophagi that emblazon Chicago's downtown side streets. After her supper she went to a picture show.

The next morning Terry found a fairly-comfortable room, more within her means, in the North Side in the boarding-house district. She unpacked and hung up her clothes and drifted downtown again, idly. It was noon when she came to the corner of State and Madison streets.

Terry drifted on down the west side of State street, with the hurrying crowd. State and Monroe. A sound came to Terry's ears. A sound familiar, beloved. She looked up, toward the sound. A great second-story window opened to the street. In it a girl at a piano, and a man, red-faced, singing through a mega-

The Lovely Brand New Autumn Fashions

—Are Here Earlier Than Usual

—And They Are Very Welcome

—Because they give us so much to look forward to. And because we will have so much more time to "Come in and look around" and plan and anticipate.

—They are all very lovely and selected with the one thought of pleasing Los Angeles women.

—First showings Monday.

The New Fall Suits are most important because many of us will want them immediately to travel in. All of them have straight lines with coats quite a bit longer than they have been. In some instances even to forty inches.

—Most all the collars are standing, but with an eye to California climate, our buyers purchased only those which are worn low.

—Some of the suits are fur trimmed, and they come in the following materials: Tinseltone, Silvertone, Tricotine, Poiret twill, Cordovan-duvetyne, serge and Duvet de Laine. The trimmings: braid, rope girdles and Nutria Seal, Australian Opossum and Wolf fur.

The New Fall Dresses have so many new things to show it is hard to know where to begin to tell about them.

—In street frocks the most popular materials are duvetynes, velours, tricotines, Oxfords and Poiret Twills. Fur collars are found on many. And nearly all have high cut collars. Two new colors are dragonfly blue and mahogany, while navy, brown, taupe and black are back again.

—In afternoon gowns, one finds both short and long sleeves, ribbon broad, ostrich trimmings, crystal beads and such materials as kitten's ear crepe, charmeuse, crepe Elizabeth and satin.

—In evening frocks there is much variety, brocades, beads, fish nets and chiffon. They must really be seen to be appreciated.

The New Fall Coats The men who weave fine fabrics had time to think during the war. And they have developed more exquisite materials than have ever before been seen.

—Frost-glow, Verona, Prisma, Fortuna, Chamelian cord, Tinsel-tone are new materials. Such well proven fabrics as Velour de Laine, Silvertone, Bolivia, Silvertip Bolivia and Evora are also used.

—The lines are straight on most of the coats, while some are all 'round belted, or belted in front. The sleeves are either set-in or raglan. And many are fur trimmed.

—The barrel coat is the new sensation. It is to be found in the New York Store collections, as is every good style so far produced.

BY VIRGINIA WOODS.

Blending magnificence with simplicity, the grand ball for Secretary of the Navy Daniels, Mrs. Daniels, Admiral Hugh Rodman and the officers of the Pacific fleet, which is to be given on Monday night, August 11, bids fair to become an historical event in Los Angeles.

Five thousand invitations are to be issued, probably tomorrow. The delay in sending these out was caused by the necessity for waiting for definite information as to whether President and Mrs. Wilson would be here.

The ball will be given at Shrine Auditorium, which is being transformed into a palace of wonder. Scenic artists from the Brunton studios are temporarily transforming the place so that it will look like a hall of marble.

Dancing will be on the auditorium floor, while the receiving party will stand on the stage, which will be made into a fairyland.

How I Found The Safe Way To Give My Baby Milk

I AM the happiest woman alive. My baby is on the road to health.

Only a mother can know what that means!

Our doctor told me that the safest way to give him milk was to give him Nestlé's Milk Food which is made out of pure milk modified with just the right amount of sugar and cereal.

He explained to me that making the milk into a fluffy powder breaks up those hard-to-digest curds, so that when you add water and boil just a minute, you have the nearest thing in the world to mother's milk—clean, safe, and almost sure to agree with a baby's delicate stomach.

That is why I am the happiest woman alive—for my baby is well.

I know that if your baby has trouble with his food, the Nestlé Company will be glad to help you. They will send you free, as they sent me, a big Mother's Book on how to take care of your baby and enough Nestlé's Food for 12 feedings. All you have to do is to fill out and send the coupon. Then you can be, with me, the happiest woman in the world—because your baby is well.

Nestlé's is pure Milk in powder form that is already modified and does not require the further addition of milk. Always pure and safe, always uniform, and free from the dangers of home modification, Nestlé's has stood the test of three generations and has today the largest sale of any baby food in the world.

FREE! Enough Nestlé's for 12 feedings. Send the coupon!

Your Next Week's Washing

Then, you will see for yourself what a source of comfort and economy a really efficient washer can be; for, while there are a number of them made to look like the EDEN, we can show you the vital differences in one washing. You will be surprised at the EDEN'S simplicity—and still more surprised at the amount and kind of work it turns out. The average family wash is on the line by 9:30 or 10 o'clock and all the pieces—fine, heavy or extra dirty—are washed cleaner than any human hands could possibly get them.

While you are wringing out one batch of clean pieces, the EDEN goes right along washing the next soiled batch.

The EDEN has exclusive features that you will find in no other washing machine. For instance, the cylinder always stops with its doors at the top. You don't have to tug it into position when you want to take the clothes out. The motor can't be burned out because of over-taxing—it automatically disconnects, if the washer or wringer is overloaded.

OUR FREE TRIAL OFFER
Places the EDEN or any other machine in your home so that you may try it yourself, by doing a week's washing before you purchase. This costs you nothing, and does not oblige you in the least. You can have us place any machine in your home on FREE TRIAL with the understanding that we will gladly remove the machine should decide not to buy—no catches or strings are attached to this offer.

Sometimes You See a Bathing Suit

—that makes the girl or man wearing it look just about the way you wish you could look in the water or on the beach.

You probably overlook the fact that it isn't so much how she wears 'em—it's about 90% WHAT she wears.

If you ask her the name of the maker—you will find in nine cases out of ten that it's a JANTZEN—rib-stitch—the extensive Jantzen idea—there's a label in every garment.

Jantzens have grown in popularity so fast, that right now we can't make enough of them. So, accept our apology if your dealer's stock is depleted.

GENUINE JANTZEN

SOCIETY.

Lowell, and Warren Hamilton, Jester, Andrew and Bill Carroll.

Several special affairs were given recently complimenting Miss Eunice [illegible]h of Spokane, Wash., while visiting her aunt, Mrs. C. S. Cooper, and her cousin, Mrs. A. P. Humphrey of 1110 Bush street.

A wedding of interest to Santa [illegible] people occurred at Riverside on [illegible]day when Mrs. Susy Hewitt Bai[illegible] daughter of the late Mr. and [illegible] R. E. Mewitt, became the bride of Forest E. Deuel of Los Angeles. They will reside at Hollywood.

Mrs. E. B. Covington was hostess on Sunday at dinner for her sister, Mrs. Marcus Phillips of Kingsville, Texas, who is here for the summer. Among the guests were Mrs. J. M. [illegible] and Mrs. Elizabth Shipley.

A joyous family reunion marked the visit here of Prof. James S. Sweet, founder and president of the Santa Rosa Business College, and Prof. Clyde R. Sweet, principal of the school, and their wives, relatives of R. J. and L. A. Sweet, Mrs. Leslie B. Stewart, J. S. Bryan, Lu[illegible] Sweet, Jr., and Mrs. Abbie Mc[illegible] of Santa Ana. Among those present at the family get-together were Mr. and Mrs. Beardsley, Mrs. [illegible] Fleener, Mrs. Whaley, Mr. and Mrs. William Brackenberry of [illegible] Beach, and Mr. and Mrs. Hi[illegible] Beebe, and Mr. and Mrs. Ed Graham and daughter of Anaheim.

An interesting wedding was that solemnized at Orange recently, when Miss Caroline Bowen, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. W. Bowen of Orange, became the bride of W. A. [illegible] Thompson of Los Angeles, son of Mrs. J. P. Thompson of East [illegible] street.

GRAHAM. Mrs. George Johnson and sons, Walter, Robert and Clarence, of Hampshire avenue, spent last week at Ocean Park.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Caslander and family of Shorb avenue and Mr. and Mrs. Clinton Johnson and daughter of Los Angeles, who spent a ten-day outing in Sequoia Park, have returned to their homes.

Mrs. R. L. Moore and daughters, Lorena and Irene, of Stockton, are house guests in the new home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Zinn, Manchester avenue. They will be here ten days.

WATTS. Mr. and Mrs. Louis Binder returned from a week's outing spent in San Diego, the guests of their sister and family, Mr. and Mrs. James Hosking, who with their daughter, Miss Margaret Hosking, returned with them to make their home here. Temporarily they are located in their sister's home, 729 Hickory street.

Making the third trip to California from Glouchester, Mass., Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Limburg and small daughter, Elsie, arrived Sunday. They are stopping in the home of their parents, Mr. and Mrs. Albert Pettee on Emily street, until they become permanently located.

Pink Oleanders were employed decoratively Monday, when Mr. and Mrs. W. Rankin Good entertained with a dinner of eight covers as a compliment to their mother, Mrs. Martha Good of Long Beach, and her house guests, Miss Isabelle Levi and Mrs. Q. Gashawiler of Cincinnati.

Twenty-four dollars was cleared at the social affair given by the Watts Parent-Teachers' Association Tuesday as a benefit to the South Los Angeles P.-T.-A. Graham P.-T.-A. will entertain with a benefit next Saturday evening and it, too, will be an out-of-door affair in the grounds of school building.

After a two weeks' outing, motoring, camping, and sightseeing in Yosemite, three automobile parties returned home last Sunday, reporting a delightful time. Included in the party were Mr. and Mrs. Doler Fields and daughter, Vanessa, of 309 Rudolph avenue; Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Bassett of Los Angeles and Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Shaw of Covina.

Mrs. Louise Munds was hostess Tuesday at dinner, complimentary to her house guest and daughter, Mrs. C. L. Miller of Phoenix, Ariz., who arrived Friday, with her daughter, Flora Miller, at her home, 804 Rudolph avenue. Other guests included Mrs. Rachel Miller and granddaughters, Misses Rachel and Esta Redden of Prescott, Ariz., who are stopping in Long Beach for the summer; Mr. and Mrs. Doler Fields and daughter, Vanessa, were evening guests.

ATASCADERO. Mrs. Sadie Park Gersham of Cottonwood Falls, Kan., who has been admitted to the bar, and who is ex-president of the Kansas Equal Suffrage Association, is at Long Beach, but is expected here early in August. She is an old-time friend and co-worker of our own Beth Dodge Carson, and both have a nation-wide reputation for their work in the cause of temperance and suffrage.

Word has been received from Mrs. Kate Filley Wooden that she will soon return to her home in the Flower Seed Valley. Mrs. Filley has many warm friends who will welcome her return after a two years' absence.

The subjects were, "Missions," Miss Lucia Fanton; "Miners and Forty-niners," Mr. Gustin Estergren; "Agriculture," Mr. Ashton Love; "Industries," Mrs. Hazel Smith; "Art," Mrs. Perle Zimmerman; "Movies," Miss Daphney Fortney. One of the most interesting features of the club work is the fifteen minutes of parlimentary drill which precedes the papers and discussions, and no end of merriment is caused by the intricacies of "amendments" and "amendments to," especially when cereal for breakfast is the much amended article.

Mrs. Margarit Travis and son Earl, with her mother, Mrs. Effie Willey, returned on Tuesday from a two weeks' outing at the Von Brackel cottage at Morro.

Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Worthy of Santa Ana were week-end guests of Mr. and Mrs. L. L. King Cotton has made arrangements with the Syd Chaplin Aircraft Corporation to deliver all purchases of $5.00 or more to Catalina by Aeroplane

—This is the first time that any western store has made use of the aeroplane for delivery purposes!—

—It is the first time any store anywhere has ever made delivery of merchandise overseas by aeroplane—

—We know that the hundreds of our customers who are summering in Avalon will be glad to know of this novel service and the great saving of time that it means—

—For the present, only paid and charge purchases will be sent by aeroplane—C.O.D. purchases will continue to go by boat—

—Mail orders will be promptly filled.

"I call $3.29 a mighty low price for such new Canteen Vanities as these" Says King Cotton —And you'll agree with him, too!

—They come in red, black and mottled effect!

—With fancy colored linings and fitted with mirrors and coin purses.

—Main Floor—Jacoby's—

And again—King Cotton prices Wool Jersey at $2.95

—And to "even up the score" we have again given this WOOL JERSEY the most prominent headline—

—Now to the jersey and its price!

—54-in. and 56-in. all-wool jersey at the lowest price we have seen quoted in ages—

—$2.95 yard!—Isn't it wonderful?

—And it is almost impossible to get it to sell at full regular price—

—There are hundreds of yards of it in almost every shade that you could wish for——Such a price as this is not very apt to leave any for tardy buyers!—

—2nd Floor—Jacoby's

King Cotton bought 100 of the most wonderful BLOUSES we have ever seen at $3.98

—Georgettes—

—Some beaded!

—And some embroidered!

—They're so very excellent at this price that we don't expect to see a single one of them left by store closing time.

—We earnestly advise women to buy them by threes and fours, for it will be a long day before such blouses are buyable at such a price again!

3rd Floor—Jacoby's

Scores of gingham DRESSES for girls of 2 to 8 years will be offered at $1.00

—Dresses that have been much more!

—Short lines—and odd lots—but they are the kind of dresses that mothers will be very glad to buy at this low price—

—No phone orders—No C. O. D.'s—No exchanges —

—4th Floor—Jacoby's.

King Cotton bought 390 sample NECKLACES and SOUTOIRS to sell at $1.98

—They're all imported affairs that would sell in the ordinary way at two and even three times this King Cotton price!

—There are both plain and pendant styles set with clever imitations of precious stones—

—You'll want two or more of them at $1.98.

—Main Floor—Jacoby's.

We've given King Cotton his way in the section of COTTON FROCKS and he has set some ridiculous prices

$7.98 $9.98 $12.98

—Voiles, organdies and ginghams in a remarkably broad range of colors, patterns and styles.

—We think they'll cause a veritable sensation Monday at these prices—

—SILK and WOOL SUITS at $21.00 are about HALF.

3rd floor—Jacoby's.

Just to show his authority King Cotton has priced 36-in. CHARMEUSE at $2.19

—It's every thread silk—

—Probably the very reason why King Cotton became so jealous and set the price so much under worth—

—Early buyers will find a good color range!

36-in. Black Satin Duchess at $2.95

—An exceptionally heavy silk—one that would cost close to $2.95 today—

—2nd Floor—Jacoby's

1200 pairs of a famous make of FIBER silk STOCKINGS to go at 69c

—King Cotton promised the maker that we wouldn't mention his name, so we'll have to leave it to your imagination—

—But the stockings are here—and when you see them and appreciate their extraordinariness you won't care whether they came from Smith or Jones—

—There are blacks, whites and colors in a full range of sizes—

—No phone orders—No C.O.D.'s—No exchanges.

—Main Floor—Jacoby's

King Cotton was in a merry mood when he priced these women's sample UNION SUITS at 69c

—They're all of summer weight lisle and cotton—made low neck, sleeveless and with tight or lace trimmed knees—

—No phone orders—No C. O. D.'s.

350 Boys' Sample Athletic Union Suits to go at 59c

—Main Floor—Jacoby's

Men are going to be mighty glad that King Cotton had his way in pricing these SAMPLE SHIRTS at $3.98

—Nearly everyone connected with the Men's Furnishing department insisted that the price should be more—

—But King Cotton is running things his own way—and so $3.98 is the price in spite of the fact that these shirts are worth just about double—

—They're high-grade shirts of fiber and woven madras in rich colorings and patterns!—All sizes, 14 to 17½—

—We would advise men to buy a full year's supply.

—Main Floor—Jacoby's

—2nd Floor—Jacoby's

64 exquisite Night Gowns and 37 Envelope Chemise have been reduced to $2.29

—Bandeaux, too, at this price, which is a full third under regular—Both pinks and whites in sizes 36, 38 and 40.

—Main Floor—Balcony—Jacoby's

UNMENTIONABLES AND OTHERS.

Some Comment on Mrs. Rinehart, Upton Sinclair, George Sylvester Viereck and Alfred Noyes.

"Dangerous Days."

This is going to be a biased, prejudiced and utterly unfair review of the latest novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart, largely because I have an inextirpable grudge against the author. As usual when a fellow loses his head over a woman he gets into trouble. I lost mine over Mrs. Rinehart when she wrote "The Street of Seven Stars"; but she was fickle. It was not a really great book, but it had some of the finest sentiment, feeling and scenes that current fiction was showing or did show. I scattered a lot of rosebuds at her feet, and felt the gift of prophecy upon me. Mrs. Rinehart has never returned within yelling distance of "The Street of Seven Stars." I won't say she has written trash, though I may think it. She worked long and hard for her foothold. There is fighting blood in her. Her apprenticeship was long and she came up through detective fiction, thrillers, blood-curdlers, learning the tricks of the trade doing the laborious work that is back of almost every first-class artist. So casting her horoscope from the Seven Stars, I prophesied.

Women are better fighters than winners, anyway. Most of them are giddy winners. And Mrs. Rinehart has won. She is probably the highest-price woman writer in the world, now that Elinor Glyn and Marie Corelli are sailing down the Styx. Elinor Porter's books and Gene Stratton Porter's books may go into more editions, but nobody pays any of them for serial rights as much as is paid to Mrs. Rinehart. She has worked hard enough to be entitled to the money. Harold Bell Wright is a great good for literature; it isn't that people buy his books instead of those of good writers, but that he gives people who wouldn't buy books at all an impetus toward the habit. In something of the same way Mrs. Rinehart is doing wonderful work. She is accustoming magazine editors to higher prices. Somebody who said he knew told me that the Pictorial Review Company paid more for "Dangerous Days" than was ever paid to a woman before for a serial. That may not be true; probably it isn't—but the moral is a good one anyway.

It is very well known by psychologists—and reviewers—that the mass of the people shy from anything original and distinctive. Such things bewilder them. They like familiar things. How "The Education of Henry Adams" ever got into the best-sellers is a mystery, a glorious mystery with something of the glamour of the miraculous about it. The public wants sentiment—lots of it. Outside of Ibanez, the public repudiates the author that wants to make it think. It has repudiated all of Mr. Wells's thoughtful books, accepting Mr. Britling and shying from "The Research Magnificent." It was axiomatic until recently that popular books had something wrong with them; but Rupert Hughes and Ibanez have much in common, while Booth Tarkington and Mrs. Rinehart do not dare anything that might be surprising.

Let it be understood that Mrs. Rinehart does not write "piffle" and "bunk." But what she writes in "Dangerous Days" is commonplace, with a certain journalistic facility and vividity. The characters are the commonplaces of fiction, the usual, conventional characters, elaborated with skill. Mrs. Rinehart is not insincere. I don't believe that any successful writer is insincere. I do not believe that a writer can make a success, a financial success, by writing for money alone; but what he can do is to hoodwink himself, actually delude himself into feeling that the popular work is necessarily good work because it is popular, that being a round robin of sophistication that has played havoc with idealists from the days of stone hatchets.

"Dangerous Days" does not, I think, live up to the idea that gives it such a striking title. The idea—a good idea—deals somewhat with the second blooming of males; and the dangerous days that every wife must weather are the years between 45 and 55. But it isn't the biological, or psychological, or whatever ological would cover the phase, that the author deals with. The ending is what is designed to make one feel is unhappy—a sort of Rupert of Hentzau ending, with a melancholy sadness somewhat too deliberately acquired. The theme is war and its reaction on a rather indifferent group of characters, with Germans—or at least one—true to the fictional type; and a muddling of lives that gives several dramatic "kicks." It is an interesting but unimportant book. I say interesting, though it bored me; but it will not bore those who, unlike a reviewer, are not filled to the point of saturation with novels very much like it.

The Unmentionables.

Upton Sinclair has written a book which he says will be ignored by the newspapers. George Sylvester Viereck has also written one which he calls a "secret" between the reader and himself. "This book, dear reader, will be a delightful secret between us. It will not be reviewed in the American press. It will not even be mentioned," says Mr. Viereck by way of opening his book on "Roosevelt." "It is a fact," says Mr. Sinclair, "that when American novelists are discussed, my name is systematically omitted."

The pride of martyrdom seems to sit on the brows of both these young men, both of whom are gifted, and not unconscious of the importance they would be to the world if taken at their own valuation of themselves. But at present their names are anathema. Mr. Sinclair has been anathema for a long, long time. He should be pretty well accustomed to it by this time. Mr. Viereck's experience in unpopularity is more recent; he was a petted boy for many years, and sloppily praised by a lot of newspaper reviewers who saw that a few discriminating critics valued Mr. Viereck's verse and prose. Mr. Viereck was recently expelled from the Authors' League of America and from the Poetry Society. His publishers dumped back upon him the plates of his many books, "the very books," he says, "to which they owe their original prestige."

Upton Sinclair as a Socialist, and now as a Bolshevik—I suppose he is Bolshevik; everybody is these days who has views that ought to be suppressed—has found himself unpopular with a large class of people. He has written a lot of worthless books, a few of them monstrosities of bad form; and he has written some fine ones. "King Coal," for instance, was a fine novel of superior literary form. Incidentally there is probably no other American novelist, living or otherwise, who can handle masses and a perfect wilderness of characters with the dexterity of Upton Sinclair. That in itself is a distinction. His "Jungle" made him famous, but his quixotism has kept him among the "unmentionables." He has theories and ideas that have no place in artistic discussion or estimation; yet he feels injured and abused because he is largely ignored as an artist. I am sure that "King Coal," though a crusading book, was widely and about as near favorably reviewed as good books are ever reviewed. There Mr. Sinclair had an inspiration and put the bulk of his propaganda into an appendix.

Now we have a new novel, "Jimmie Higgins" (Boni & Liveright.) It would not be at all surprising if it went unmentioned by the press—except to be abused. It is a clever and accomplished effort to create discontent. Mr. Sinclair, I believe, got himself into hot water with his fellow Socialists by coming out in favor of the war. "Jimmie Higgins" ought to get him back into their good graces; it is one of the most dangerous books to put into the hands of an uneducated man that I know of—and the "reds" of the country ought to know it, too. It is being widely distributed. Personally, I loathe censorship and suppression; but there is some basis of good common sense in the tacit theory of our government that if a man is sufficiently educated to read Latin, Petronius will not hurt him. And "Jimmie Higgins" will not sweep from his feet any person who has learned judicial poise; though a reluctant honesty requires the admission that it is, in spite of a certain rambling tedium, and a great deal that is not (wholly apart from politics) artistic, a very powerful and gripping story.

It is regrettable that Mr. Sinclair did not follow the excellent precedent of "King Coal" and fill an appendix with affidavits. If he could authenticate the charges made fictionally of vicious Prussianism in the American army, he would create a sensation beside which "The Jungle" would be as the pop of a cork to a giant cracker. Mr. Sinclair, like most fanatical enthusiasts—and ironically enough all that is of value to subsequent generations is accomplished by fanatics, zealots and the like; though only a fraction of the fanatics accomplish anything—will not look at the other side of questions with even a philosophical calm. For instance, he recently wrote a very "wicked" book called "The Profits of Religion"—also a dangerous book for stupid people and for the hungrily uneducated, who are by no means stupid. He told only one side of the question, and left unhonored, for instance, certain English preachers who as boldly as he is now, and with greater punishment, fought for ideals identical with his own. So it is that Upton Sinclair, making his appeal directly to prejudiced classes if not castes, feels very much mistreated in suffering the prejudices of other classes and the one that tries to keep itself high caste, in a veritable Brahmical pose. He doesn't like to be burned with the same sort of fire he uses on the devil; but the devil seems to have some doubts as to his own identity and fights Mr. Sinclair under the delusion—presumably—that his feet are cloven.

George Sylvester Viereck is a more complicated "unmentionable" unless one wishes to dispose of him definitely as a Hun. Mr. Viereck complains—justly—that the American critics who praised his verse in peace times now try to make out that he never was a poet. He quotes pages of favorable criticism and has many of the Vigilantes on the hip. Personally I never cared much about his verse. I never thought he was a figure of promise or accomplishment in literature, though his vogue was enormous. But I think it was excessively stupid of the Authors' League and the Poetry Society to throw him out.

George Sylvester Viereck is unendurable when he tries to pretend that his pacifistic work during the late war was designed to benefit America rather than Germany. If he had the good sense with which he somehow manages to credit himself he would know how to accept the hot judgment of patriotism without hoping for sympathy at this time by putting on a crown of thorns of his own weaving. As George Bernard Shaw wrote him he "picked a loser," and in war the losers must accept the dregs of contempt and abuse and expect to be told that he deserves all he got and more.

As such things go, Viereck made a fight that the pro-Germans no doubt pronounced "good." He declares that British propagandists beat him at his own game, but says they had more money. It wasn't the money. It was because English publicists know how to write plausibly, know how to appeal without once ruffling the fur. Mr. Viereck seemed to write to please only pro-Germans, not to impress neutrals, not to influence his antagonists. He boasts that his vocabulary will prevent him from suffering the excommunication of a Dreiser in sex stuff; but his political vocabulary was singularly limited and antagonistically aggressive.

The present book, ostensibly a "psycho-analytic study of Theodore Roosevelt" (The Jackson Press,) includes an impudent "apologia pro vita sua"—one entirely unimpressive except for its impudence and confessed egotism. The purpose of the book is to to besmear the reputation of Roosevelt with pro-Germanism; and undertakes to show that Roosevelt admired the Kaiser and cultivated the transplantation of Kultur to America. A number of letters from Viereck to Roosevelt and answers are printed. They are interesting, but scarcely important. Many people admired the Germans before 1914, and were gulled—as much as German propagandists wished—by Kultur. Roosevelt was no saint, but he had much in common with Saint Paul; and thoughtful people can believe all the essential evidence that the book offers without altering in the least a high opinion of Theodore Roosevelt.

"The New Morning."

I would make a guess that the English critics do not exhaust their ingenuity in saying favorable things about Alfred Noyes's new book of poems, "The New Morning" (Frederick A. Stokes Company.) He says so many pleasing things about America that the English prosodists will probably find many flaws with his technique.

Mr. Noyes has not forgotten the Revolutionary War. He remembers it, approves of it.

> "There's only one great ghost I know > could make that 'larum ring.
> It's the captain that we knew
> In the ancient buff and blue,
> It's our Englishman, George Washington, who fought the German king!"

And there you are. Our gallant forefathers that have furnished Fourth of July orations for the last hundred and fifty years whipped the English and got independence, and now it is being claimed as an English victory. In other words, as Mr. Hohenzollern might be quoted as saying, you can't lick the English. But I doubt if English critics will approve of the book. Mr. Noyes has paid us some large and splendid tributes. I hope that we deserve them.

As a poet Alfred Noyes is an artful, accomplished writer. He knows poetic values, and how to obtain them. He is foremost of lyrical writers; and though it is the first of his books that Americans are supposed to admire the most, since it is highly complimentary, the other parts will appeal more strongly to poetry lovers.

I think "The Lord of Misrule" is a lyric of extreme excellence—probably the best that Mr. Noyes has written. In the present volume there are others worthy of that authorship, "The Matin-Song of Friar Tuck" among them:

> "If earthly dreams be touched with gleams
> Of Paradisal air,
> Some wings, perchance, of earth may glance
> Around our slumbers there;
> Some breaths of May might drift our way
> With scents of leaf and loam,
> Some whistling bird at dawn be heard
> From those old woods at home.
> Hark! That's the thrush
> With speckled breast
> From yon white bush
> Chanting his best,
> Te Deum; Te Deum laudamus!"

"A New Madrigal to an Old Melody," "Dead Man's Morrice," and the ballad-like "The Chimney-Sweeps of Cheltenham" are very pleasing.

The volume also includes "Songs of the Trawlers and Sea Poems," with "Kilmeny" and the stirring "The Vindictive"—

> "The wild white swords of the searchlights blinded and stabbed them,
> The sarp black shadows fought in fantastic wars.
> Black waves leaped whitening.
> Red decks were washed with lightning."

"The New Morning" shows Mr. Noyes in more moods than perhaps any other single volume; though all of his books are filled with a variety of verse schemes. He is one of the most dexterous of poets and has succeeded distinguishedly in every form possible excepting the epic, which he has also tried.

A strong poem is "The Avenue of the Allies," commemorative of America's entrance; which contains such ringing measure as:

> "Know you the meaning of all they are doing?
> Know you the light that their soul is pursuing?
> Know you the might of the world they are making,
> This nation of nations whose heart is awaking?
> What is this mingling of peoples and races?
> Look at the wonder and joy in their faces!
> Look how the folds of the union are spreading!
> Look, for the nations are come at their wedding.
> How shall the folk of our tongue be afraid of it?
> England was born of it. England was made of it.
> Made of this welding of tribes into one,
> This marriage of pilgrims that followed the sun!" . . .

BARBELLION.

The question of the authorship of "The Journal of a Disappointed Man," just published by George H. Doran Company, promises to be a lively one. English opinions differ violently on the subject. Arnold Bennett writes in the New Statesman: "In the domain of letters one of the most disconcerting phenomena which I have recently encountered is this: Two men, unconnected and strangers to each other, both highly experienced in the world and in literature, have come to me and asserted that in their opinion the whole of 'The Journal of a Disappointed Man,' which is emphatically the book of the day, and for which Mr. H. G. Wells has furnished a preface, was written by Mr. Wells himself.

"Mr. Wells has aforetime chosen to hide his identity as an author, and it would be excusable if the undiscriminating jumped to the conclusion that any book prefaced by Mr. Wells was written by Mr. Wells. But that experts should, for one moment, imagine Mr. Wells to be the author of 'The Journal of a Disappointed Man' is to me really extraordinary. Mr. Wells could no more have written the book than its author could have written 'Tony-Bungay.' A powerful and original individuality is revealed everywhere in the work, and neither Mr. Wells nor anybody else could have faked the document. The document, which admittedly has been revised by the author himself, is beyond all question authentic."

Mr. Bennett goes on to suggest that "anyhow, this book is a book," but suggests that the author is not dead. On that point Mr. Wells's letter to the Westminster Gazette seems proof positive. He says he did not write the book. "I wish I was a quarter as clever as that. Barbellion is, of course, a pen name, if only on account of the wife and other people who figure so vividly in the diary; the date of his death also is incorrectly given. But that is the only camouflage about this moving and remarkable book. It is a genuine diary." And Mr. Wells adds that he has seen a bale of Barbellion's original articles in various scientific periodicals.

The New York Times suggests that more than one bit of internal evidence is contained in the Journal, which, if followed, might easily establish the book's position, either as an authentic diary or as a work of fiction. The Times also says significantly: "Mr. Wells has given to the volume an interesting 'introduction'; a kindness he also performed, it may be remembered, for a certain book called 'Boon.'"

Rupert Hughes

Mrs. Mary Roberts Rinehart.

The Two Highest-Paid Writers in the World?

FACE TO FACE WITH RUPERT HUGHES.

I.

Rupert Hughes is uneasy about having things put into his mouth that he did not say. He claims that he is indiscreet enough without the collaboration of reporters. But Mr. Hughes is unduly modest.

In the late war he acquired the title of major, having been a captain on the Mexican border. But he has dropped the title—he is an author, not a politician. So Mr., not Major, Hughes is in Los Angeles as one of the members of the Eminent Authors' League to supervise the picturization of his latest book, "The Cup of Fury." The other members of the Eminent Authors' League are Gertrude Atherton, Mary Roberts Rinehart, Leroy Scott, Basil King, Gouverneur Morris and Rex Beach. The purpose of the league is to get the members' stories into motion pictures with a semblance of fidelity. The movement, I believe, was inspired by Rex Beach and encouraged by Samuel Goldwyn.

Just why those seven people, accustomed to the study and use of words with precision, should accept the word "Eminent" must be left to more penetrating psychologists than myself.

Mr. Hughes is the first of the "Eminent" ones to do a story under the new arrangement. And though he is not actually doing his own continuity, with a pair of alert eyes he is staring over the shoulders of the continuity writers.

"I have never understood," said Mr. Hughes, "why producers have bought the picture rights to novels. In my own experience I know that about all that has been used in most stories has been the title and the same cast of characters. Other writers have told me the same."

II.

Among numerous reasons why I have liked Rupert Hughes is the fact that he keeps his temper. Authors, as I have found them, are a kind of a cross between hothouse plants and peevish felines—a crude, harsh simile perhaps, but the proverbial prima donna is a quiet, lethargic fat woman compared to the temperamental explosiveness of a criticised author. From the viewpoint of the reviewer, Mr. Hughes stands the gaff.

As another of his distinctions it may be said that he is one of the few authors that look reasonably like their photographs. He is tall enough to have been one of Uncle Sam's officers, but one wouldn't call him lanky. I judge that he is in the middle forties. He is now smooth shaven, though I have seen photographs of him with a spiked mustache—but not upturned. Anyway, he looks enough like his photographs to have been picked out of a hotel lobby when he had his face buried in a paper. His eyes are brown and wrinkled at the corners—the wrinkles being reminders of the time when he was a successful humorist before developing into one of the few tragic novelists.

He is an easy man to meet, an easy man to like—but a hard man to interview, though he will tell one anything that is innocuous and unsensational in print. I fancy his unpleasant dreams have reporters in them. He talks pretty much as he writes, leisurely, pausing to fill in his illustrations, mingling seriousness and humor, unaffected and effortless—just as he writes.

As one of the foremost of novelists, essentially concerned with themes modern and timely as the clock's minute hand, it was natural for him to express faith in the virtue of contemporary society and the excellence of all phrases of contemporary literary work. He has the basic jealousies that are (vide Freud) in all authors perfectly camouflaged; and he is evasive without suggesting timidity.

Also he denies many reports about himself. He is not the husband of Gertrude Atherton, as one local paper conspicuously stated. (Mrs. Hughes is also in Los Angeles.)

III.

There are some limits to even a reporter's impudence, so I did not ask Mr. Hughes how much he was getting for his serials and stories—and he did not volunteer the information. But it is pretty generally believed among people who think themselves in possession of financial secrets of writers that Rupert Hughes is the highest paid serial writer that has ever been; and his short stories are said to bring even higher prices, in proportion to length, than his serials.

Six years ago Mr. Hughes had no standing of importance as a novelist, though he was a veteran writer. Suddenly he jumped from a kind of popular mediocrity into the series of great stories that began with "What Will People Say?" Ray Long, until recently editor of the Red Book, practically pulled Mr. Hughes by the ears into writing that book. Mr. Long was a man of courage; he bought the serials by the installment plan—scarcely knowing before the magazine was published what was happening. Mr. Hughes says he often made some wild jumps to mail his serial installment on the last train from New York to Chicago (where the magazine is printed) that would get it there in time. But he never stubbed his toe once in running to catch the Twentieth Century Express—and he claims that he was almost worried whether or not he would be able to keep his contract after the train was taken off as a war measure. But he never failed to get the installment there on time anyway.

"What Will People Say?" "The Thirteenth Commandment," "Empty Pockets," "Clipped Wings" (which I do not like,) "The Unpardonable Sin," and "The Cup of Fury" are almost revolutionary in their basic treatment. They are essentially contemporary, not of the present generation, but of the very hour. Mr. Hughes writes of life as it flows through the streets, swarms into the tea room, goes to pleasures and to stern duties. And his fiction is entertaining; he writes to interest. Because his fiction doesn't resemble anything produced by those English authors who are regarded by Americans with a sort of superstitious awe, it is very common to faintly praise his books with damns.

He can take a lot of roasting and never bat an eye. Nor is he easily gulled by praise.

There are several things about literature that I don't know, and among them is a better war novel than either "The Thirteenth Commandment" or "The Cup of Fury." I could use a lot of betters and bests, but—says Mr. Hughes—"superlatives are nonsense."

IV.

I don't believe Mr. Hughes was ever near starvation, but he had a lot of lean years. He started in, of course, as a poet. "The Ring of Gyges"—poor disinherited waif—is still to be met in knocking around the second-hand shops. Then he became a book reviewer and told successful authors how to be artistic and the other things that reviewers seem to know all about. He made a dead set for the stage, and plucked three failures, then caught on with a fourth and made a lot of money. When "Excuse Me" hit the boards it was what is called a "riot"—which being translated means that the people who came to see showed hilarious enthusiasm. Then he began to do well with short stories, compiled a musical encyclopedia, and helped get out the Encyclopedia Britannica. Several thousand people assisted, so it would perhaps be a little difficult to pick out Mr. Hughes's work. Then he wrote a novelette called "What Will People Say?" and he sold it to Lippincott's Magazine and spent the money; and the magazine changed editors and the new editor asked him for heaven's sake to please take that thing back and give him something else. So Mr. Hughes peddled his novelette up and down the market place and nobody would have it until Ray Long came after him. The novelette was rewritten, brought right down to the dancing craze then at its crest—and Mr. Hughes began to meditate upon the iniquity of an income tax.

Mr. Hughes is not a methodical man—so he says. He writes when he feels like it. "I've walked the floor for three weeks and never put a line to paper—trying to visualize and get better acquainted with the characters."

Once upon a time in years gone by he wrote a novel, "The Gift Wife," and dropped a dipsomaniacal hero off in Uskub, Serb

ONCE A JUDGE, NOW SENATOR.

"the savior of Oregon.' He was a lawyer, a nurseryman and agitator. In his eyes were great things. Some persons said that he was a political Col. Sellers. Anyway, he knew about Switzerland's application of the referendum, and said that when the people understood a subject that they voted on it wisely.

"Who can dispute that statement? Our own history proves its truth. Oregon seized upon the idea enthusiastically. Also U'Ren understood the political movements that had taken place in New Zealand and Australia. Now we had always been a progressive people. Dr. Whitman was a progressive man. He could have practiced medicine in the East. Spaulding could have succeeded in New York or Boston.

THEY HAD BIG THOUGHTS.

"The men of Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri, of Pennsylvania, Ohio and Iowa, of Kansas and Nebraska could have remained in their old homes. But they struck out, climbed the Rocky Mountains and founded an empire of their own.

"Their small ways of doing small things had been left behind them. A section of land, 640 acres, fills one's head with big thoughts. I have seen many of the farms that the early settlers of Oregon deserted in their youth when they moved into the West. I wouldn't have them, even at $3 an acre or less. And what do we see in Oregon today? Hundreds of miles of hard-surfaced country roads, sixty feet wide and not narrow strips of cement that one finds in the East and over which, for fear of collisions, it is dangerous to ride.

"Also fine farms and farm buildings and beautiful orchards at almost every hand. The Oregon man long ago learned that it isn't necessary to get up at 4 o'clock in the morning, kick the dog out doors and milk nine cows before breakfast. Nor to work in the fields or around the barn until 9 p.m. and then, tired and dirty, lay down to sleep on a bed without springs.

"That isn't farming in Oregon. It isn't anything in Oregon, because it is never done. Our farmers long ago began scientific methods and found that such methods made things look better and made them feel better still. Lawyers and physicians retired from practice, business men retired from business, newspaper men worn out by night work and a superannuated minister, here and there, have come among us and will say, 'That limb should have been cut off last spring,' or 'The spray missed that branch.' Their language would not interest you, but it interests them and that's the main thing in this life.

"I go into these details," Senator McNary said, "for the purpose of creating a background on which to place the political opinions that now rule Oregon. We were ready for new things in seeds, cuttings and machinery. New things paid. They made us feel competent and respectable. When one failed, we cast it aside, but we didn't lose our confidence in the long category of new things that were good.

SHOW US YOUR GOODS.

"In the meantime we caught the spirit of the merchants and manufacturers who had moved in and who managed their land just as they had run their stores and shops—on business principles. No big merchant goes into the basement and unboxes goods. No manufacturer hauls the coal that is to run his engine. A smart farmer doesn't feed the pigs or clean the horses. He hires men to do such work and he works with his brains.

"U'Ren, therefore, when he appeared with his programme of strange ideas pertaining to government, was not shouted down. 'Show us your goods,' we said. They looked all right and we tried them, and, from our standpoint, found them acceptable. The rest of the country joked about us, but that made no difference. So far, we have never voted an amendment into our constitution that now would be voted out by our people. That's my answer to the sneers and ridicule of Bourbons and mossbacks who dwell elsewhere."

"What do you see in the future?" asked the interviewer.

"A more satisfactory arrangement for those Americans who work," Senator McNary answered. "I am not referring to wages or hours of labor, but to opportunities. Profit-sharing will become more general. Taxes on incomes will continue. Huge profits, as a consequence, will be discouraged. Inheritances will be more heavily taxed. Why should a father leave millions to his son or son-in-law, to be spent in immoral or idiotic practices? Take a good part away from his estate, I say, and spend it for roads, schools and other useful purposes.

"But I am not a Socialist. Put that statement down in language that will be understood. You know the arguments against socialism. I use them all when I talk on the subject. Since the government has been running the railroads, I have traveled a number of times across the continent. I would about as lief walk."

"Are you afraid of the Bolshevists?"

"Not for a moment. That tribe will make no headway in this country. If the East is apprehensive, the West is not. And if the East desires the Bolshevists kicked out, all it has to do is to send us word and the job is done.

"Yes, I like Oregon, and that feeling grows the more I see of the rest of the United States."

TALE OF JINX OF RAISED UMBRELLA.

BREAKS FAITHFUL EMPOYEE'S "OLD TIME" RECORD OF TWENTY YEARS.

Verily an open umbrella is bad luck—but it is no excuse for the faithful employee being late to work.

He was one of those who take the early train to get to work, and allow an extra half hour for "delays." He was the faithful employee of the firm. He remembered things about "the business" that the senior partner forgot, and he improved the manners of the office boys. Accuracy, precision, rule-perfect efficiency characterized his work. You could tell that by the way his umbrella was rolled, the patent umbrella he carried when it looked like rain, by his shiny rubbers and white muffler, and his hat, just the least bit too small for him, and always worn precisely on the center of his head.

The patent umbrella was new, and the apple of his eye. He had bought it after a week's deliberation, with the reflection that it is better to buy an improved rain stick for the reason that it is better to use the latest model of filing case. The great feature of the umbrella that he prized most highly was the applicance which closed it by the mere turn of a wrist, so to speak.

HE GIVES "CARELESS TURN."

This day it was raining, and the faithful employee stood on the Adams street transfer platform of the "L." He had lost because of the weather ten minutes of the thirty he always allowed for delays. The patent umbrella was raised because the roof leaked a trifle, and "appearance is one of the first assets in business."

There came a train! The faithful employee gave his wrist the "careless turn. The umbrella failed to budge. The train stopped. The crowd began to move into the cars. He pushed anew—vigorously, determinedly—at the patent appliance. Nothing happened. The last of the crowd was moving in. Sweat began to stand out on his brow.

"Wait a miuute," he yelled, making the umbrella shake like a leaf, but failing despite his exertions to work the catch loose.

"Watch your step. Move forward in the car. A little lively, please," came to his ears through the sickening blur. The last passenger but himself had gone in. He plunged toward the door, open umbrella and all.

"Say, this is no freight train. You can't bring that emblem of bad luck in here," said the guard, as he slammed the door.

That was the first train. Nine more passed, while the faithful employee strove with the patent umbrella. Widly he appealed to the agent at the ticket window.

"Will you let me put this umbrella in there? I have to hurry. I'll come back and get it."

"An open umbrella? Say, that's bad luck. Not much!" was the warm response. "Besides, it's wet. Go along with you!"

The faithful employee was desperate. He found himself stepping on feet. He could not see whose feet they were. Presently he felt a hand on his arm and he caught the words:

"Say, you can't take up all the platform. You'd bter get out of here and walk if you aren't going to take a train."

Anyway, that's the story the faithful employee told the boss, as the explanation of his being late for the first time in twenty years. And the boss 'how how'd'" and said not to let it happen again for twenty years more.—[Chicago News.

PEACE IN EUROPE IS CELEBRATED IN MEXICO

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

MEXICO CITY, July 7.—Celebrations of the return of peace have been held within the last few days by nationals of the Allied countries residing here. On July 3 and 4 festivities were conducted by the Country Club or elsewhere and the stores and shops of business men of the Allied nations were closed and decorated. The fiestas included informal receptions to returned soldiers of the Allied armies.

On Sunday, July 6, two memorial services were held for Allied soldiers who died in the war. One was conducted by the French colony and the other by English-speaking people of the capital. The various foreign colonies generally co-operated in the festivities.

Silk jersey bathing suits, trimmed with appliqued flowers are the latest.

As the prices of furs will soon go soaring, no one knows how far, you'll be interested, I know, in the most remarkable sale of furs ever known! It will open tomorrow morning at H. Liebes & Co.'s, 725 S. Broadway. Tremendous reductions will be offered! I saw many of the pieces—Bobby coats, coatees, capes, sport coats, animal scarfs—anything you could wish for. All are new models. And what do you think—you can have any piece you select delivered in October. Any woman would be proud to have the Liebes label on her fur—you know their skins are all specially selected—coming direct from their own trading posts in the Arctic regions—and are absolutely guaranteed by H. Liebes & Co. This firm is famous the world over for the quality of their marvelous creations and for their expert designers.

No one loves pretty clothes better than a baby! Here's a layette which sells for $15.75—just think of it! Three cunning bootees, one dainty dress, two flannel Gertrudes and one of nainsook. There are three of those dandy Vanta shirts and three bands, also three comfy gowns, two slips, besides a dozen diapers. Run into the Baby's Specialty Shop, 734 S. Hill, and judge for yourself the lovely quality of these tiny garments.

Accordeon plaited skirts are very popular.

A mole is so unsightly! Have Miss Deere take it off—she guarantees to do this and also to remove superfluous hair without scarring. She is an expert, of sixteen years' experience, and offers splendid references for her work in electrolysis and in scientific facials. Miss Deere was formerly with Anna M. Bernard and is now at 806 Hollingsworth Bldg., Sixth and Hill. Phone [illegible].

There are some cunning new rompers at Beeman & Hendee's, called the "Maggie Mae." This is the home of the famous Polly Prim frocks and rompers, so you know what to expect. Lovely imported cretonnes and other draperies are also shown and plain curtains made free. 948 S. Hill.

Many folks who make their own frocks and lingerie are very enthusiastic about the Elite Button Co. They have braiding and scalloping done there—if they want buttons made or hemstitching—in fact, anything in machine stitching or plaiting, they send it to the Elite. They do expert work and have enlarged their plant in order to accommodate their increasing business. Sixth floor, Title Guarantee Bldg.

Picot edges are used on many coats and dresses.

Keep your youthful appearance by caring for your hair and complexion. Quite different and delightfully effective are the facials and scalp treatments given at the Rosemary Beauty Shop, sixth floor, Brack-Shops.

If you don't wish to wear your diamonds, but merely have them put away, they give you no pleasure and are really of no use whatever. Why don't you sell them outright, to Mr. Ferguson?—he'll pay you good prices and will be glad to talk to you. 206 Haas Bldg., Fourth and Broadway.

There's an atmosphere of quaintness and an alluring tete-a-tete-ness about the Vanity Fair Tea Rooms. They say nothing of the really wonderful lunches a la carte and dinners table d'hote at $1.25. They will put up lunches for you, too. [illegible] S. Hill. Phone 62954.

Don't discard your clothes just before they are faded. Have them dyed by experts at the Cooper Dye Works, 1369 W. Washington. The dyes used now are splendid—better ones have never been made than are made now in the U.S.A. Call 25109.

Real flowers trim many evening gowns.

Good-by Dandruff is as good as its name—it does the work. You'll find it at Corenson's Hair Parlor, [illegible] S. Broadway. Expert advice given by Mrs. Corenson.

Have your ostrich feathers and marabout made over by Vallely & [illegible], 640 Broadway, 6th floor, opposite Bullock's. They are giving special summer rates on this kind of work.

You've missed something if you haven't worn a William's-Wear house or porch dress, made in Glen[illegible], 734 S. Hill.

The mysterious Third Kiss—doesn't that sound alluring, enticing and romantic? Grauman's will present this charming picture—a Jesse L. Lasky production, with an all-star cast, this week. I'm sure none of us will miss it. Besides this—there will be the Ebon-Galli-Curci to sing for us, Helen Scholder, 'cellist, and Linne's Classic Dancers, who will represent Love, Rythm, Art and Frivolity.

Worth-while lingerie, negligees, boudoir caps and other lovely things are made at Ye Hande Made Shoppe. These are dainty and beautiful, but wear wonderfully. "Quality" is their slogan. Fifth floor, Brack-Shops.

Blue wolf is smart for evening wraps.

You've heard of the Nestle permanent wave—you know that it is the oldest and best-known system—so you will be delighted to have an operator here who has studied with Mr. Nestle in New York. Madame Lillie Koschat, the only licensed Nestle operator in Los Angeles, has opened parlors on the eighth floor of the Brack-Shops. The famous Nestle machine employs the steam process, which makes the hair soft and beautiful. The process is quite different in many ways from any other, and the results marvelous. The wave is absolutely natural, and can be made in many sizes. The schoolgirl curls are charming. No brittleness or harshness of the hair occurs. Phone 13370.

Hasten! Have your furs remodeled into smart fall styles at special summer prices. There's originality about the work of that clever designer, Arthur Baus, which will please you. 619 S. Grand. 62880. He is showing some smart fox furs and coatees at summer prices.

Many negligees are made of Dolly Varden printed Georgette.

One hears so much about the present vogue of the uncorseted figure! Do you realize that this figure, which is a delight to the eye and no end of comfort to the wearer, is attained only by perfect corseting? Those expert corsetieres at the Ville de Paris will convince you of this. I am really astonished at the values they are offering—think of a corset of beautiful lines at only $5!

Hemstitching 10c per yard! Also pleating, buttons, picoting, buttonholes—done by experts only at the Davis Button Co., 342 South Broadway. Their work is guaranteed and absolutely the quickest service in town. Satisfied customers are their best advertisement. Mail orders given special attention. Phone 67767.

For suits, tricotine will be much worn this fall.

Too fat? Too thin? Not exactly well? You can be brought to normal weight and measurements and be vastly improved in health by the Reiss System—without drugs or starvation. It's intensely interesting, too. 802 Title Guarantee Bldg., 220 W. Fifth st. Phone 67815.

If you've never eaten in a cafeteria, my friend, you have a treat in store for you at the Colonial, 631 S. Hill! The service here is remarkably efficient—a whole line being served in a jiffy—I've timed it and I know! The cooking is really surprisingly homelike — especially the pies and cake. The lovely decorations, splashing fountains and restful atmosphere are a joy!

Girdles of large wooden beads in many colors are smart.

Why be fat? Take it off where you wish, without effort, diet or drugs, and have the figure of a Hebe. Relieves rheumatism and constipation. Improves circulation. Weight Reducing Co., 618 Brockman Bldg.

You're tired out and don't know why—have you stopped to think—it may be your eyes; it often is. Dr. Landen is such a patient man, why not have him examine your eyes in his restful optical parlors, Sixth floor, Brack-Shops. He's an expert optometrist and knows his business.

Dandruff dissolved and removed at Dora Dean's, 331 West Eighth, at Zan's. Regular $1 treatment with shampoo, 50 cents with this notice.

You can save quite a lot by delivering your own clothes to the Tabbert Dye Works, 1223-27 W. Washington. They are doing especially fine work in dyeing jerseys. All of their dyeing and cleaning is done by experts and they have a special department for out-of-town work. Phones: West 536 and 24036.

Tricolette will be more popular than ever.

The Aileen Sweet Shop is a delightfully cool and pleasant place for lunch and tea—everything so good—I know you'll always enjoy eating there once you've tried it. Fourth floor, Brack-Shops.

It it possible that not a thousand miles away from our beautiful City of the Angels is a wonderfully gifted tribe of Indians who worship gods made from yucca plants? Mrs. Walters says it's a fact. This interesting young woman has worked among these Indians for years as a missionary. Knowing them individually she can tell a story of each worker who has made every article. These aboriginals weave the glowing Navajo rugs and blankets of wool direct from their sheep. She has beautiful Navajo rugs—no two alike—because Indians are superstitious about duplication. Hopi Indian baskets, trays and pottery are also sent to her direct. She sells them for a mere song at her attractive shop, Sixth at Hope.

Mr. Vatcher of Cawston's has just returned from New York and other eastern points and he declares that more ostrich feathers will be worn this year than ever before. They are just as busy as bees at the Cawston Ostrich Farm, South Pasadena. He says the rage for the ostrich fans is really astonishing—and short tips are being used extensively on fall millinery. I'm not surprised—and I'm so glad we've hundreds of those odd birds right here, aren't you? Isn't it funny that such ugly birds would have such beautiful plumage? If you've never visited this farm do so, by all means—it's terribly interesting.

Soft feathers, such as ostrich, guinea hen, pheasant, are to be much used this fall.

Delightful news! The Yarn Shop will hold its customary monthly sale Monday. Two-ounce balls of yarn will be sold at the old prices! Did you know they carry embroidery lengths of all yarns? If you don't know how to knit they'll gladly teach you—why don't you learn? Their new location is 716 S. Grand, opposite Robinson's.

Four little girls have had their hair curled recently at Hudgen's Permanent Wave Shop—you can see their pictures any time. This is the largest exclusive permanent wave shop west of New York—occupying the entire front fourth floor, Brack-Shops. Both the Frederick and Nestle machines are used; you can have which ever you like—large or small waves, kinks or curls. Mrs. Hudgen and her assistants are experts and she will tell you just what kind of wave your hair will take. Phone 62863.

Fringed insertion is much used for blouse trimming.

In these days of ease and comfort in dress one is likely to be quite careless about those small accessories—the gloves. No street costume is really complete without them. Besides they keep the hands so soft and white. In the East there is a perfect craze for chamois gloves. Robinson's have these in white and natural in many styles of slip-on and button ones.

You are aware that the Innes Shoe Co. has a reputation for shoes which have surpassing beauty of line, fitting fitness, and remarkable wearing qualities. So, of course, you will be overjoyed to learn of the End-of-the-Season sale at their shop, 642 S. Broadway. The height which the prices in shoes may attain this fall is appalling to consider. This fact should make this offering especially attractive.

Sunset, Paon blue and Egyptian red are new colors.

I don't wish to hurry you, but really if you don't have your furs remodeled before the middle of August, Ormond will not be able to promise when he can take care of your work! You know he is a wonderful designer—an artist—and can make you something decidedly chic, something smart, for autumn styles are before him now. Besides, he has a line of smart fur creations awaiting your selections at 728 W. Seventh. I'm sure you'll be glad if you have a talk with him, as he knows furs.

The very newest thing for making hair grow is the Actinic Ray of the Mercury Quartz Lamp. It grows hair on bald heads, prevents falling hair and influences the circulation, thereby benefiting the scalp and hair. Ask Mrs. A. L. Barber, complexion specialist, about this at her parlors, fifth floor, Brack-Shops.

When dining at the popular Assembly Tea Rooms it would be wise to reserve your table by calling 12857, especially for Saturday and Sunday evenings for their southern fried chicken dinners. Fifth floor, Brack-Shops.

Batik is very popular for parasols, blouses, dresses and even hats.

If you don't wear your diamonds—do sell them by all means—and make them count for something. Mr. Hambright will gladly pay good prices for them if you care to see him. Room 801 Title Guarantee Bldg., 220 W. Fifth.

MUSICAL.

DIRECTOR PLEASED.

ROTHWELL IMPRESSED BY LOCAL MUSICIANS.

Walter Henry Rothwell, newly-elected conductor of the Philharmonic Orchestra, pronounced himself, before his departure from here last week, well pleased with the material he finds here for the building of a fine orchestra. Mr. Rothwell spent a week in Los Angeles examining the talent which was presented to him, and he announces that he will not import more than sixteen men, most of whom will go to the first chairs. He will decide upon the concert master, and bring him, most probably, from New York when he returns in September, to begin rehearsals.

Mr. Rothwell takes the infrequently-expressed view of orchestras which puts the responsibility entirely upon the conductor.

"There is no such thing as a poor orchestra," he says, "unless there is a poor conductor. A conductor should never choose men whom he deems unfit, and if he does so the blame should fall upon his head for the failure of the whole."

Rothwell has firm ideas upon all subjects concerning the orchestra, among which are his flattering views of "what the public likes." He believes that audiences are much the same the world over, and he will not consider "playing down" to his audiences even in the popular concerts which will be a large part of the season's work here.

He insists that only good music can live, and that it is the public, after all, which has kept alive the works of the great masters. He will introduce much that is new to the majority of our people, but will not slight the classics.

The American, too, will come in for a large shares of the opportunities which will be afforded to living composers by the extensive repertoire with which Rothwell plans to have his orchestras equipped.

Lazzari's Attainments.

Carolina Lazzari, contralto, who is to be heard here early in the season, obtained a start in the operatic world through Cleofonte Campanini, who heard her for the first time on the day that she signed a three-years' contract with him, in spite of the contraltos having all been engaged for that season. Her opportunities came, and the critics "did the rest" for she was at once pronounced one of the great contraltos of the operatic stage. Lazzari has been a sincere worker, and her natural attainments have been amplified by her arduous efforts to perfect herself in her singing. She is one of the first singers to appear here on the Philharmonic course.

Olga Steeb Going East.

The music lovers who have ardently watched the career of Olga Steeb, whose studies have been made entirely in Los Angeles, with extraordinary results, will be glad to know that Miss Steeb is soon to go to New York where she will begin a concert tour of the East. She will play at Aeolian Hall on December 15th, and will tour through the Middle West, returning to Los Angeles in April, when she will play in recital here.

Carolina Lazzari.

Vescei in North.

Decider Vescei, pianist, is at the Fairmont hotel in San Francisco where he will remain for the summer. He will go to Mexico in October, where he will play in concert with orchestra. While in San Francisco, Mr. Vescei will play in recital.

Eastern Musician Visitor.

Mrs. William Boughton, former vice-president of the Chromatic Society of Buffalo, and a singer of prominence in that city, is a guest at Santa Monica for the summer. Mrs. Boughton will probably make her home in this city, where she will be an acquisition to the music coterie.

Student in Recital.

On August 6th, at the church at 18th and Paloma streets, a piano recital will be given by a young colored girl, pupil of Miss Marie Gashweiler, of Seattle, who was a student in Vienna of Leschetitsky.

Lorenza Jordan-Cole, the recitalist has played in Seattle with success, and is said to have unusual attainments. Miss Gashweiler will spend the remainder of the summer in Los Angeles.

THE SPELL OF HARMONY.

Tracing of the Relation of Music to the Spiritual Order.

BY JEANNE REDMAN.

The music of today has to a large extent usurped the vital mission that the churches of the Renaissance achieved. In that day the church was not alone a place of services, a sanctuary for the devout. It served a more universal purpose and one which, though little spoken of, was perhaps more potent in its effect than the actual creed. This mission lay in its being a perfect place of refuge for those torn between conflicting emotions, the uneasy mind—the nervous or neuresthenically inclined—and the thinkers who felt the need of relaxation, as well as the actors in the drama of life.

Within its doors was calm. Its forms of architecture brought up to the mind the cool depth of the green forest and the vast expanse of azure skies, and its atmosphere of serenity, its perfect quiet, were inspiration to relaxation and introspection. Its whole being was a manifestation of art, from the high-vaulted arches and great pillars and multi-colored light beams, streaming from the exquisite windows to its great friezes of Byzantine mosaics, and the primitive masters of an earlier day.

Compare our symphonic concerts of today with this. When we have made allowances for the changes which have taken place in the human mind, we see the similarity of impulse that made even atheists go to church in Italy, and that sends men and women to hear good music who spend their lives in activities wholly outside the practice of art. In both cases art is the regulating, absolute, that soothes all dissensions in the human mind. It is the solid basis of formal harmony that serves as a foundation from which man may make a fresh start with a renewed poise of outlook.

THE QUEST FOR HARMONY.

The harmony of order felt in that other day and heard in ours is man's most instinctive desire, for it means power wherever applied, and though the vast majority today take a tone of scoffing when they speak of art, without its panacea they would be miserable.

Imagine buildings constructed with absolutely no preoccupation save a strict utility, Imagine dwellings whose rooms are bare save for a couch and a box to sit on. Even these dwellings would embody a dream of art, for anything that adds to man's comfort, which is after all, his pleasure, must have a dream to give it birth.

The concert of today intensifies man's consciousness of order and harmony. After a day spent in an office where the demands of business have made him rack his brain or body, what could be a greater blessing than to enter a dimly-lighted and vast hall, murmurous with the slight movement of his fellows, like wind over cornfields, and to hear there the great emotional strains of swelling sounds that transfer him from a drab and monotonous existence of toil and materiality into a world where all is perfect, where things have a different composition, where the vicissitudes of a different order of impulses are always consummated.

For a moment he is taken outside himself. He has a glimpse of a different life of a world or another plane. Such a spiritual influence of cosmic harmony cannot be overestimated, for such an influence, if persistent, will gradually mold and invest the very mental caliber of its devotees.

WITHIN OUR OWN GATES.

We here in Los Angeles thus have every reason for a colossal expansion in the realms of all beauty because we have a variety and an excellency of music that I believe is not equaled in any city of our size.

The coming year bids fair to bring us two symphonic organizations; the Zoellner Quartette, which we have come to claim as our own, is inspired with the ideals of the best in modern and ancient. We are hoping for another chamber music ensemble which will be made up of Mr. and Mrs. Christian Timmner, well-known instrumentalists, and their associates.

Our visiting musicians are the highest placed in the country, and we are never without an opera season or two. We have a dozen or more music clubs which perform publicly. With such a quantity of ordered sounds about us, given us in places conducive to ease of mind and body we cannot help carrying with us its effects, into the everyday duties of life.

If we will let art's ultimate mission, order, sink into our consciousness—if we will assimilate it, make it a part of us—every piece of architecture, painting, sculpture, will profit enormously. Art of any kind cannot come to a florescence in unsympathetic surroundings, and our love of music automatically should create at least a toleration for all art expression.

Aside from this we have the climatic conditions of Italy, and who can tell but what we are preparing the terrain for a new and greater Renaissance?

BEBE DANIELS'S PEDIGREE.

Bebe Daniels, black-eyed beauty of the silver screen, who is playing the part of Vice in "Everywoman," at Lasky's, has a strain of pure Castilian and is mighty proud of the fact. Her mother's mother came from Castile, Spain, and Bebe's mother was born in South America. Her father's people came from Scotland. "That," says the little actress, "makes me a Duke's Mixture."

European Singer Who is Visiting Here.

Christine Langeham.

EASTERN SINGER TALKS ON OUR ART.

BY EDWIN SCHALLERT.

What chance has the foreign artist who has come to America unheralded by the usual storm of publicity and without a special introduction via the Metropolitan Operahouse to become a concert favorite in this country?

This was the problem which faced Mme. Christine Langenham, dramatic soprano of note, who is to make her first concert appearance here the end of this month., when she came to America, three years ago. Mme. Lagenham has been spending the summer in Los Angeles, resting before going on a tour.

This is quite the reverse of the question usually asked in this country—which usually has been what chance has the American artist to compete with the foreign-born.

In her own peculiar instance, however, Mme. Langenham feels that the two questions have a certain similarity—first, because of her endeavor to make an entrance into the singing world of this country through concert,and second, because she feels so much an American that she does not ever want to go back to Europe again.

Two-thirds of her programmes have been devoted to the songs by American composers during her concert engagements. She has endeavored to bring the American to the front whenever possible, and has sought to give a wide selection from his compositions. She has, therefore, set out to do in Rome as the Romans do, and win success, not with the prestige of her European career, but with her own ability to adapt herself to new and different conditions. She has succeeded very well with her concerts in New York, Boston, Baltimore, and throughout the South and Middle West. And her experiences have given her a decidedly original viewpoint on the singer's means of attaining success in this country.

"The greatest mistake that I have been able to discover, is the desire of singers to make a metropolitan success without its being cosmopolitan," said Mme. Langenham, yesterday. "By this, I mean that the mere fact that a singer achieves fame in New York is only proportionately to his credit. It is his or her duty to strive to achieve the same degree of popularity in every section. The singer must endeavor to please his public, even in the smallest towns; no success can be sure until it is general.

"I love to sing in the Western States. They are so free and untrammeled in their appreciation of art. They give their approval whole-heartedly when they are pleased. I must admit, though, that I also like tremendously the artistic atmosphere of New York; it is really inspirational."

Being a singer comparatively fresh from her experience abroad which included operahouses in Berlin, Vienna and Prague—in the latter Bohemian city she was born—and who has also had the chance to judge the viewpoint of a new country in art, Mme. Langenham naturally would have interesting views on present tendencies in singing—whether they be toward a simpler or a more complex art. The latter is the tendency which she feels is uppermost now.

NEEDS MULTIPLE TALENT.

"The singer must have a wide range of power and adaptability—must be able to supply the desires of that multiple thing the audience. The audience is made up of many individuals, and it is only by pleasing all of them individually and in common that you can reach their hearts and their minds. Of course, when you are dealing with so complex a group of individualities as belong to the audience of the present age, your art cannot be otherwise than varied and complex. Nothing would be duller than an all-lyrical programme. There must be the high lights of the coloratura just visible in certain songs, and others must have the quality of drama. I think our audiences like extremes, however. They enjoy hearing a Galli-Curci who is the acme of coloratura art; and they will listen equally to a dramatic singer like Emmy Destinnova."

OPERA TO HELP TASTE.

Mme. Langenham waxes enthusiastic over the art future of America. Her only hope is that the growth of musical appreciation in this country will be hastened. She believes that this can be most successfully accomplished through spectacular method—the opera. "By the opera you gain the attention of the people," she continued. "You inspire in them a love for good music which leads to their becoming acquainted with the symphony orchestra. Through the symphony they learn of chamber music, the highest and purest in its form. Thus is the finer taste of a people developed.

"Opera well presented with a large range of prices is what the country needs. The higher-priced seats should be for the rich; the lower-priced for the workman. Sometimes I wonder why you don't divide the country into zones, with the various cities combining to support opera, and companies touring between cities in the various sections. You do practically this in baseball, why not in opera?"

Mme. Langenham is anxious to return to the operatic stage at some time in the future, for she believes that to be her forte. She has learned and sung a great number of roles. One of the most difficult she ever essayed was that of Clytemnestra in Strauss's "Elektra." She has also sung the Wagnerian leading roles like Elsa, Venus, Ortrud, and others, in the leading operahouses in Berlin and Vienna, and has appeared in French and Italian roles.

She is a woman of very great personal charm. Her success has been in the more dramatic type of singing. Certain critics have compared her work to that of Nordica, particularly because of the similarity which has been noted in the type of roles she knows, like La Gioconda, Brunhilde, and others that Nordica made famous.

Like a New House.

"What do you think of the League of Nations?" "It's something like the new house we have been building. We are confident that if we can ever get it finished it will be worth all the trouble and expense."—[Washington Star.

EGAN SCHOOL

Takes pleasure in presenting No. of the series of successful stude

Miss Marjorie Rambeau, America's youngest and greatest star, is unst in her praise of Egan School and its methods. Miss Rambeau is gra enough to say that Mr. Egan not only taught her mechanics and techn but ideals as well, without which, in her opinion, no artist can succeed.

The Egan School can present no less than 100 students whose names known to the public, through their stage or screen prominence. While we aware it is not wise to boast of past successes too freely, our object in lishing this series of pictures is the hope it might interest those who plate a career, and are undecided where to begin, or need encouragement to

The Egan School has been established twenty years under the pers direction of Frank Egan. It now represents an investment of $250,000, its own class A building, operating its own theater, numerous private ballroom, and is beautifully furnished throughout.

The present faculty of well-known artists is the best and most conge Mr. Egan has ever been fortunate enough to secure, embracing such well-know names as Roland Paul, Homer Grunn, Oscar Selling, Marshal Stedman, Prager, Lester Grauweiler, Gwendolyn Logan Hubbard, Bertha Winslow V and Winifred Hooke.

TO MAKE WORLD GRAND SAHARA.

Ambition of Drys is Now to Make Humanity Arid.

Hope United States will Inspire All Europe.

Will Spread Movement Over the Known Globe.

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, July 12.—As it is the duty of the commander of any military unit to "estimate the situation" before going into action, so are the leaders of the movement to "make the world dry for democracy" just now very busy in taking the measure of the job in hand.

John Barleycorn's future from pole to pole, they hold, will depend largely upon the success or failure of prohibition in the United States, where a great people has pioneered by voting itself dry. If, within the next half decade, prohibition will have brought about the good results that the "drys" claim it will, then the other countries of the world will be more likely to adopt it than if it failed to cure the evils that are charged to the use of "likker." So does the United States become the great demonstration plant to prove the virtue or fallacy of prohibition.

DRYS STAKE THEIR ALL.

Prohibitionists the world over are staking everything upon the results they expect will accrue in this country from the abolition of intoxicating drinks. Within the next few years they hope to be able to point out to the people of "wet" countries how the United States has been bettered economically, socially and civilly by the elimination of booze. This will be their trump card in their fight for world-wide prohibition. The attack upon the world's liquor forces has already been launched.

"The whole world will be dry by 1930," said one enthusiastic prohibitionist who had a leading part in the successful campaign waged in this country. "Old John is doomed to a fate similar to that of Bill Hohenzollern and Jess Willard. His days are numbered. In this country, folks laughed at us five years ago, when we predicted that the United States would be dry by 1920. We exceeded our own expectations in putting over prohibition a year earlier than the most undaunted prohibitionists had expected victory. We'll do the same in our world-wide fight. Woodrow Wilson made the world safe for democracy, and we're going to make it dry for democracy."

With this challenge to the "wets," the prohibitionists already have begun to organize and line up their supporters in every county in the world. The first international meeting of the "drys" held for the purpose of mapping out plans for the big campaign, took place in this country recently when thirty-seven nations were represented. Sixteen had delegates direct to the conference while the other twenty-one were represented by missionaries or others located in this country.

THE WORLD LEAGUE.

The international prohibition organization will be known as the World League Against Alcoholism, and will have permanent headquarters in Washington. At the initial conference of the league, it was decided to raise $5,000,000 in this country with which to begin the world-wide war on booze. Large sums will also be collected in other countries.

Leading prohibitionists in this country who actively worked for the cause will not be permitted to rest on their oars now that the country has become a veritable desert. Men and women who toured the United States in the interest of prohibition will be pressed into foreign service. Numerous countries have called upon the Anti-Saloon League of America to supply speakers, and also men to conduct the business end of the prohibition campaign. Edwin C. Dinwiddie, national legislative superintendent of the league, has been invited to England, Scotland and Ireland to open the campaign in those countries.

According to Mr. Dinwiddie, much of the ground work for world-wide prohibition has already been accomplished in a number of the countries.

"A few days ago we received a cablegram from Finland," he said, "bringing the good tidings that that new-born nation is starting out right by adopting prohibition. The prohibition law went into effect in Finland, June 1, 1919.

"Scotland has what is called local veto, which is somewhat similar to local option. The British Parliament passed that law in 1912, but it does not become operative until 1920. We expect to start campaigning in Scotland next year, and the prohibition forces are daily gaining strength there. We hope to do considerable work in Ireland within the next few years.

DOUBTFUL OF ENGLAND.

"We expect to have trouble in England, because the members of the House of Lords hold office for life and it is not an easy matter to bring pressure to bear upon them as it is in this country with our national legislators. Then, I understand, a number of the members of the House of Lords have money invested in breweries. This condition will tend to make our work all the harder, but such things as that will not daunt us in our fight.

"In France, Spain and Italy we have been able to mobilize a great deal of sentiment in favor of total abstinence, but in these Latin countries we are going to have our hardest fight. For many centuries light wines have been used at the table just as we use tea and coffee in this country. Then the making of wine is a very profitable industry in the Latin countries. We will have to educate the people to make some other use of the grapes and other fruits used in making wine. We have accomplished something in this direction in northern Italy, where a million dollar plant has been built to make a beverage from grapes by a new process. The new drink is made after the fashion of grape wine, containing about six per cent. alcohol, but before it is placed on the market for sale, it is put through a process for de-alcoholization. All the alcohol is extracted but the wine retains its lustre and taste. The alcohol is sold for commercial purposes. I have been informed that a concern in California is contemplating erecting a similar plant.

"Sweden is making a brave fight for prohibition. There are a number of Good Templers (an international temperance organization) in the Swedish parliament. Norway has made considerable progress and there is a strong upward trend of prohibition in that country. Denmark has the unique distinction of publishing the only paper in the world that is devoted exclusively to prohibition. Lars Larsen-Ledet, the editor, has been advocating prohibition in his country for many years. Since the Bolshevists have taken over the reins of government in Russia, we have very little information of what is going on there, although the use of intoxicating drinks was prohibited by the former Czar soon after Russia declared war upon Germany.

IN LATIN-AMERICA.

"The situation in the Latin-American countries is quite similar to that of the Latin countries of Europe. In South America and Mexico we intend to carry on an intensive campaign and we are hopeful of getting some good results.

"In Japan the national drink is called 'sake.' It is made of rice and has a powerful kick in it. An officer of the imperial Japanese Navy recently called upon me and told me of the splendid headway that is being made by the 'antis' in Japan. China is not so strong for intoxicants as it is for drugs. There is some liquor used there and American missionaries are doing much good work to eradicate the evil."

BRITISH EYE DRILL.

The Royal Air Force of England has instituted an eye drill that has made many splendid pilots out of men who otherwise would have been useless. It was discovered that a large percentage of men only use one eye at a time, and in the early days pilots were not tested for eye balance. Many men were then passed into the air service who could never land correctly. When these deficiencies were discovered a school was formed and under an eye specialist twice a day airmen undergoing the cure were paraded for eye drill and taught how to use both their eyes at the same time. The result was that 95 per cent. of the men who would have been bad pilots became good ones in a little while.—[Louisville Courier-Journal.

Foch's Pipe Brings $540.

At a charity bazaar held at the Prince Murat Hotel in Paris an American paid $540 for the pipe which Marshal Foch was smoking on July 17, 1918, the day when the Allies took the offensive. Another American gave $400 for Marshal Foch's penholder. — [Edinburgh Scotsman.

Absolutely Shivered.

The hero worshiping young damsel was fluttering around the soldier just returned from France.

"They tell me," she said, "that in times of danger you were as cool as an iceberg."

"Rather!" agreed the warrior heartily. "Why, at times I was so cool I absolutely shivered."—[Unidentified.

The Seamstress

Was you ever to a circus and rode on a merry-go-round? Or mebbe you liked a flying swing what makes the same noise as a airship. Or mebbe you walked on one of them places what has got an uneven floor and things come down from the ceiling and hit you and you seen in a looking glass that you was twict as fat or twict as long and skinny as you really was.

Well, the other day, when the circus was a-coming. Why, my land, Lonny (that's my husband,) come in in the morning, knowing that I wasn't sewing——

Ma'am? Well, I most ingenerally do have all the sewing I want to do. I don't have many idle days. But I certainly do like a circus and I sort of twisted my engagements around sos I could go if he asked me to. But I didn't say anything to him about it because it is always nicer when a gentleman invites you to go places even if the gentleman is your own husband.

"Well, a piece of goods like that you are a-sewing on always does twist if you hold the wrong side to you. Yes'm, you want to hold most of the goods to you and let the edge be away from you.

Well, of course, a circus does cost a good deal, and I reckon pore folks ortn't to go and spend all that money on one. But yet, and still, it looks like to me that a circus is a pore folks' entertainment, judging by the kind of folks you see there.

Well, anyway, the folks in our neighborhood would do without breakfast and dinner and supper to go to the circus, and they are so few left in the houses around me on circus day that we have to lock and bar everything so's the sneak thiefs what are always round looking for things on that day because they know everybody is away from home, don't git in and take our furniture or the vittles what we got in the ice box.

Well, on last circus day we went early up town to watch the procession and stood on one corner for a half hour ontil somebudy come along and said it wouldn't be along there for a hour and mebbe it wouldn't come thataway at all.

I says to Lonny, "What in the world does make circus people so changeful?"

"Well," he says, "they got so many to consider; think of the people what stand a chance to git lost out of a circus, let alone the animals. You got to remember they got to deal with all kinds of wild men and wild animals, and they can't make plans for 'em just like ordinary folks."

I reckon he's right. Now, you take the living skeleton might git broke or the snake eater really eat a snake, and then there's the Indians and the elephants and I don't know what all. I reckon it is kind of oncertain to travel with so many queer human beings as that.

Well, we got onto the other corner, and a bad boy run right over one of my corns, and the man what sells balloons knocked one in my face and a fat man shoved me onto a woman what carried a box with sharp corners. I certainly think a circus procession ain't hardly worth what you got to go through with to see it. And the cars always break down and you have to walk home.

Yet and still, every time one comes I'm just like a kid, I forget all about having a hard time at the last one, and how the dust and heat nearly choked us on the grounds when we was going from the street car to the tent.

Well, when we got to the door the doorkeeper was perspiring till it run off him in streams, and we was so thirsty that we drank pink lemonade what had a lemon and a piece of red tissue paper in it this time last summer. It was warm, too, and I was sick for two or three days afterward, and no telling what else had got put into it.

And then because that was so auful we bought popcorn and that had the terriblest grease on it I ever tasted, and we thought sure enough that the "molasses-on-a-stick" would certainly take the taste of that out. But it never, and about that time everything in the circus started around the ring to introduce the show. Well, that old baby elephant started to cut up and come our way.

"Look out," I says to Lonny. "Ain't it mean of him to come over here? I think the circus people are just a-doing it because we didn't git reserved seats."

"Sh!" Lonny says, "they'll put us out, 'Melia. Don't git these circus people started. They are auful rough when you git 'em started. No telling what kind of a past they got."

Well, then after they was through, the little lady in the white tarleton skirts, what was most always over her head as much as anywhere, come in on a milk white pony, and she was just as pink and pretty and blonde haired as she could be.

But, my land, I hope her mother wasn't there. It was scarey something auful the way she bounced up and down, and did things. And she straddled three horses just like she was Indian rubber. It would of scared me cold to have Isabel Pearl do such stunts. Yes'm, it certainly would.

But people ortn't to blame children if they want to be circus people. Don't they take the kids to see 'em before they can walk? And don't they keep it up until they are old enough to go by their selves and give their ma and pa the slip?

Well, it looks like to me that it's wonderful more young people don't go and be circus riders, let alone the clowns; they certainly are funny, and a boy ain't to be blamed if he wants to be one. 'Course they ain't so much danger with a girl because girls always wants to be something pretty.

But what I like the most of a circus is the little trained dogs and the little trained children like Japs and Australians and people from foreign parts.

'Course, I'm always scared to death for them little children, but it looks like you enjoy things more when you are a little scairt and everything turns out all right.

Yes'm, I reckon it is mighty porefolksy to like a circus, but it's the same feeling inside of me, I reckon, as it is with folks what like any other kind of taking a chanct. And I think going to a circus is the best. Because you know, most that you are a-going to git home yourself, even if something terrible happens to the folks what are paid for it.

AFRICAN ELEPHANTS PAY PRICE FOR SLOTH.

LAZY MONSTERS TO BE ROUNDED UP AND SLAIN FOR FOOD.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, June 20.—The life of the famous African elephant seems to be in danger for the South African Cape Provincial Council proposes to exterminate those in the Addo Bush Forest, near Port Elizabeth.

For generations past these animals have been a great nuisance to the farmers. They have damaged crops and killed several persons.

The African elephant is noted for its laziness—quite the reverse to its Indian relative who, when called upon cheerfully and easily shoulders a burden of a ton or so. However, an effort is to be made to train the young ones for long-hauling in the Cape forests.

The rounding up of the animals has involved the erection of a number of lofty observation towers and so large are the numbers to be killed that the shooting of the animals will take over six months. The natives enjoy elephant's meat and the prospect of an unlimited supply for several months is being eagerly looked forward to.

The Provisional Council's announcement has caused keen regret among naturalists, some of whom say that should the threat be carried into effect the elephant, like the mastodon and the ichthyosaurus, may become extinct.

Hot Tea and Frozen Cream Very Constipating

THERE is little inclination for solid food on a hot day. Cold drinks and ices, salads and pastry form much of the diet, especially among women. This lack of wholesome variety, however, interferes with proper digestion.

The result is biliousness, listlessness, dizzy spells. The cause is constipation. The stomach could not digest nor the bowels pass off the day's strange mixture of food and drink.

A simple way of overcoming the trouble is this: If you have not already got Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin in the house, go to a drug store and buy a 50c or $1 bottle. Take a teaspoonful tonight before you go to bed. It will act in the morning, and immediately thereafter your head will be clear and that feeling of oppression will be gone.

Syrup Pepsin is a combination of simple laxative herbs with pepsin. It acts on the stomach-muscles training them to do their work naturally so that medicines can be dispensed with. It is the most widely used laxative compound in the world. That means merit.

A free sample bottle can be had by sending your address to Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 480 Washington St., Monticello, Ill.

Clarence Eddy

The Great Organist Writes of the New Marvel for Personally Producing Music

"It has long been recognized that if a means could be found to separate and control separately Melody and Accompaniment, a vital objection to the player piano would be removed.

"The entire player piano industry was groping and searching for a solution of this problem, when, as suddenly as a bolt of lightning from a clear sky, the invention of the wonderful Soloelle was announced.

"It then became apparent that the separation of Melody and Accompaniment control, which the Soloelle completely accomplished, was in reality not a goal (as it had so long been considered), but, in the light of further and more startling accomplishments of the Soloelle, was really the necessary and indispensable foundation which formed the starting point of the production of music by the player piano.

"The Soloelle not only solved the hitherto baffling problem of separate Melody and Accompaniment control, but provides a complete control over the stroke of the piano hammer, which affords the control over Tone Color. These two accomplishments of the Soloelle completely bridge the vast gap between the player piano, with its mechanical, imitation music, and the ideal artistic player piano of the future (the Soloelle), whose performance in the hands of any intelligent person rivals the musical performance of the higher class of virtuosi.

"Those musically educated always understood that it was the lack of Tone Color in the music of a player piano that made it monotonous, mechanical, sing-songy and tiresome—they know that Tone Color is to music what perspective is to painting, and that Tone Color is as readily recognizable and as readily understood even by those who have not been schooled in the technique of art and music.

"You have but to hear the Soloelle—the New Solo Player Piano—to realize the vast possibilities of musical entertainment and pleasure that it opens up for the individual who has never been taught to play from the keyboard.

Clarence Eddy

Soloelle patents cover the means for accomplishing two things never before seen in any player piano—the lack of these two things caused the old type of player piano to be a musical failure—producer of tiresome, dead, imitation music instead of the live, vibrating, colorful music of the great pianists and likewise of the

SOLOELLE
The Tone-Coloring Solo Player Piano

The First:
The Soloelle is the only player piano that affords complete and unrestricted control of the Melody and the Accompaniment separately.

The Second:
The Soloelle contains the only mechanism in existence for varying the kind, quality or character of tone (tone color) as distinguished from the volume or quantity of tone (tone gradation).

The Tone Color, as well as the Tone Volume of the Melody or Solo, is controlled through the pedals. The Tone Color and the Tone Volume of the Accompaniment are controlled through the Accompaniment lever. The performer controls the Tone Coloring of the Melody and the Tone Coloring of the Accompaniment absolutely separately on the Soloelle.

In Mr. Eddy's own words, "you have but to hear the Soloelle to realize the vast possibilities of musical entertainment and pleasure that it opens."

phone. And on a flaring red and green sign:

BERNIE GOTTSCHALK'S MUSIC HOUSE!

Come in! Hear Bernie Gottschalk's latest hit: The heart-throb song that has got 'em all! The song that made the Kaiser crawl!

"I come from Paris, Ill., but oh you Paris, France!

"I used to wear blue overalls, but now it's khaki pants!"

Come in! Come in!

Terry accepted.

She followed the sound of the music. Around the corner. Up a little flight of stairs. A red-haired young lady sat at the piano whose familiarity with the piano had bred contempt. Nothing else could have accounted for her treatment of it. There were stacks of music-sheets on counters, and shelves, and dangling from overhead wires. The girl at the piano never ceased playing. She played mostly by request. A prospective purchaser would mumble something in the ear of one of the clerks. The fat man with the megaphone would bawl out: "'Hickey Hoo!' Miss Ryan." And Miss Ryan would oblige.

Terry joined the crowd about the counter. The girl at the piano was not looking at the keys. Her head was screwed around over her left shoulder and as she played she was holding forth animatedly to a girl friend who had evidently dropped in from some store or office during the lunch hour. Now and again the fat man paused in his vocal efforts to reprimand her for her slackness. She paid no heed. Her conversation with the frowsy little girl went on.

"Wha'd he say?" (Over her shoulder.)

"Oh, he laffed."

"Well, didja go?"

"Me? Well, whatya think I yam, anyway?"

"I woulda took a chanst."

The fat man rebelled.

"Look here! Get busy! What are you paid for? Talkin' or playin'? Huh?"

The person at the piano, openly reproved thus before her friend, lifted her uninspired hands from the keys and spake. When she had finished she rose.

"But you can't leave now," the megaphone man argued. "Right in the rush hour."

"I'm gone," said the girl. The fat man looked about helplessly.

Terry pushed her way to the edge of the counter and leaned over. "I can play for you," she said.

The man looked at her. "Sight?"

"Yes."

"Come on."

Terry went around to the other side of the counter, took off her hat and coat, rubbed her hands together briskly, sat down and began to play. The crowd edged closer.

Terry played on. She played as Terry Sheehan used to play. She played as no music hack at Bernie Gottschalk's had ever played before. Even the crowd flowing down State street, must have caught the rhythm of it, for the room soon filled.

At 2 o'clock the crowd began to thin. Business would be slack, until 5, when it would again pick up until closing time at 6.

As the crowd dwindled she played less feverishly, but there was nothing slipshod about her performance.

At 4 o'clock, as she was in the chorus of "Isn't There Another Joan of Arc?" a melting masculine voice from the other side of the counter said: "Pardon me. What's that you're playing?"

Terry told him. She did not look up.

"I wouldn't have known it. Played like that—a second 'Marseillaise.' If the words—what are the words? Let me see a—"

"Show the gentleman a 'Joan,'" Terry commanded briefly, over her shoulder. The fat man laughed a wheezy laugh. Terry glanced around, still playing, and encountered the gaze of two melting masculine eyes that matched the melting masculine voice. The songster waved a hand uniting Terry and the eyes in informal introduction.

"Mr. Leon Sammett, the gentleman who sings the Gottschalk songs wherever songs are heard. And Mrs.—that is—and Mrs. Sammett—"

Terry turned. A sleek, swarthy, world-old young man with the fashionable concave torso, and alarmingly convex bone-rimmed glasses. Through them his darkly luminous gaze glowed upon Terry. To escape their warmth she sent her own gaze past him to encounter the arctic stare of the large blonde person who had been included so lamely in the introduction. And at that the frigidity of that stare softened, melted, dissolved.

"Why, Terry Sheehan! What in the world!"

Terry's eyes bored beneath the layers of flabby fat. "It's—why it's Ruby Watson, isn't it? Eccentric song and dance—"

She glanced at the concave young man and faltered. He was not Jim, of the Bijou days. In those days Jim and Ruby Watson used to do an "Eccentric Song and Dance." From him her eyes leaped back to the fur-bedecked splendor of the woman. The plump face went so painfully red that the makeup stood out on it, a distinct layer, like thin ice covering flowing water. As she surveyed that bulk, Terry realized that while Ruby might still claim eccentricity, her song and dance days were over. "That's ancient history, m'dear. I haven't been working for three years. What're you doing in this joint? I heard you'd done well for yourself. That you were married."

"I am. That is I—well I am. I——"

At that the dark young man leaned over and patted Terry's hand that lay on the counter. He smiled. His own hand was incredibly slender, long and tapering.

"That's all right," he assured her, and smiled. "You two girls can have a reunion later. What I want to know is can you play by ear?"

"Yes, but——"

He leaned far over the counter. "I knew it the minute I heard you play. You've got the touch. Now listen. See if you can get this, and fake the bass."

He fixed his somber and hypnotic eyes on Terry. His mouth screwed up into a whistle. The tune—a tawdry but haunting little melody—came through his lips. And Terry's quick ear sensed that every note was flat. Terry cocked her head just a little to one side, like a knowing little bird, looked up into space beyond the piano top, and played the lilting little melody with charm and fidelity.

When she had finished he sighed deeply, ecstatically. He bent his lean frame over the counter, and, despite his swarthy coloring seemed to glitter upon her.

"Something led me here. I never come up on Tuesdays. But what does anything matter now! Listen Miss—as—Miss?——"

"Pi—Sheehan. Terry Sheehan."

He gazed off a moment into space. "H'm. 'Leon Samett in Songs. Miss Terry Sheehan at the Piano.' That doesn't sound bad. Now listen, Miss Sheehan. I'm singing down at the University Inn. The Gottschalk song hits. I guess you know my work. But I want to talk to you private. It's something to your interest. I go on down at the inn at 6. Will you come and have a little something with Ruby and me? Now?"

"Now?" faltered Terry, somewhat helplessly.

"Get your hat. It's your life chance. Wait till you see your name in two-foot electrics over the front of every big-time house in the country. You've got music in you. Tie to me and you're made."

Sammett whipped out a watch. "Just three-quarters of an hour. Come on girlie."

His conversation had been conducted in an urgent undertone, with side glances at the fat man with the megaphone. Terry approached him now.

"I'm leaving now," she said.

"Oh, no, you're not. Six o'clock is your quitting time."

In which he touched the Irish in Terry. "Any time I quit is my quitting time."

If you know Chicago at all, you know the University Inn, that gloriously intercollegiate institution which welcomes any graduate of any school of experience, and guarantees a post-graduate course in less time than any similar haven of knowledge. Down a flight of stairs and into the unwonted quiet that reigns during the hour of low potentiality, between 5 and 6 o'clock the three went and seated themselves at a table in an obscure corner. A waiter brought them things in little glasses, though no order had been given. The woman who had been Ruby Watson was so silent as to be almost wordless. But the man talked rapidly. He talked well, too.

"I've got to go and make up in a few minutes. So get this. I'm not going to stick down in this basement eating-house forever. I've got too much talent. If I only had a voice—I mean a singing voice. But I haven't. I've got a song. It's my own. That bit you played for me up at Gottschalk's is part of the chorus. But it's the words that'll go big. They're great. It's an aviation song, see? Airship stuff. They're yelling that it's the airyoplanes that're going to win this war. Well, I'll help 'em.

"Now, what I've been looking for for years is somebody who has got the music knack to give me the accompaniment just a quarter of a jump ahead of my voice, see? I can follow like a lamb, but I've got to have that feeler first. It's more than a knack. It's a gift. And you've got it. I'm gunning for vaudeville. But they won't book me without a tryout. And when they hear my voice they—Well, if me and you work together we can fool 'em. The song's great. And my make-up's one of these av-iation costumes to go with the song, see? And the girls'll be wild about it. And the words!" He began to sing gratingly off-key:

"Put on your sky clothes,
Put on your fly clothes
And take a trip with me.
We'll sail so high
Up in the sky,
We'll drop a bomb from Mercury."

"Why, that's awfully cute," exclaimed Terry. Until now her opinion of Mr. Sammett's talents had not been on a level with his.

The 6 o'clock lights blazed up suddenly.

"You better go, Lee. The crowd comes in awfully early now, with all those buyers in town."

The band opened with a terrifying clash of cymbal, and thump of drum. "Back at the end of my first turn," he said as he fled. Terry followed his lithe, electric figure. She turned to meet the heavy-lidded gaze of the woman seated opposite. She relaxed then, and sat back with a little sigh. "Well, if he talks that way to the manager I don't see ——"

Ruby laughed a mirthless little laugh. "Talk doesn't get it over with the managers, honey. You've got to deliver."

"Well, but he's—that song is a good one. I don't say it's as good as he thinks it is, but it's good."

"But didn't he? Doesn't he?"

"The words were written by a little French girl who used to skate down here last winter when the craze was on. She was stuck on a Chicago kid who went over to fly for the French."

"But the music?"

"There was a Russian girl who used to dance in the cabaret, and she ——"

Terry's head came up with a characteristic little jerk. "I don't believe it."

"Better." She gazed at Terry with the drowsy look that was so different from the quick, clear glance of the Ruby Watson who used to dance so nimbly in the old Bijou days. "What'd you and your husband quarrel about, Terry?"

Terry was furious to feel herself flushing. "Oh, nothing. He just—I—it was—Say, how did you know we'd quarreled?"

And suddenly all the fat woman's apathy dropped from her like a garment and some of the old sparkle and animation illumined her heavy face. She pushed her glass aside and leaned forward on her folded arms, so that her face was close to Terry's.

"Terry Sheehan, I know you've quarreled, and I know just what it was about. Oh, I don't mean the very thing it was about; but the kind of thing. I'm going to do something for you, Terry, that I wouldn't take the trouble to do for most women. But I guess I ain't had all the softness knocked out of me yet, though it's a wonder. And I guess I remember too plain the decent kid you was in the old days. What was the name of that little small-time house me and Jim used to play? Bijou, that's it; Bijou."

The band struck up a new tune. Leon Sammett—slim, sleek, lithe in his evening clothes—appeared with a little fair girl in pink chiffon. The woman reached across the table and put one pudgy, jeweled hand on Terry's arm. "He'll be through in ten minutes. Now listen to me. I left Jim four years ago, and there hasn't been a minute since then, day or night, when I wouldn't have crawled back on my hands and knees if I could. But I couldn't. He wouldn't have me now. How could he? How do I know you've quarreled? I can see it in your eyes. They look just the way mine have felt for four years, that's how. I met up with this boy, and there wasn't anybody to do the turn for me that I'm trying to do for you. Now get this. I left Jim because when he ate corn on the cob he always closed his eyes and it drove me wild. Don't laugh."

"I'm not laughing," said Terry.

"Women are like that. One night—we was playing Fond du Lac; I remember just as plain—we was eating supper, and Jim reached for one of those big yellow ears, and buttered and salted it, and me kind of hanging on to the edge of the table with my nails. Seemed to me if he shut his eyes when he put his teeth into that ear of corn I'd scream. And he did. And I screamed. And that's all."

They sat staring at her with a wide-eyed stare, like a sleep walker. Then she wet her lips, slowly. "But that's almost the very—"

"Kid, go on back home. I don't know whether it's too late or not, but go anyway. If you've lost him I suppose it ain't any more than you deserve, but I hope to God you don't get your desserts this time. He's almost through. If he sees you going he can't quit in the middle of his song to stop you. He'll know I put you wise, and he'll probably half kill me for it. But it's worth it. You get!"

And Terry—dazed, shaking, but grateful—fled. Down the noisy aisle, up the stairs, to the street. Back to her rooming-house. Out again, with her suitcase, and into the right railroad station somehow, at last. Not another train for Wetona until midnight.

The hands of the station clock seemed fixed and immovable. The hour between 11 and 12 was endless. She was on the train. It was almost morning. It was morning. Dawn was breaking. She was home! She had the house key clutched tightly in her hand long before she turned Schroeder's corner. Suppose he had come home! Suppose he had jumped a town and come home ahead of his schedule. They had quarreled once before, and he had done that.

Up the front steps. Into the house. Not a sound. She stood there a moment in the early morning half-light. She peered into the dining-room. The table, with its breakfast debris, was as she had left it. She was home. She was safe. She ran up the stairs, got out of her clothes and into crisp gingham morning things. She flung open windows everywhere. Downstairs once more she plunged into an orgy of cleaning. By 8 o'clock she had done the work that would ordinarily have taken until noon. The house was shining, orderly, and redolent of soapsuds.

During all this time she had been listening, listening, with her subconscious ear. And then, at 8 o'clock, it came. The rattle of a key in the lock. The boom of the front door. Firm footsteps.

He did not go to meet her, and she did not go to meet him. They came together and were in each others' arms. She was weeping.

"Now now, old girl. What's there to cry about? Don't honey; don't. It's all right."

She raised her head then to look at him. How fresh, and rosy, and big he seemed, after that little sallow, yellow restaurant rat.

"How did you get here? How did you happen——?"

"Jumped all the way from Ashland. Couldn't get a sleeper, so I sat up all night. I had to come back and square things with you, Terry. My mind just wasn't on my work. I kept thinking how I'd talked—how I'd talked——"

"Oh, Orville, don't! I can't bear——Have you had your breakfast?"

"Why, no. The train was an hour late. You know that Ashland train."

But she was out of his arms and making for the kitchen. "You go and clean up. I'll have hot biscuits and everything in fifteen minutes. You poor boy. No breakfast!"

She made good her promise. It could not have been more than twenty minutes later when he was buttering his third feathery, golden brown biscuit. But she had eaten nothing. She watched him, and listened, and again her eyes were somber, but for a different reason. He broke open his egg. His elbow came up just a fraction of an inch. Then he remembered, and flushed like a schoolboy, and brought it down again, carefully. And at that she gave a little tremulous cry, and rushed around the table to him.

"Oh, Orville!" She took the offending elbow in her two arms, and bent and kissed the rough coat sleeve.

"Why, Terry! Don't honey. Don't!"

"I've got something to tell you. There's something you've got to know."

"Yes, I know it, Terry. I knew you'd out with it, pretty soon, if I just waited."

She lifted an amazed face from his shoulder then and stared at him. "But how could you know? You couldn't. How could you?"

He patted her shoulder then, gently. "I can always tell. When you have something on your mind you always take up a spoon of coffee, and look at it, and kind of joggle it back and forth in the spoon, and dribble it back into the cup again, without once tasting it. It used to get me nervous when we first married watching you. But now I know it just means you're worried about something, and I wait, and pretty soon——"

"Oh, Orville!" she cried, then. "Oh, Orville!"

"Now, Terry. Just spill it, hon. Just spill it to daddy. And you'll feel better."

KABUL.

A Land that is Not at All Healthy to Live in.

On the northwest frontier there is a proverb that may be translated thus: "The tiger and the Afghan are blood brothers."

My shikari, on being appealed to for an explanation, said: "The tiger will steal the child from its sleeping mother's arms when the camp fires burn low, and the Afghan will take one's rifle from beneath the mat one is sleeping on."

"Surely one always removes the bolt?"

The shikari smiled. "If the mother cries aloud the tiger slays her. If the sahib hides the bolt the Afghan cuts him up to find it."

That gives a picture true to life of the men Habibullah, the late Amir, ruled, and by whom he was murdered recently in his camp, pitched amid the gorgeous grandeur of the Laghman Valley.

Intrigues, feuds and a rifle are the stock in trade of the Afghan. "An eye for an eye" is the law of the land, and every man is judge, jury and executioner.

An offense is committed. The offended one pays an official visit armed to the teeth. By the law a life is forfeit; but, as the offended is the law, he may, if he so cares, present an alternative—so many fat-tailed sheep, plus a few goats, plus the household goods of the offender.

Hobson's choice with a vengeance!

Is this law a detterent; does it lead to morality and a model code of life? No one in Kabul pretends that it does.

Kabul is not a healthy place to live in for reasons other than these. Its sanitation is as primitive as its law. Yet Habibullah imported some Scottish engineers to light his palace with electricity. But Habibullah had come under the influence of Occidental enlightenment, as witness his passion for music and his craze for motor cars.

Now, to the raw Afghan anything that comes from beyond his mountains is taboo. He fears it, and what he fears he destroys.

A Kabuli who had been as far as Calcutta for trading purposes developed a taste for painting. He came home with artists' materials and sat down in his mud hut to sketch. He drew a woman in native dress. His wife gazed on the picture. Then she brought her brother to inspect the work.

She pointed to the face. The husband had given his subject a pale face; he had seen white women on his travels.

The wife's brother, a good Kabuli, hacked the canvas and the artist into little pieces.

The artist's wife agreed that it was better so.

And that's Kabul.—["B. B." in London Mail.

FAMILIES STARVING IN RICH OIL LANDS.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

BUZEU (Rumania) June 23.—(By mail.) Here in the midst of one of the world's richest oil fields, people have been actually starving.

Before the war this part of Rumania produced big fortunes in oil, being one of the greatest sources of European supply. Today its wells are in ruins and the people are destitute. The invading armies requisitioned everything that could be pried loose and transported, paralyzing one of the wealthiest industries in the Balkans.

Workers for the American Red Cross, which is distributing relief in the form of foods and medicines throughout the country, have found people eating bread made of leaves, twigs and bark from trees. People were bartering the coats off their backs for small portions of corn and coarse bran. In one place the relief workers found a small local hospital in which the patients slept on boards with no mattress and little covering. At one home they found five fatherless children, the oldest only 9 years of age, cooking a meal of tree bark and bran, while the mother was out at work in the fields.

"Typhus is prevalent and there is an increasing amount of smallpox," says one American woman's report. "There is no doctor nor medicines in this village and absolutely no way of taking care of the sick. In another village which I visited the entire population of 500 persons was ill with some obscure form of contagious disease."

BELGIANS RESENT HUNS' FLAG CHOI

HEROIC NATION INSISTS USE OF BLACK, YELLOW A RED BELONGS TO IT.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENC

BRUSSELS, June 20.—(By Belgian patriotic societies are ing to take action to prevent German republic from adopting Belgian national colors, black, low and red, for its flag. Intense dignation is manifestd, and is a bit heightened by the plan the colors in the new German blem will be disposed of horiz instead of vertically.

It is generally supposed that Belgian colors of today were ch by the patriots in 1830, but revolutionists of that year took for themselves the yellow and red which had been endary in Flanders and the bant since the Middle Ages.

The princes of Flanders bore their arms a black lion on a of gold, and those of Brabant golden lion on a field of black, trappings of both were red. the thirteenth century, there the Belgian colors have been yellow and red.

An argument against the use the colors by the Germans is the Belgians have actually emp the black, yellow and red hori tally in their emblems—notably their mercantile flags—so they sider they still have a priority that disposition of the colors as as the vertical used. The horiz bars were adopted by the pat who overthrew the Austrians 1789. In 1830, the first flag from the Hotel de Ville in Br sels was the horizontal-barred yellow and red.

The Belgians scorn the plea the Germans that they have right to use the colors becau their use by the ancient Germ Empire, of which Austria was center. They assert that the co sion resulting from the em ment by Germany as well as gium of the black, yellow and would be embarrassing to the na which had fought four years to its colors unsullied.

The People and Their Troubles

WOMAN-- MAN--

Did YOU Marry the Right Man? Did YOU Marry the Right Woman?

BY. JANE DIXON.

V.—SHOULD THE WIFE HAVE CONTROL OF THE SAVINGS?

Is the wife better qualified to have charge of the rainy-day fund than the husband?

JANE DIXON

Which of the marriage partners is going to take care of the extra cash, left over from everyday living expenses and piled up against the time when the [illegible] shall be going down the western horizon of life toward the setting sun? It is highly important, this question of savings-keeper.

On it hinges that peace and content without which life's winter must be a chill and dreary season. Age deserves its Indian summer. The time when the harvester leans back, rests his weary body and enjoys the fruits of his labors.

If he has labored well and faithfully, if he has planted, tended, reaped, stored, his Indian summer must be fragrant as the luscious grape so lately purpling in the vineyard.

If he has wasted, if he has neglected the seeding season to pursue the jade pleasure, if he has been indulging the call of the senses while tares and thistles smothered farms and fields, if he has dissipated the harvest time in riotous living, his Indian summer must be empty as the corn husk rotting on the stalk.

Who, then, shall be the one to stock up life's larder against the day when snowdrifts and wintry winds shall prevent the harvester reaping? Shall it be the wife?

Why not, if the wife happens to be a real helpmate?

Any harvester will tell you he can gather in the grain much faster with a capable helper than if he harvests alone.

With his strong right arm he swings the scythe.

The heavy-headed yellow grain falls.

If the cutter is fortunate he need not stop to gather the grain in sheaves and bind it with twine.

He has a helper, a faithful worker, who does the binding and who does the best to keep pace with the scythe man.

There is nothing so sad than to see two partners, husband and wife, who have plenty and to spare all their lives until they reach the age where they are no longer able to produce.

Then, at the very time they should be leaning back, hand in hand, enjoying the peace and plenty which come of work well done, they are thrown on the charity of their children, or worse, on the sufferance of society.

It is a fact the wife is more liable to be influenced in saving through dread of an empty old age than the husband.

For this reason she may be depended on to guard the carefully-hoarded surplus harvest more reliably than her mate.

Have you ever seen a wife worthy the name who willingly sat by while her husband scattered his earnings without rhyme or reason?

Comedy artists are forever ragging the wife who sends her husband to the telephone or to retrieve an imaginary something from his coat in the check room just before the waiter presents the check. Then, of course, the other woman's husband gets the bad news.

If the other woman is a wife running true to form, she will spend the rest of her life trying to get even.

In the perfect matrimonial equation, where both partners have married for love and the wife looks after the making of a home while the husband takes care of making money, the wife seems destined by nature to be the saver.

Especially is this the case where there are children.

Mother instinct safeguards the [illegible]

She wants her birdlings to have as many things and as nice as the other birdlings with whom they will [illegible]

Girlie must have the prettiest [illegible]

Sonny must go to school, to college, if possible.

All this takes money.

It is doubtful if there is one mother in a thousand who will deliberately squander the surplus of the family income in pursuit of her own pleasure and leave the future of her boys and girls to take care of itself.

Such a mother is unworthy the name.

Not only should such surplus be kept away from her, but the husband and father should see to it she has barely enough to meet the daily needs.

There is no sin in all the marital calendar more shameful than selfishness.

A point in favor of the wife as the family comptroller of currency—and a very important point, too—is the fact she is master of the art of counting small change.

To a woman a dime is 10 cents. To most men it is merely "chicken feed."

When a man takes account of his bankroll, he seldom includes the "sinkers" in his trousers pocket.

When a woman totals up, she goes the entire route from an opulent yellowback to a superfluous Canadian quarter.

Husbands imagine they must save in terms of five and ten dollars.

Wives know 5 and 10 cents are better than nothing.

No better example occurs at the moment than the case of a wife who [illegible] a 10-cent bargain with her husband.

"We haven't put anything aside after awhile, dear," she said. This after an expensive evening, for, with her woman's instinct, wife was beginning to be a bit uneasy as to futures.

"No," was the nonchalant reply. "Plenty of time for that. Let's enjoy ourselves while we're young."

"Yes, let's," laughed partner wife. "But I was just thinking it might not bother us much to cut out the dimes. I'll bet we would never miss them. You can save all the dimes you get. I'll save all I get. We'll put them in a dime bank and every time it gets full I'll take it to the savings bank for safe keeping. It would be fun to see how much we could really save that way. Then, if we wanted to spend it for something at the end of the year, we could."

"Not a bad idea," agreed the husband. "You get the dime collector and we'll try it out."

The average at the end of the first year was $150, a trifle more than four dimes a day.

At first, the firm talked of spending it on a little pleasure trip to Atlantic City, which happened to be no very great distance. But when it came to the issue, they found they could not treat it thus lightly. They had coddled and cared for the dime fund so long it was like a member of the family.

The next year the wife said nothing, but to the mutual dime saving she added a separate fund of nickels. The nest egg was growing so fast, building became a fascinating occupation.

Husband began asking for dimes when he had change coming to him. Any time a dime appeared in his life it was greeted as an old friend, taken home and given the hospitality of the place.

In three years the dime fund grew to $1000.

The $1000 paid the first installment on a home with a kitchen garden back of it, wide green stretches to port and starboard, and a comfortable slope of lawn fore.

Should the wife have control of the savings?

By all means, if she understands control.

By all means, if she is a wife with the true womanly instincts—the safeguarding of her home and her own.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Q. How are soundings made to ascertain the depth of the ocean? What is its greatest depth? D.F.G.

A. A very fine steel piano wire is used in making ocean soundings. The ocean at its deepest point as far as known is 31,614 feet, about six miles deep. This hole in the ocean is near the Island of Guam. A wire must be very fine and very strong to support six miles of itself in making these soundings.

Q. Have outside parties ever possessed any interest in Marshall Field & Co., of Chicago? R.S.V.

A. The only persons who have ever owned any stock in this firm outside of the founder are Stanley Field, John G. Shedd, James Simpson and the employees of the firm.

Q. Which State has the greatest number of holidays? How many have Massachusetts and Rhode Island? M.M.A.

A. Louisiana has twelve legal holidays with addition of each Saturday afternoon which is the largest number for any State. Massachusetts has nine holidays and Rhode Island ten.

Q. What is the origin of Dixie as applied to the South? G. A. B.

A. The term originated in New York where a certain man named Dixie owned a large number of slaves. When the slaves were forced to live in the north they looked upon their old home as a paradise which they celebrated in their songs. They gradually began to call their southern home Dixie Land and, as such, the South became known among the whites and negroes.

Q. What is the difference between limited and incorporated when applied to a business? O. M.

A. A limited company is one in which the liability of each share holder is limited to the amount of his stock or share while an incorporated company is one which has been formed into a corporation and recognized by law as having special functions, rights, duties and liabilities.

Q.: Please explain the origin of the word "echo?" Q.K.D.

A. Mythology tells us that Echo was a nymph who loved Narcissus. He died and she pined away until nothing remained of her but her voice, which inherited her immortality and repeated every sound that reached it all over the world. The phenomenon took its name from this nymph.

WHERE THE SPIKE WENT.

Answering a question as to what became of the gold spike that was driven into the last rail laid in building the Union Pacific Railroad on its completion in 1869, a subscriber writes: "It was first photographed, and then melted up and recast into very small spikes about 15-16ths of an inch long, and they were distributed to the more prominent railroad men present. Among the recipients was my father, now deceased, from whom I received one of the photographs mentioned and a miniature gold spike. There are probably very few of these now in existence. The original spike was full size and engraved with the officers' names and titles. The miniature was engraved with the date, 'May 10, 1869,' and the words: 'Last spike of the Pacific Railway,' and 'Presented by D. Hewes.'"—[Outlook.

Pathetic Figures——

LETTERS TO "THE TIMES."

Beats Old H.C.L.

LOS ANGELES, July 26.—[Mr. Editor or Paragrapher, or Whatever You Call Yourself:] I read your article in today's Times on the high cost of living. I am no writer—of course you know that—but I thought I would tell you that I know it also. You say in your article that a dinner for five would cost about $2. Now if you want to educate the folks how to economise, why don't you give them the right dope?

I had a fine dinner today and it cost me only 9 cents. How is that you say—carrots, 1 cent; spuds, 2 cents; butter, 3 cents; bread, 2 cents; onion, one-half cent; lard, one-half cent—all I could eat. Yesterday I had string beans, spuds, bread and butter, total 10 cents. All this is good food and is nourishing. I am 70 years of age and look and feel as if I was 55. I am never sick if I confine myself to this diet and no one else would be sick if they would live like me.

The American people eat too much and not the right kind of food. We could and should do without meat, sugar, coffee, chocolate, tea and cocoa. Eat very little fat and fruit—no nourishment in fruit and it is poison to most people. Meat is not as harmful as sugar. Come and see me some time, I have a few pointers for you.

The people have it in their power to reduce prices. All they have to do is to practice a little self-denial and boycott one article after another—eat no meat for a month and it will drop. The people can't do this without the assistance of the newspapers and the papers are not going to advise the people not to buy, thereby killing the goose that lays the golden eggs.

What the Future Holds.

LOS ANGELES, July 29.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Under the heading "Sunday" in your issue of September 22, 1918, you say among other things, "Because people are not of one mind, never were, and probably never will be, Sunday will always be more or less a subject for argument."

You no doubt made an argument for the now generally accepted day of rest styled as Sunday. The devil has recently instituted another holiday, Saturday, which in many places is a full holiday and in a great many more is generally accepted as a half-holiday. By and by when machinery becomes more perfectly developed the human race will have one whooping holiday. However that will be only when the race will have learned that "Wisdom is better than weapons of war"—Eccl. ix:18.

When religion will have become as exact as mathematics then things human will be different. Now wouldn't it be a doggone shame if the people as a whole should "fall for it?" "One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind."—Romans, xiv:5.

Of course, that would take the conceit out of autocratic ministers, alias pastors, priests, clergy, and a few editorial writers who are daily telling people where to head in at. Of course, Los Angeles, dear Los Angeles, does not have such animals.

Say, kiddo, you may be interested in knowing that Mooney is going to be liberated and that the pressure is coming from the Bolsheviki. Then too, don't forget this: Bolsheviki are observing what is going on down below the line among the dark-skinned folk, the Mexicans. You and your co-workers may succeed in decieving some of the people all of the time by your deceptive scare headings, red ink, etc., but we too have our hands on the press, and by the eternal your damnable lies are going to be exposed. Some of the Bolsheviki are in favor of making lying punishable by what the civil law now recognizes is due to those who commit murder.

Should that be enforced we think a few editors would cash in to the tune of "twenty-three." We are not worried, we have the situation well in hand and we mean to keep it. So trot along Little Willie Johnson, there will be a chalk line for you to walk when the Bolsheviki takes control in, not only Los Angeles, but in the national capital.

LOS ANGELES, July 27.—[To the Editor of The Times:] "Yes, the north of Ireland is under the same rule as the south of Ireland, i.e.: the British government. To explain the fact that the north is satisfied with British rule, while the south is dissatisfied, would require a volume, several volumes, in fact, going into the great subjects of race, religion, politics and a whole lot of other things."

This is a quotation from the Los Angeles Examiner of May 24, 1916. I challenge the Examiner, which devotes so much space to publishing the rantings of De Valera (what a typical Irish name) and his followers, to explain in its columns why these things are so and why Ulster is so much more prosperous than her sister provinces.

Pat McGill's two books, "The Rat Pit" and "Children of the Dead End," will explain these things in part to those who want to know, and admire fair play. "Priests and People in Ireland," by Michael J. McCarthy, indexed in the Central Los Angeles Public Library under No. 914:15:14, would also throw much light on the subject of Ireland as it is, were it not for the fact that this volume has been removed from the shelves by some person or persons unknown. Why? Because the truth is fatal to the Sinn Fein agitators.

A Seafaring Man.

BANNING, May 20. — [To the Editor of The Times:] I see in Sunday's Times an article in the column headed "The Lancer" relating to the Allies' "gratitude" to us for stopping the war, etc. I myself am a seaman by profession and have done various trips last year to Bordeaux, Brest, St. Nazaire, Marseilles and Genoa, Italy—when we arrived in England—Plymouth or Southampton—of course we got shore leave and naturally we went to have our 'arf and 'arf (favorite beverage of King George five times, I believe)—no sooner had we entered (there were four of us) than muttered comments like "bleeding Yanks" and "blooming swankers" seemed to me and friends to be the order of the evening—then one little rat-faced cockney could stand our "passive indifference and silence of contempt" attitude no longer. So he "buts in" with, "I suppose you bleeding blighters of Yanks can stop this blooming war, eh?" So our junior engineer friend from Chicago politely tells him he had guessed it first time, and furthermore he also told him how many of his rat-faced cockney countrymen's lives we would save. I think he said a million. However, a million of these birds more or less doesn't matter. So one thing led to another—result—some of these stiffs will be on a milk diet on account of broken jaws, etc.—cry outside as we left: "Stop! In the name of the King." But we decided we had business elsewhere. So, that is our noble ally. No wonder the Mayflower sailed away from the shores of "Merrie England." The "merrie" part is beyond me. I never saw anything "merrie" there.

France was just the same, as you are well aware, for overcharging our men. If all the money our boys were overcharged was shoved in a bank, it would pay off the French war debt and then some. They sure are a lovely bunch of pirates all right. These are the stiffs our boys fought for. "So this, then, is human gratitude," and now they "run us down," after we saved their dirty old clay pit, France, for them. Truly, they are a noble ally. In Genoa it was practically the same, only some of our Newark (N. J.) gunners were short of cash and United Cigar Store coupons got mixed up with their bills that they had left. Two days after a regular Piave was pulled off on the main street, as the "gang" happened to meet the waiter and some of his friends. The monkey tamers are still wondering where all the fists came from. Truly, they figured it was a sad world to live in.

Last October I left 'Frisco on a tub called the Karon, belonging to Wellington, N. Z. In Wellington and all New Zealand, for that matter, they are positive that they won the war. Can you beat it? I told one fellow that we employed their army for cooks, etc., which made him peeved. Then the usual British slang came up. "I suppose you Yanks won the bleeding war?" However, one feels sorry for the ignorance of these misguided devils. So I put it down to their ignorance and let it go at that. Then at Christmas I got the flu for about two months and came back on the Moana, February 28, of this year. And here I am with bronchial troubles and maybe incipient T. B.—an aftereffect of said epidemic. That's because I went away on a British ship to New Zealand, and now, as the theosophists say, is Karma time for me.

Elias Howe Centenary.

The centenary of the birth of Elias Howe, the modest Yankee who invented the sewing machine, took place on June 9. There was no extended observance of the day, yet it was Howe who took a good deal of the drudgery out of the lives of millions of American women. He also increased the power of his fellow men to produce garments and other material that formerly needed the patient handwork of individuals.

But it is interesting to observe, in connection with this anniversary, that the Savannah News undertakes the rather hopeless task of trying to convince its readers that it was not Howe, but a Georgian, Francis R. Goulding, who constructed and operated the first sewing machine. This paper says that this man, a Presbyterian preacher living in Liberty county, married a Savannah girl and then began work on a sewing machine in order that he might save his fair wife much hard work. Alleging this was long before Howe patented his machine, and also that Goulding never patented his, they try to show his motives were purely altruistic and not commercial.

It all sounds good, but it will take considerable "space" in the Georgia newspapers to convince the world that Goulding takes the prize.—[Hartford Courant.

DOROTHY DIX TALKS

December and May.

BY DOROTHY DIX.

A woman who is fair and forty asks my advice about marrying a youth who is twenty years her junior and who, she assures me, loves her for herself alone and is entirely uninfluenced by her ample fortune.

Personally, my opinion is that young husbands are too much trouble. They are not worth the price one has to pay for them.

Granting the right of every woman to indulge her own taste in matrimony—no matter how bizarre—still, a lady wedding a man twenty years her junior is always a spectacle of such rash and reckless daring that it is bound to challenge the attention of the thoughtful.

She takes upon her poor, stooped, middle-aged shoulders all of the multitudious burdens of matrimony that ordinary women have to bear, and then some. She adds plus to all the doubts and difficulties of the husband problem.

To begin with, it is much easier, as everybody knows, to catch a husband than it is to keep him after you get him. There are animals you can never be sure that you have thoroughly domesticated until after they are dead. Men belong to this genus, and ladies past forty seldom have the magnetic personality, the alertness of movement, and the gay spirits that fit them to be husband tamers.

If the wife who undertakes to keep a husband fascinated with her and nailed to his own fireside, has her job cut out for her, even when time fights on her side, the woman who has twenty years arrayed against her, has a task that makes the labors of Hercules look like child's play.

Aside from the task of keeping the young husband from getting lost, strayed, or stolen, and satisfied to bear his mama company instead of running off to play with the other kids, one is appalled at the very thought of the burdens that the elderly wife of a young man assumes. Chief among these is the curse of perpetual youth, which she wishes upon herself. She can never grow old. She doesn't dare to. She is doomed to a sort of canned girlhood.

The privilege of growing old, with all its perquisites, is one that we do not sufficiently appreciate. From this blessing the old wife of the young man is forever debarred.

She can never hope to enjoy that luxurious Indian summer which is the most delightful season of a woman's life, when she lets out her stays, smashes her hair dye bottles, pitches her rouge pot out of the window and abandons herself to being frankly middle-aged, and gray-haired, and fat, and no better looking than God made her, or younger than the record in the family Bible.

Another burden that the elderly wife assumes is amusing the young husband. He must be diverted. He must be kept interested to keep him satisfied, and the old wife is confronted with the awful problem of whether it is better to risk him with a pretty girl of his own age, or tread the measure with him herself.

Of course, the latter course is the less dangerous expedient, but, alas, after 40, we are no longer so young as we once were. We don't take the same interest in views from high points that we did when we had less avoirdupois, and more breath. We see more rheumatism than romance in watching the moon rising over the water in damp places. We begin to appreciate the point of view of the orientals, who hire other people to do their dancing for them.

Nor do these burdens end the load that the elderly wife of a boy husband voluntarily shoulders. She has to be eternally explaining why she did it. The reason ordinary husband and wife married each other is a conundrum so deep and inscrutible to the onlooker that he gives it up without hazarding a guess. But when an apparently sane and sensible middle-aged woman turns cradle snatcher, and kidnaps a boy for a husband, it piques the popular curiosity.

It is a psychological problem that every beholder tries to solve, and nobody ever does solve it, so it is continually put up to the bride to answer—a proceeding which is very apt to get upon her nerves.

Certainly the middle-aged woman who marries a young boy pays a high price for her pet, and there is only one kind of woman who should undertake such a foolhardy speculation, and that is a woman who has no jealousy in her system, who possesses a large fund of humor, and who has a deep and well-filled pocketbook on which she has a death clutch.

A woman who expects to get any happiness out of such a marriage must be able to see her boy husband dancing and chatting, and playing love games with pretty young girls, without being torn into shreads by the green-eyed monster, and wondering if he is not contrasting her embonpoint with their slimness, her staid matter-of-fact conversation with their chatter, her middle-aged heaviness with their high spirits.

She must be able to smile instead of gnash her teeth when people mistake her husband for her son. Above all, she must have enough sense to keep her money in her own hands and to realize that her chief charm is a golden one, and that her husband will never grow tired of her as long as she is the source from which all blessings flow. For it is most curious that boys never fall in love with impecunious ladies, or marry women old enough to be their mothers, unless mother's name is good on a check.

Nor should the [illegible] object. Romance is a gift that the gods bestow only on the young. When we grow old, we have to buy it. And it is up to the middle-aged woman to decide if the brand she buys with her young husband is worth the price.

EXHIBITOR'S VIEWS ON FILM PRODUCING.

J. A. QUINN WRITES WHAT HE THINKS OF SYSTEM AND PROPOSED CHANGES.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 2.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I deem it incumbent upon me to state the reasons that prompted me to go to New York and assert that the movie-producing system as it is now conducted is the biggest joke in the world. Now, as a matter of positive fact, the business improved till about four years ago, when we had such reliable production companies as the Biograph and Vitagraph organizations, which made a specialty of producing one and two-reel features, and were delivering better stories, more sincerely and convincingly explained in one and two reels than they are now telling in five and eight reels. The casts in the good old days were selected principally on their ability to fit and portray the various parts and not as at present, on the strength of flambuoyancy and—shall I say it?—quack advertising. These people had to work for a living and made good immediately or someone would shortly be found to take their places. The result of all this was sincere pictures, without the present-day padding and minus all the bunk of our present system. In those days, the so-called trust, known as the General Film Company, to a great extent controlled the situation by acting as a sort of a clearing house for the various companies known as the Biograph, Vitagraph, Lubin, Essanay, Selig, Kleine, Edison, Pathe and several others.

At that time, there were no manufactured billboard stars, no stealing of help, no contract-jumping, four-flushing, etc. Producers did not bid against each other and force cheap ordinary actors' salaries to abnormal height. There were no producers' and directors' pets, drawing fancy salaries and who had the happy knack of "never delivering the goods." No lying and misrepresentative advertisements like those of today were present then. Instead we had a weekly output of about sixty reels of pictures to select from, composed of dramas, comedies and scenic and educational subjects.

An exhibitor who was a showman could select a well-balanced programme and give his audiences what they craved and will always want, namely, "a laugh and a tear," and still be able to give a consistently good average programme at a normal price, week in and week out, and the result was a steady, continuous patronage and best of all, pleased audiences. The exhibitor could always gauge his business closely, from day to day and week to week, according to the season of the year.

Now let us review what has happened, since the General Film Company was forced out of business by some of the very independent companies that have caused the exhibitor lately so much blood-sweating and heartache.

Simultaneously with the squelching of the General Film Company began the wild era of "hog eat hog" method that has grown to an alarming extent ever since.

Fortune after fortune was, and is now being, burned up by the different independent producers in their present attempt to bunk the public and exhibitors into believing that each one was or is greater than the other. Naturally, the former and ofttimes the producers themselves have in the long run been the actual sufferers, while the insipid, little, empty-headed nonentities in slit skirts and many men who would be termed in present-day slang "second rate ham actors" watched their salaries soar to the four-figure mark when, as a matter of fact, they would have been highly paid, had they received as a maximum $35 a week. That class have been enabled to gad about in high-powered machines, delighting to be featured at roadhouses, and to invariably hold a spotlight in all gatherings, while really deserving actors and actresses, and yes, a majority of the exhibitors were glad to accept accommodation in a street car, or if not this, walk home. You know and I know, that the exhibitors, and the public, are the paymasters, and the latter has been nauseated with the false attributes that these film-microbes assume. The grafters are not all actors, for some of the so-called supervisors, technical directors, scenario writers and general sycophantic gangsters who draw salaries in these studios are in the same class. They have given the exhibitors not a little grief and wholly disgusted the public.

There are a few screen celebrities who are justly entitled to fame; off the screen they are as capable and brainy as the public detect them in the pictures. Naturally, personality is the highest essential of the qualifications of an artist of this type.

The policy of the Motion-Picture and Theatrical Co-operative Association will be to support all those on the screen who display evidence of having gray matter, ability and good sense; we will help them to get the big salaries if they in turn are capable of becoming actual box-office attractions, but we are certainly going after the scalps of the inefficients.

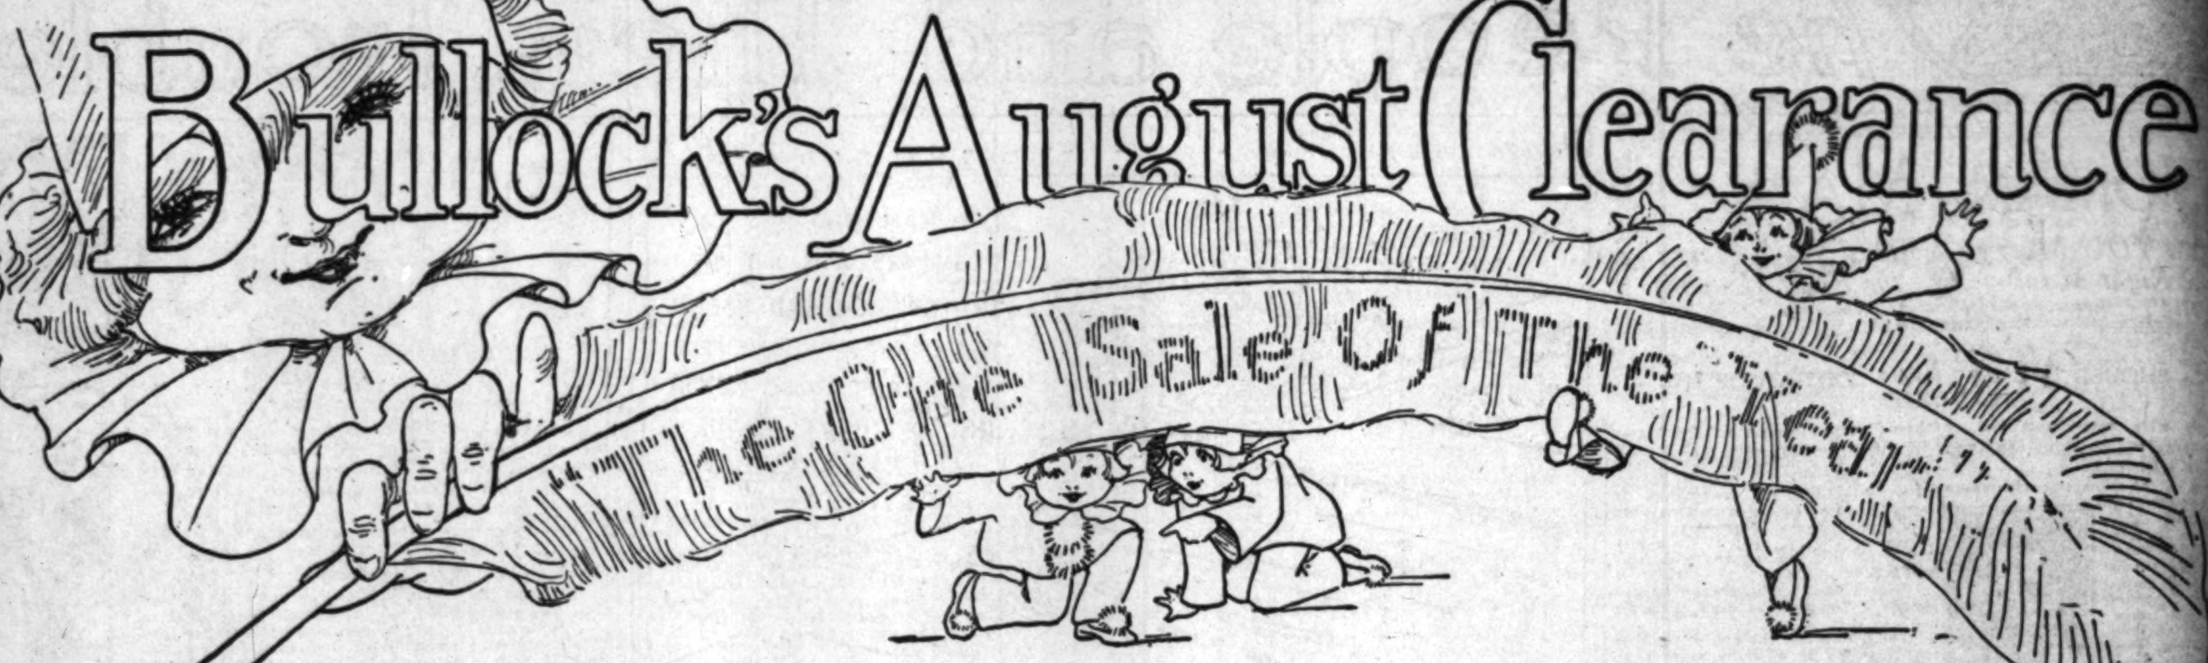
There is not one producer or director in the moving-picture industry today who does not need supervision, and we stand ready to take three of any of their pictures which they have made in rotation and before a representative committee show where the pictures can be greatly improved by cutting, re-editing, recasting, and in most cases, entire reconstruction.

We intend to prove before very long by a means that will be very far-reaching, that the best literary people, artists and business people will be getting a square deal in our demonstrated regime of the near future. Our method of reforming the industry will force the present readers to recognize us, and their failure to do so will result in their elimination.

Our association will embrace in its membership producers, exhibitors, authors, artists and patrons, and no picture will be released under its seal which has not been passed upon by a committee made up of these factors.

It will open the gates of motion-picturedom to those whose artistry or natural talents entitle them to places in the various occupations of producers, writers, directors, actors and actresses in the silent drama. It aims to treat honestly with authors in protecting their rights. All of its meetings will be open to the public. In short, the association has decided that the fake star must go; waste must be stopped; lying advertising must end; extravagance must be curbed, and the entire industry be so improved that we will be able to say to the public, "Here is your better picture."

J. A. QUINN.



The First Monday!

—Commencing the first complete week of BULLOCK'S AUGUST CLEARANCE of 1919, this FIRST MONDAY may be well regarded as an important day—

—An Achievement — and an Institution, Bullock's August Clearance — A "More Than Sale" if you please—

—An idea and An Ideal—represented and manifested in a compelling merchandise and value demonstration through which Bullock's is resolved to still more firmly cement old friendships and to make new friends in such "a friendship way" that soon one may call them "old" friends too—

—Every section of the Store, imbued with the Spirit of Bullock's, and maintaining a strict regard for the Bullock Ideal, rises to this important occasion with enthusiasm born of past successes—

—An "Institution"—as inexorably as the Calendar indicates the approach of August, so surely it finds a large proportion of Southern California's people thinking of—and preparing to participate in "The One Sale of the Year."

—An Institution—and an Achievement—this year the greatest August achievement in Bullock's history—

—Yes! Monday will be

An Important Monday

—because of the Treasure that belongs to this particular Monday and the lack of restraint that will mark its distribution—And because so many know and have marked this very Monday for their own—

—There will be Suits, yes (Suits worthy emphatic emphasis—as concerns their style and workmanship, as well as price)—There will be Dresses and Coats and Skirts, worthy your concentrated and undivided Thought—There will be Linens and Cottons, Silks and Woolens, Laces and Trimmings seemingly without end—and all so striking that those the least familiar with conditions and present valuings can hardly fail to understand and profit as the result of their regard—

—There will be Jewelry, Silverware, Gloves, Hosiery, Shoes, Handbags, Handkerchiefs, Ribbons, Neckwear, Notions, Toilet Goods in plentiful array—Silk Underwear, Art Needlework, Gifts of China and of Glass— —And Men's Furnishings without reproach (shirts, ties, underwear, hosiery, etc., under the Flags of Clearance and Quality at once)—For Bullock standards of character and service have ever been "On guard"—

—The Basement Store is "en masse" with savings—as are the Children's sections and those for Boys and Girls on the fourth floor—

—While if one needs Home Furnishings, one should not hesitate but come at once to the Sixth and Seventh floors—

—And so, Monday, will be an Important day in this Important August—because of the preparations that have been made; because of the determination and continued effort and conquered difficulties that have brought merchandise and values to Bullock's and every section of the store—to supplement the clearances of Bullock's own stocks—even as conditions are repeating "Impossible!" "It can't be done!"—even as orders are being placed and curtailed and refused at higher prices, for many of these very items that will be put forward in August, some for the first time, Monday—

—Circumstances have indeed combined to make this Bullock August Clearance greater than it might have been, more vital in its interests than any previous Bullock August Clearance has been—

—So do not underestimate but plan to come on Monday—

—It is deemed advisable to repeat that Dealers need not expect to participate in the Offerings presented by "The One Sale of the Year"—and Right is reserved to limit purchases and to refuse Telephone and Mail Orders.

The coming of the Pacific Fleet to the western seaboard will be the most significant single event in the annals of Pacific Coast history. The entire American Navy has been cut in half and 201 war vessels are to be a permanent formidable bulwark for the protection of American interests in western waters. The Pacific Fleet is comprised of the newest and most powerful naval fortresses in the world. Many of the swiftest vessels afloat are part of it. Others are armed with guns more powerful than any that have ever before been mounted on dreadnaughts and battle cruisers.

In comparison to the Pacific Fleet, the fleet that was piloted around the world by Admiral "Fighting Bob" Evans in 1907 and 1908 is insignificant. A fair idea of the important position the Pacific fleet takes among the powerful fleets of the world may be had in comparing the battleship New Mexico, Admiral Rodman's electrically driven flagship and the latest addition to the American navy, with the old battleship Oregon, which was the largest ship of the navy at the time of the Spanish-American War.

The Oregon could fire a broadside of steel projectiles weighing 5660 pounds. A broadside from the New Mexico type of vessel with its fourteen-inch guns would weigh 17,500 pounds. The dreadnaughts and battle cruisers now under construction will be mounted with sixteen-inch guns. The broadside from the future battleships will weigh a total of 25,200 pounds, more than four times the size of an Oregon broadside.

The largest guns of Admiral Evans's fleet were twelve inches. The greatest number of these guns on any single ship were four. The largest ships of Admiral Rodman's Pacific Fleet are mounted with twelve fourteen-inch guns. The fleet of ten years ago would now be helpless against even a small part of the Pacific Fleet, for the guns in Admiral Evans's fleet were not effective at a range greater than 10,000 yards, while Admiral Rodman's guns are effective at 22,000 yards.

Up to the coming of the Pacific Fleet the Japanese Navy has been by far the strongest in Pacific waters. Following is a table of comparison between these two mighty fleets:

Pacific Fleet		Japanese Fleet
14	Battleships	13
11	Cruisers	30
108	Destroyers	119
13	Submarines	17
55	Miscellaneous ships
201	Total	179

On the face of these figures the Japanese fleet is slightly the stronger but naval experts say that the greater number of cruisers is overbalanced by the more modern character of our vessels and armament.

One of the great accomplishments of the American Navy during the world war was the construction of naval fourteen-inch mountings on railway carriages. These guns were the strongest weapons used in battering down the Metz fortresses in the St. Mihiel salient. These guns, which are now being used on several battleships of the Pacific Fleet, were one of the astounding creations of the war. The gun was designed, built and delivered in less than four months.

MEANS BIG BUSINESS.

Millions of dollars will flow into California coffers and many commercial fields will be enriched by the business that will be received from the fleet.

The consumption of fuel oil will form one of the greatest commercial bonds between California and the fleet. For the oil-burners fuel must be secured from fields close enough to the naval base to reduce the enormous cost of transportation. Because of the close proximity to the fleet oil will probably be procured exclusively in Southern California.

As there is a possibility of a naval base being established at the harbor, the presence of the fleet in the Pacific will necessitate the expansion of facilities and equipment for the harboring of the big vessels. Huge warehouses will probably be erected and fuel stations will be established here.

SUBSISTENCE AND PAY ROLLS.

The problem of feeding the personnel of 28,000 men in the fleet may be settled by the State. California can furnish to the fleet almost every food article required at the sailors' mess, which will mean an expenditure of more than $3,000,000 annually for the enlisted men alone. The average expenditures for foodstuffs amount to $18,200 daily, and this figure does not include the several thousands of dollars spent daily for the officers' mess, which is paid by the officers themselves.

The monthly pay roll of the 28,000 men amounts to $1,680,000, or $20,160,000 annually. The larger portion of this enormous figure will be spent in California. Theaters, resorts, cafes and scores of other enterprises, will reap a golden harvest from this payroll. The 28,000 men receive an average monthly salary of $60 and this money will be spent on shore. One half of the crews on every vessel in the fleet will be granted shore leave every evening and each man receives a thirty-day furlough once a year.

Clothing houses are also expected to profit by the coming of the fleet, for it is reported that the sailors will soon be permitted to wear civilian clothes while on shore leave. This will mean that at least 28,000 new suits of "cit's" and other furnishings will be sold in this State, for few of the men will find time to go to New York or Paris for a suit of clothes.

FOR NAVAL BASE.

Serious thought is being given the possibility of establishing a new naval base at Mare Island to accommodate the Pacific fleet. Secretary Daniels has instructed Capt. E. L. Beach, commandant of Mare Island Navy Yard, to investigate whether Mare Island and its ap-

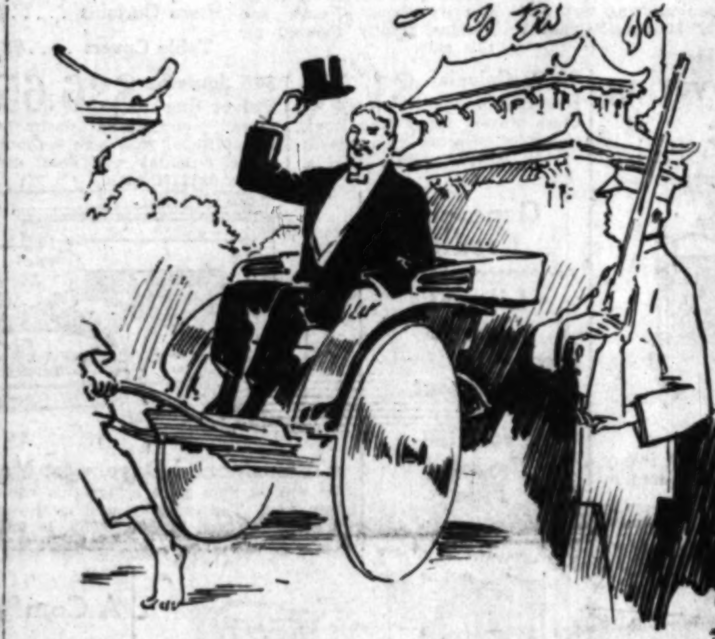
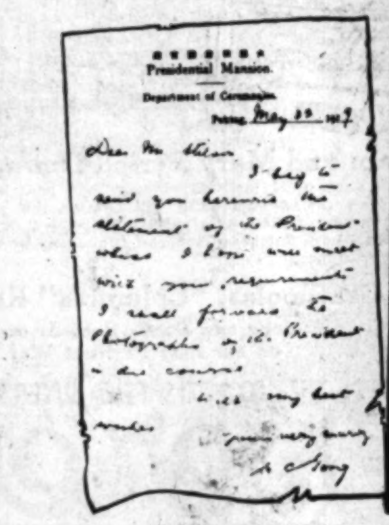
PRESIDENTIAL MANSION.

Mr. F. J. Stilson,

Dear Mr. Stilson,





Presidential Mansion.

Department of Ceremonies.

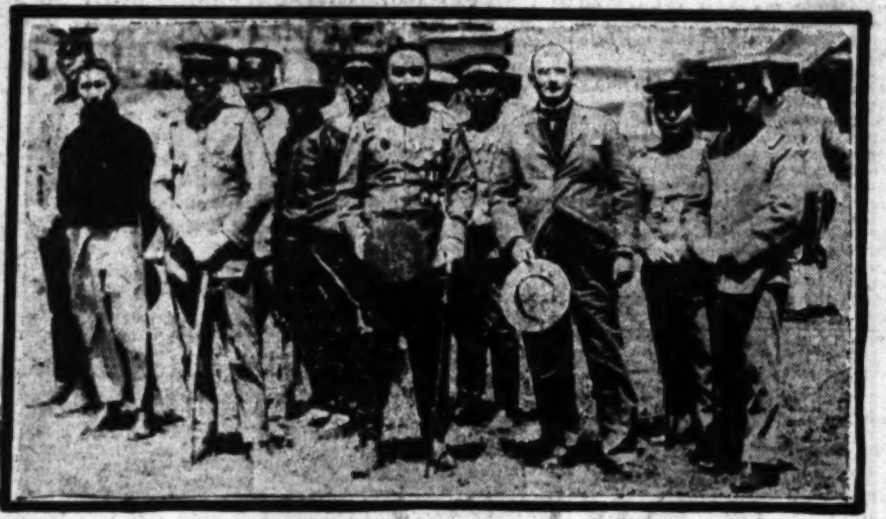
Peking, May 29 1919

Dear Mr Stilson

I beg to send you herewith the statement of the President ... I shall forward the photographs of the President in due course.

With my best wishes

Yours very truly



President Hsu Shih-Chang of China and a Los Angeles Banker's Visit.

Fielding J. Stilson of this city, who had no silk hat, was forced to borrow one before he would be admitted to the Imperial City at Peking and to the Presidential mansion. Then he tired his arm out raising the hat to saluting soldiers. The letters are facsimiles of correspondence from dignitaries who participated in the interview. The lower group shows Mr. Stilson with Chinese soldiers. The photograph of President Hsu was autographed and presented to Mr. Stilson. The ideographs read: "Presented to Mr. Stilson for remembrance from Hsu Shih-Chang, twenty-third day of the fifth moon, eighth year."

CHINA'S PRESIDENT IS SILENT ON SHANTUNG.

Needs the Financial Support of Other Powers, Says Hsu Shih-Chang to Former Los Angeles Banker.

BY FIELDING J. STILSON,
Former Los Angeles Banker Recently Returned from the Orient.

Shantung and its fate are a matter about which His Excellency, Hsu Shih-Chang, President of China, consents to be interviewed, but about which he does not necessarily say anything. The leader of the young and vast oriental republic recently granted me an audience at Peking, listened to leading questions about the problem that is stirring the world and promised to answer at his leisure. But when the answer came, it was a triumphant example of modern diplomatic utterances, significant by reason of what it did not say.

What the President said in effect was that China is chiefly interested in the development of her industries and educational system. She plans to put needed reforms into execution, he said, when she receives the financial support of the other powers and when her more immediate problems are settled. He heartily indorses the League of Nations as outlined by President Wilson.

Interviewing the President of China is an adventure in ceremony, with difficulties among which a silk hat is not the least. The day after my arrival at Peking, I presented credentials to Hon. Paul S. Reinsch, the American Ambassador, and asked that an interview be arranged. But not until seven days later, and until I had borrowed resplendent headgear and had negotiated with greater and lessor masters of ceremony, did I manage to see and talk with Hsu Shih-Chang.

On the morning of the seventh day after Mr. Reinsch had heard my request, a gracious note came from Dr. Tenny, first secretary of the American Legation, informing me that the interview had been arranged and President Hsu would receive me at 9 o'clock the following day.

GETTING A HAT.

I immediately called on Dr. Tenny, to thank him for his note and ask him what dress I should wear. He informed me that much ceremony was demanded at the Presidential mansion and the proper clothes would be a cutaway and a silk hat. My heart sank. I had not worn a cutaway or silk hat for ten years. However, I had a full dress coat, and told Dr. Tenny that I was most anxious to meet the punctilious requirements of the President and would wear full evening dress.

"That will be all right, Mr. Stilson, but be sure to wear your silk hat," he replied.

With those last words ringing in my ears, I returned to my hotel in the diplomatic quarter. The first person I met there was Julian Arnold, the commercial attache of the American Legation. I knew him and he seemed to wear a seven-and-an-eighth head, so I pounced upon him, sure he would be equipped with that indispensable "prop" of oriental diplomacy—the gleaming sky-piece. Luck was with me and he kindly volunteered to lend me the shiny open sesame to the executive palace.

TRAVELS IN A FORD.

The next morning, arrayed as if for the opera, I entered a Ford limousine and, attended by a Chinese footman and chauffeur, rolled out of the diplomatic quarter, swept past the Forbidden City and soon nosed up to the walls surrounding the grounds of the Presidential mansion. It is situated in the imperial city and was formerly the winter palace, the residence of emperors of the Ming and Manchu dynasties, dating from 1368 A.D.

On arrival in the courtyard I alighted from the motor car and showed my card to the commander of the guard. Whereupon I was passed by a line of soldiers, who stood at attention, and into the grounds of the mansion. There I entered a ricksha, in which I was taken along the shores of a beautiful lake. Soldiers were stationed at intervals of about 200 feet and they saluted as the ricksha approached. These salutes were at first returned by lifting Arnold's hat, but I soon tired of that and compromised by keeping the hat off and returning the salute with my hand.

The ride was exceedingly interesting—figuratively, I was "treading on air." For the ground over which I rolled had been the royal pathway of Chinese emperors for more than 500 years.

CEREMONY GALORE.

After a ride of at least half a mile, the ricksha was drawn up in front of a group of low buildings. An official appeared and, with a courtly bow, led me to the receiving room of the department of cere-

JUMP IN LIVING COST LESS HERE.

But Government Figures Show Food Prices Have Increased Steadily in Past Thirty Days in Los Angeles; We are Sixteenth Among Fifty Largest Cities.

Relevant to the impending government investigation into the high cost of living is the fact that the government finds that the retail cost of food is about 2 per cent. less in Los Angeles than the average cost in the fifty largest cities of the country and that there are but fifteen of these cities in which the average retail cost of forty principal articles of diet is less than here. A month ago food was cheaper in twenty cities. The increase in the cost of the forty articles during the past month has been 22 cents here. In no city has the cost declined, and at Washington, D. C., it has increased 69 cents; at Omaha, 54 cents; at Providence, R. I., 53 cents, and at Kansas City, Mo., 45 cents. These figures are based on computations made from the monthly report of the United States Bureau of Labor Statistics, just out.

The rank of American cities, in order of latest published standing in the matter of food cost, and the month's advance in total cost, are shown in the following table:

BANK VAULTS CAVES OF ALADDIN.

Piles of Gold and Untold Wealth of Jewels Lie with Queer Trash in Funereal Grottoes that House Seventy Thousand Safe Deposit Boxes.

BY CHAPIN HALL.

There are about (approximately is the word used by the experts) 70,000 safe deposit boxes in the city of Los Angeles. I didn't count 'em, but I know they are where they are, because I saw them. Rows and rows of them; yes, miles of them. That gives a safety deposit box to every tenth person in the city, if we admit for the sake of harmony that there are 700,000 of us left. Think of it! Almost as many safety deposit boxes as there are automobiles. Placed end to end, they would probably encircle Catalina and twice around Watts. Piled one upon the other, it would take a powerful telescope to look down and find Mt. Wilson from the top. Seventy thousand safety deposit boxes?

Dear, dear! This makes it one of the most widely played of our indoor games.

The price of these boxes runs from $3 per year for the "little fellers" twenty-four inches long, one and a half inches high, and four and a half inches wide, to a maximum which will not be in effect until one of the big banks completes extension plans now being considered, of $2400 per annum. Thousands of the boxes readily rent for from $75 to $150 per year and often they comprise the only "office" an individual or a corporation has. In connection with every well-equipped vault there are directors' rooms and here upon stated and stately occasions the "directors" meet, bring out the tomes and perform such rites or obsequies as are necessary in the premises. Again the funeral suggestion, and all too often the contents of the box provide a most lifelike "remainder."

However, the boxes for the most part are small, probably two-thirds of them being in the $3 to $10 class. The average is probably somewhere around $8, and at this figure the "boxers" of Los Angeles alone spend in a year more than $500,000.

The largest safe deposit vault department in the city is that maintained by the Security Trust and Savings Bank. This contains about 16,000 boxes of varying sizes, but all too few to accommodate the business. The boxes are set in solid steel, impregnably guarded and are really what their name purports them to be—"safe deposit." The same is true of all of the great bank institutions and most of the smaller ones that maintain service of this character.

Since the United States became a bond-holding nation, by reason of the Liberty Loans, there has been a greatly-increased demand for safe-deposit boxes. Liberty Bonds are negotiable and easily lost, sometimes stolen and frequently burned. The safe-deposit box offers the easiest solution of the problems of where they may be best kept. Because of the war, also, relics and keepsakes took on new values, and for months there has been a rush to take out memberships in good vaults, until now there is a waiting list at every bank for the smaller boxes and only a few of the larger and more expensive ones are to be had. It was estimated by one manager that 97 per cent. of the available space is gone, including all the small ones.

The average number of daily calls at the safety departments is about one for every twenty boxes, with the peak-load reached the first of January and the first of July, which are coupon-clipping times, and dividend and interest-paying seasons. One safe deposit vault department handled 2200 customers the 1st inst.

EXCLUSIVE PLACES.

While on the subject, it may be remarked that it is no idle, summer-day job to get into one of these subterranean grab-bags. Unless you happen to be a "regular" and known of all men, there is about as much chance of running the guard successfully as there is of the ex-Kaiser being elected Mayor of Philadelphia. You must give your first name, and indicate whether or not your mother-in-law is still visiting at your home. It is also desirable to make a clean breast of the latest difference of opinion with your wife, and if you are no better than you ought to be, put that down, too.

Being a mere newspaper person, and therefor easily able to prove no ulterior motive in visiting the "spots where the crimes were committed," and besides that having friends who were willing to take a chance on his not carrying any concealed bombs, the author was passed down the lines and permitted to dream that he dwelt in marble halls and to bask in juxtaposition with untold hidden wealth. At that, it was plain that some of the guards took the reporter for a Bolshevik. What I am trying to say is that there is no more chance of making a "getaway" with anything from a safety deposit vault in Los Angeles than there is of Hi Johnson being President of the United States.

OH! THOSE WERE THE HAPPY DAYS
DIVORCE

A lot of curious things are kept in safety deposit boxes. For instance there is still $3,000,000 in gold being hoarded in the Los Angeles boxes. During the war, this sum approximated $6,000,000 and only about half of it has come to light.

One box in a certain vault is said to be so heavy that it takes two husky attendants to move it. Of course, the renter may be saving a quantity of pig iron over against a day when pig iron may be legal tender, but the more plausible explanation is that the box is filled with gold doubloons. One man kept $1000 in gold hoarded three years and then presented a demand to the bank's officers for the 4 per cent. interest advertised, on the ground he had kept his money in the institution during that time.

One woman, whose name would not be unknown to many readers, has rented a box for years for the sole and only purpose of keeping therein her divorce decree and the documents pertaining thereto, including a transcript of the evidence and a picture of the "departed." Once every year she makes a pilgrimmage to this shrine and spends an hour reading the exhibits and rattling the bones. She is married now and has a fresh family, and this is the way she retains her hold upon the "dear, dead past."

Pictures, jewelry, letters, knick-nacks of all sorts, many of them without intrinsic value, go to make up the store. The renting of a safety deposit box is usually the beginning of an accumulation that often attains alarming proportions and embraces the most curious commodities imaginable. There was a hurry call recently to one of the big vaults by a well-dressed and much distraut woman customer. She could hardly wait for the completion of the formula, the pass words, the rappings upon the outer door and the advance of the courier bearing the duplicate key, the working of combinations and the clanging of steel. It developed that she had locked up a telephone number she was especially desirous of remembering. Of course, it wasn't the part of the courteous members of the staff to suggest that the number appeared in every one of scores of thousands of directories scattered hither and yon throughout the municipality.

Safety deposit boxes are one thing that have not yet gone up in price. Not here and not yet. They are cheaper than in any other big city in the country. A box that costs $5 a year in Los Angeles is $10 in New York and $15 in Boston and St. Louis, but, and here is where the shoe pinches, the vault managers say there is an immediate market for 20,000 additional boxes and the safe manufacturers won't promise delivery under a year, so, unless you are the fortunate possessor of a box, better keep the old sock handy, and in the meantime get on the waiting list.

Question: Why not organize the "Safety Box Depositors Union?" Its 70,000 votes would swing any election.

Tobacco Hardens the Arteries, Overtaxes the Heart and Shortens Life

Says Dr. Connor, Who Suggests a Simple Test to Find If It Is Hurting You. Can You Stand It?

New York.—Dr. Connor, formerly of Johns Hopkins hospital, says: Hundreds of thousands of men who smoke and chew and who believe themselves healthy are suffering from progressive organic ailments. They would never have been afflicted had it not been for the use of tobacco and most of them would soon get well if they would only stop the use of tobacco.

The best known habit-forming principal of tobacco is nicotine, but the most deadly and demoralizing is furfural. Both are deadly poison, which, when absorbed by the system slowly, but surely, affect the nerves, membranes, tissues, vital organs and vitality of the body.

The harmful effect of tobacco varies and depends on circumstances and the individual. In some it causes general debility, others catarrh of the throat, indigestion, constipation extreme nervousneses, sleeplessness, loss of memory, lack of will power, cowardice and fear, mental confusion, etc.; in others it causes heart disease, bronchial troubles, hardening of the arteries, palpitation of the heart, tuberculosis, blindness, cancer and the common affliction known as tobacco heart.

If you use tobacco in any form you easily detect its harmful effects by making the following simple tests: Read aloud a page from a book. If your voice becomes muffled, hoarse and indistinct and you must frequently clear your throat, the chances are that your throat is affected by catarrh and it may be the beginning of very serious catarrhal trouble. Next, in the morning, before taking your usual smoke, walk up three flights of stairs at a regular pace, then stop. If you find that you are out of breath, if your heart beat is forced, trembling or irregular, you may be the victim of a functional or organic heart trouble. If you feel that you must smoke or chew to quiet your nerves, you are a slave to the tobacco habit and are slowly poisoning yourself with the insidious deadly drugs, nicotine and furfural. In either case, you have just two alternatives—keep on with your self-poisoning process regardless of the dangers, and suffer the consequences, or rid yourself of the habit and escape the dangers.

You can overcome the craving and stop the tobacco habit in a very short time by using the following inexpensive formula: Go to any drug store and ask for Nicotol. Take one tablet after each meal and in a comparatively short time you will have no desire for tobacco. The craving will have left you. With the nicotine poisoning out of your system your general health will quickly improve.

Note: When asked about Nicotol, one of our leading druggists said: Nicotol is truly a wonderful remedy for the tobacco habit. It is way ahead of anything we have ever sold before. We are authorized by the manufacturers to refund the money to every dissatisfied customer and we would not permit the use of our name unless the remedy possessed unusual merit." Nicotol is sold in this city under an iron-clad money-back guarantee by all up-to-date druggists, including all the Sun, the Logan and the Chambers Drug Stores.

Half the Truth is Wholly Misleading

The profound impression made by the wonderful KNABE AMPICO Reproducing Piano is leading some dealers to try to capitalize on the great public interest aroused in this unique instrument

Makes of self-playing instruments which were formerly called plain, unassuming "player pianos" are now renamed "reproducing pianos." And because of the close association which Leopold Godowsky has had with the Knabe Ampico, in appearing here in joint recital with the instrument, these dealers are trying to secure some of the glory of his name for their "player pianos." They persist in making claims that Godowsky's hand playing may be faithfully heard on their players, and they publish statements which are manifestly unfair and misrepresenting because they were given by Godowsky before he realized the tremendous possibilities of the Knabe Ampico, and before he realized that there were any higher possibilities in the reproducing art than represented by the player piano.

All contracts made by Godowsky to produce records for player pianos of all makes EXPIRE WITHIN 5 MONTHS AND WILL UNDER NO CONSIDERATION BE RENEWED.

After his legal obligations to other instrument manufacturers come to an end January 1st

Godowsky will positively make Records only for the Ampico

Regardless of any records which Godowsky or any other artist may have made for any player piano, THERE IS NO INSTRUMENT IN THE WORLD EXCEPT THE AMPICO, AND NO RECORDS OF ANY MAKE WHATSOEVER EXCEPT AMPICO ROLLS, WHICH CAN POSSIBLY REPRODUCE ALL OF THE QUALITIES OF AN ARTIST'S PLAYING, INCLUDING TONE COLORING AND TECHNIQUE.

We are prepared to prove this conclusively to any one who honestly seeks the truth. Come in and listen to a demonstration by the Knabe Ampico that will leave no question in your mind as to how this marvelous instrument compares with all other self-playing instruments of any name or nature.

After Godowsky played for ALL leading makes of player pianos and thoroughly tested them all, he became so fully convinced of the infinite superiority of the Ampico that he voluntarily terminated his arrangements to make records for player pianos and now is under contract to play exclusively for the AMPICO Reproducing Piano.

GODOWSKY ARRANGEMENT WITH WILCOX AND WHITE MADE PRIOR TO EXCLUSIVE CONTRACT WITH US. HE PLAYS FEW RECORDS FOR ARTRIO. ARRANGEMENT WITH THEM EXPIRES JANUARY FIRST, 1920. EXCLUSIVE CONTRACT MADE WITH US AFTER HE HAD PLAYED FOR ALL OTHERS, BEING THEN THOROUGHLY CONVINCED THAT AMPICO WAS SUPERIOR. GODOWSKY HAS ALWAYS PLAYED KNABE PIANO EXCLUSIVELY.

"Since the progress of the Ampico has left the other competitors far behind," says Godowsky—"I decided to givemy future reproductions to the wonderful Knabe Ampico exclusively."

READ THE FOLLOWNG LETTERS FROM GODOWSKY:

February 16th, 1919.

Is it not amazing that I should sit in judgment at my own performance though not performing? Yet here I am listening to a number of selections which I have recorded on the Ampico! Although I have gone through this process before, I must state it at this moment, in the flush of enthusiasm, that no other recording of mine on any instrument whatsoever gives me the deep, unalloyed satisfaction which these reproductions on the Ampico do. They possess, aside from the quality of flawless reproduction, the true to life heart pulsation which stamps the Ampico absolutely individual and apart from anything else. And furthermore, this applies to the records made by my fellow artists whose renditions it has been my pleasure to hear.

(Signed) LEOPOLD GODOWSKY.

Gentlemen:—

The undated interview which appeared in a local paper last Sunday in which it was erroneously claimed that I am recording exclusively for a certain reproducing instrument was given several years ago before the reproducing pianos were fully developed.

Since the progress of the Ampico has left the other competitors far behind, I decided to give my future reproductions to the wonderful Knabe Ampico exclusively.

This in itself is the strongest testimonial I can give.

(Signed) LEOPOLD GODOWSKY.

PURSES MUST OPEN.

The arrival of a mighty armada of fighting ships at Los Angeles Harbor next Saturday to be permanently stationed on this coast is an epochal event for the Pacific States and an occasion demanding a rousing demonstration of welcome. Western statesmen and western public sentiment have long clamored for a greater proportion of the nation's navy in these waters and now that the order of the naval department to place the Pacific on an equal footing with the Atlantic is put into effect, there should be a celebration on a magnificent scale.

Arrangements for such a celebration in Los Angeles are well in hand under the direction of able committees; but the funds to provide for the entertainment of the fleet are not coming in rapidly. The money must come from popular subscriptions and the public is lamentably slow in awakening to its duty. Only $35,000 of the $100,000 required has been subscribed to date and today there is dire need of funds to make early arrangements.

San Francisco raised $55,000 of its $100,000 in less than half an hour.

Shall Los Angeles, the metropolis of the Pacific Coast, which will be visited by the fleet long before San Francisco and other northern ports, fail to rise to this great occasion?

Purse strings must be loosened without delay. Appreciation of the coming of the fleet and what it means should not be confined to empty words. Let there be a mighty expression of welcome not merely equal to but bigger than that accorded by any other city! To that end subscriptions to the fund must come in rapidly in the next day or two.

Subscriptions will be received by W. D. Woolwine, chairman of the finance committee in charge of the fleet celebration, Motley Flint, Mayor Snyder and at Room 25, City Hall. Receipts will be given to all contributors.

GETTING AWAY.

Aerial passenger and express service has been established in three directions out of Chicago. Anything that will take people away from the city at the rate of a hundred miles an hour is welcomed with three cheers.

MAY RECOVER.

The State of Illinois, under Gov. Lowden, has ordered a refund to fire insurance policyholders of the 10 per cent. surcharge collected by the insurance companies to offset increased war taxes. It is claimed that an injunction issued by an Illinois court was violated in the collection and the threat is made to revoke the charters of the companies who refuse to make the refund. It is said that the amount collected under this surtax and now ordered returned to the policyholders exceeds $2,000,000. If this is refunded here is one extra tax that the consumer did not pay.

HIND SIGHT.

Now the Germans are holding a postmortem of scandal and regret over the statement that peace overtures by Great Britain in 1917 were not even made public or considered. If they had only listened their empire might be intact and the Kaiser still a power. Such is their expression of grief—but without remorse or repentance. While the Germans are holding a lodge of sorrow they might go back a bit farther—to the day they threw their lines of steel across the Belgian frontier. But for starting things there would have been no depressing and disgraceful finish.

LOOSEN UP.

It seems that following the official example given by the City Council the people have so far not been very liberal in their response to the appeal for funds made by the Finance Committee having in charge the collection of money to pay for the entertainment of the men of the Pacific fleet. The chairman says his call for coin has met with only a half-hearted response. This should be remedied right away. Pleasure for the officers and men cannot be provided without money. Contributions of any size are acceptable. Peel a bill off the wad and send it to a member of the committee.

AUTOMOBILE PRE-EMINENCE.

Figures published by the State treasurer showing that more than one-fourth of the automobiles of the State are owned in Los Angeles cause no surprise here. Other cities which dislike to see the pre-eminence of Los Angeles shown in any way may not welcome this further proof that this county is the world's greatest automobile-owning section, but they will find it hard to disprove the official statistics.

There is every reason why the county should lead in this respect. In the first place there are more than the average number of families here in positions of independence or semi-independence and so able to own motor cars. Again the climate here is so delightful all the year that automobiles can be used every day. There never is any extremely bad weather to contend with. In addition Los Angeles county is one of the world's beauty spots and the most satisfactory way to explore it is by automobile.

AMERICANISM 100 PER CENT. FINE.

ONE HUNDRED PER CENT. is perfection. That is a goal worth while. What is "ONE HUNDRED PER CENT. AMERICANISM"? That question is now at the fore. Who is one hundred per cent. American?

The hundred per cent. American is a citizen who was never more needed than now. He is needed nationally, internationally, and everywhere. America is hearing from all quarters of the earth, the cry, "Come over and help us." America might be something and be indifferent to that cry, but she could not be indifferent and be American. Indifference to the welfare of others is not an American characteristic. Such indifference is a form of selfishness which is characteristic of the Turk, the Hun, and the partisan Pharisee. Others may "pass by on the other side" of stricken and suffering humanity, but America cannot pass by and remain American. A CONSIDERATION OF ME AND MINE WITHOUT THE CONSIDERATION OF YOU AND YOURS COULD NOT BE AN AMERICAN CONSIDERATION.

II.

AMERICA was never a class country and she can never be a class country. America is the people's country. One hundred per cent. Americanism does not look up to one man and down on another. Real Americanism looks every man straight in the face. Americanism is in the big and beautiful business of mobilizing the amenities of mankind. Americanism is not a great tree to grow in your door-yard, but not in mine. Americanism is not a tree whose cooling shade is to soothe my sorrows, but to leave yours unassuaged. Americanism, one hundred per cent. Americanism, is a tree of righteousness whose leaves are for the healing of the nations. Real Americanism is no pampered patriotism to be petted in some corner of the world. Americanism is God's Liberty out in the open everywhere with both hands extended for the help of humanity. Let no Congressman get the narrow notion that Americanism is confined to the boundary lines of his constituency. No Congressman is true to any American constituency who is not true to our world-wide Americanism. Every Senator must remember that we are in a world-circling service. In compassion for suffering, in ambitions for service Americanism must forever hereafter be cosmopolitan in character. Whatever it is that is out for the cornering of commerce, or for confining its ministries to social sets or circles, or for monopolizing the money markets of mankind, or for isolating itself in national greed and hardness of heart, whatever the spirit is which would do these things, IT IS NOT AMERICANISM. ONE HUNDRED PER CENT. AMERICANISM IS THE BROADEST, NOBLEST, FARTHEST-REACHING AMERICANISM POSSIBLE. IT GOES TO THE LIMIT.

America's safety as a nation lies only in the widening ways of nationalism into internationalism. We shall not love our own family less, but we shall love our neighbor's family more. We are to have a growing loyalty for the folks at home and an ever-widening interest in the folks who are far away, who need our help. That is true 100 per cent. Americanism.

III.

WE MUST not blink at the fact that now and then some notion breaks loose in America, which is not even 1 per cent. American. When a just and fair wage is paid to the workman for his work, with all conditions in his favor, the spirit which propagates the strike is not Americanism. That spirit which would develop militarism as militarism, merely for the sake of sword play, is Prussianism and not Americanism. Let not the American people be fooled on this point by any Prussian propagandist. But while 100 per cent. Americanism is antipodally removed from militarism, it does not follow that we are to leave our doors unlocked, our fields unfenced, or our gates unguarded. Thomas Bailey Aldrich has a word on "Unguarded Gates" which Americans will do well at this moment to ponder:

> "Here, it is written, Toil shall have its wage,
> And Honor, honor, and the humblest man
> Stand level with the highest in the law.
> Of such a land have men in dungeons dreamed,
> And with the vision brightening in their eyes
> Gone smiling to the fagot and the sword."

That, fellow-citizens, is 100 per cent. Americanism. "Toil shall have its wage." Not for many long years, if ever, has "toil had its wage" in Europe. Not in the ninety-eight years since Mexico declared herself a democracy have the poor peon toilers had their rightful wage. Closer to the 100 per cent. mark than any other country on earth does America give the toiler his wage. This is the ideal of Americanism. This is also the practice of 100 per cent. Americanism. "Whatsoever is RIGHT I will give you"—that is the wage standard of 100 per cent. Americanism.

IV.

BUT for her own welfare and also for the welfare of the world America must guard her gates against the dung drift of European anarchism. The stench of this offal now befouls the atmosphere of every American city. The Russian Reds and the Prussian gas poisoners are still seeking by stealth to plunder their places among us. It is the business of every citizen, of every Congressman, every Senator, and of every 100 per cent. American to help guard our gates against all comers who will not swear sincere and eternal loyalty to our faith and our flag. Whoever comes to us to be 100 per cent. American is thrice welcome from any clime or any country. Nobody is welcome who comes otherwise. Even America's stomach cannot continue to absorb European poison with impunity. WE MUST HEREAFTER BE TOO FAIR TO THE WORLD OF MANKIND TO PERMIT THE WORLD'S REPROBATES TO CONTINUE TO POISON THE CLEANEST PLACE ON THE PLANET. We must no longer open our gates indiscriminately. Would that all of our law-makers and citizens might take in the full import of this timely message from an American poet:

> "Oh, Liberty, white Goddess! is it well
> To leave the gates unguarded? On thy breast
> Fold Sorrow's children, soothe the hurts of Fate,
> Lift the down-trodden, but with hand of steel
> Stay those who to thy sacred portals come
> To waste the gifts of freedom. Have a care,
> Lest from thy brow the clustered stars be torn
> And trampled in the dust. For so of old
> The thronging Goth and Vandal trampled Rome,
> And where the temples of the Caesars stood
> The lean wolf unmolested made her lair."

True Americanism is to be the savior of the nations. Americanism is not a world monopoly, but a world ministry. Americanism strives not for the world's wealth, but for the world's weal. The stress of 100 per cent. Americanism is always placed upon people and not upon property. Americanism believes with the great Prophet of Palestine that "A man's life consisteth not in the abundance of the things which he possesseth." Americanism's most valued holdings are not in hands, but in heads and hearts. Whosoever forgets this forgets to be a 100 per cent. American. A man may have superficial symptoms of Americanism, but the real thing is on the inside. The real thing consists of honor, honesty, intelligence, industry, neighborliness, bravery, brotherhood, and in an all-round squareness in character and in conduct.

V.

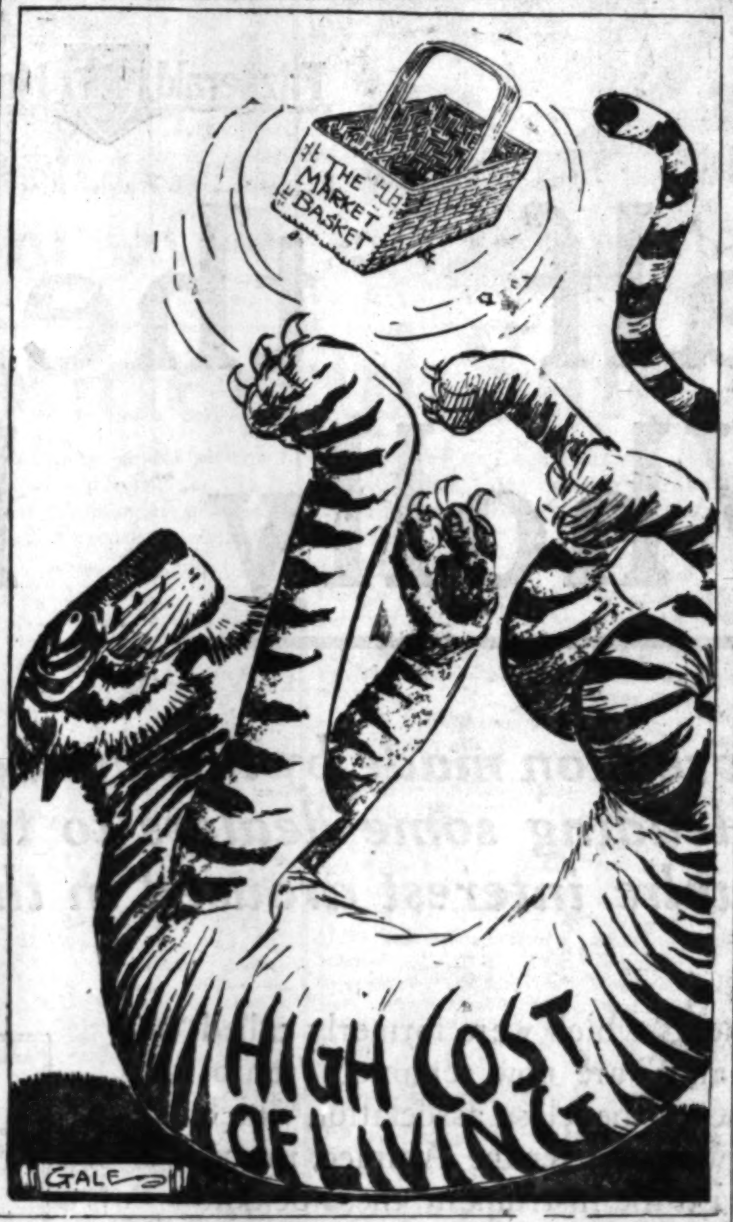
LINCOLN is still our great luminary of 100 per cent. Americanism. The organ music of his speech was never so sublime as in these days of great world matters. Swing the Lincoln torch across our darkened skies and they will come clear. It is good to hear his voice again. He is saying: "Let us have faith that RIGHT MAKES MIGHT; and in that faith, let us to the end do our duty as we understand it." Let our Senators, our Congressmen, our citizens test their percentage of Americanism by this Lincolnian standard, "Right makes might." Hear him again: "Stand with anybody that stands right. Stand with him while he is right, and part with him when he goes wrong." In commerce, in politics, nationally and internationally this is 100 per cent. Americanism. By this, Americans, we stand or fall.

VI.

LET OUR political praters against the world peace pact and the League of Nations measure by these measurements. This is 100 per cent. Americanism. Some of our Senators are afflicted with shortsightedness. No man is fit these days to be an American Congressman or an American Senator who cannot see to the ends of the earth.

To be 100 per cent. Americans, we must have eyes to look across the seas; we must have ears to hear the farthest whispers of the world; we must have hearts big enough to brother the human race. We are thrust into a world programme for the making and the keeping of the world's peace. We are in agreement with the nations of the earth to bring in a world reign of peace and square dealing. It is infinitely worth while. This is 100 per cent. Americanism.

The Plaything.



WATCH THE BARGAINS.

The high cost of living, that problem with which every nation is coping just now, inevitably falls hardest on that majority of the people who belong neither to the aristocracy of labor nor the capitalist class—the clerks, the office workers, the teachers, the small professional men, the average wage-earner and those with small fixed incomes. To these the problem has reached a real struggle for existence, a nightmare of making both ends meet.

While governments are undertaking investigations; while politicians are busy diagnosing the disease; while labor-unionists are complacently striking for higher wages and aggravating the condition, the majority of average consumers are facing this daily anxiety with increasing alarm. But human ingenuity has always been able to cope with dire problems in the past and there is every evidence that practical minds are even now reaching a solution. Here in Los Angeles it is obvious that the merchants are alive to the urgency of the question and the careful housewife, the watchful and discriminating consumer, can, by studying the daily bargains offered, bring the cost of living down to a figure not far in excess of that prevalent before the war. Produce markets and department stores are meeting the condition with the advertising of daily bargains in almost every essential article and, by taking thought and subjecting the day's offerings to careful scrutiny, it is possible to bring the household expenses down to something like possible dimensions.

Meat, for instance, and vegetables are to be purchased at almost the old prices by taking advantage of the "specials" offered by enterprising stores each day. As for clothing, the bargains in dry goods and domestic wares being offered in the summer sales by Los Angeles merchants make it possible for the foresighted average consumer to maintain the old sartorial standards, if the craze for anticipating Paris fashions is dispensed with.

Of course this manner of shopping is more trouble; the easy method of ordering by phone and considering the immediate need, irrespective of the bargains, will not produce the consummation so devoutly to be wished. It is necessary to modify one's tastes, to plan and devise, to exercise a little watchful waiting in order to secure needed products at bargain prices; but it can be done. Some store, somewhere, each day, will be found enterprising enough to furnish the required articles at an attractive price, and this is particularly true of daily household commodities for which merchants are quick to appreciate the ready market. A scrutiny of the advertisements will show that on certain days certain stores make a specialty of particular products—thus there are special meat bargains, special fish bargains, special fruit and vegetable bargains, special grocery bargains being offered in many parts of the city, and the housewife, planning her day's menu accordingly, can make such a remarkable saving at the end of the month that the time given to watchful purchasing is well repaid.

The trouble with the average American is that domestic economy has hitherto been the least of his virtues. He bought what he wanted when he wanted it, no matter what the condition of the market. Yet in his successful business buying he would have a keen eye for the bargains and go to any trouble to buy his professional material at the lowest figure offered. With the same amount of forethought exercised in ordinary domestic buying the year's bills would be cut by at least a third. Anyone studying the daily market quotations on household commodities must appreciate the tremendous difference in regular and bargain prices advertised.

To cope successfully with the present problem of the high cost of living the household purchases must be made with business acumen, the prices of groceries must be watched with the same keen sense of profit and loss that a builder watches quotations in the lumber market, that manufacturers give to the purchase of their raw materials. Any fool can spend, but it takes intelligence and forethought to save and conserve. The American housewife is second to none in intelligence; it remains for her to apply it now in the department in which it is most needed. To buy wisely is the larger half of successful business of good housekeeping. Watch the bargains advertised in The Times and, while the governments are getting round to a wholesale solution of the aggravated problem, the co-operation of the merchant and the housewife will go very far to alleviate the immediate tribulation.

RIPPLING RHYMES.

COURAGE.

Sometimes things seem all disjointed in this weary path we tread; we are galled and disappointed and we wish that we were dead. And it is a foolish habit, letting briny teardrops start; man should never be a rabbit; he should have a lion heart. If the lion heart is lacking he can still pretend it's there, and his burden blithely packing, show no symptoms of despair. I am prone to vain repining when I strike a vein of grief; it's my nature to be whining and to paw around and beef; but by long and earnest practice I've acquired a cheerful front, and I chortle when, the fact is, tears would seem the proper stunt. Let the tinhorn griefs assemble, they will think I'm not afraid; though my rabbit heart may tremble, I'll pretend I'm undismayed. And the bluff will work, I'll bet you; and 'twill work as well for you; don't let worry scare or fret you; face the beast and mutter "Shoo!" Nerve's a thing that some inherit, easily all ills they've dared; but we show a greater merit who pretend we are not scared. WALT MASON.

Leg, I See.

Forty years ago we had a pet joke. We didn't write it, but we read it so often that we regarded it with a sense of proprietorship much as you would regard an old landmark in your home town. Every time we would pick up an almanac we would discover our pet joke, and we would chuckle over it and read it aloud, much to the anger of those in the immediate vicinity. One day we were making lamplighters by tearing newspapers into strips and folding them into tapers, and we located our pet joke in one of the newspapers. We read it aloud again and grandpa threw his bootjack at us and hit us on the head. We still bear the scar. For years and years we had lost track of the old joke and had forgotten it. And now, in the last issue of the Cornell Widow, we find our old friend as good as new. Here it is:

Attorney, to niece of a late millionaire: "Well, Miss Fletcher, you have a rather large legacy."

"Sir, how dare you?"—[Luke McLuke in Cincinnati Enquirer.

Suggestive Vision.

A widely-known surgeon was performing an operation on a patient when a fire started at a warehouse across the road, illuminating the whole operating theater. Having finished, the surgeon turned to the nurse and dryly said:

"I say, nurse, I notice the patient is coming to. I think you had better draw the blinds. I don't want him to think the operation hasn't been a success."—[Dallas News.

THE LANCER.

In these days of the high cost of living the only cheap form of entertainment left in the world is killing American citizens. But that's starvation cheap.

President Wilson has sent a memorandum to the Senate giving the amount of our claim against Mexico as $26,629,597.11. This includes the bill for 391 murders and 551 claims for property damage.

It fails to state in the dispatches just what part of the claim is for the killings. They would only come at $60,000 each if the entire amount of the claim were for the murders. Considering that the property claims predominate at more than a two-to-one ratio, it would seem that an American citizen can be killed for the very moderate sum of $30,000; women and children probably a little less.

Considering that France has presented a demand against Germany for 1,000,000 francs for the death of one French army captain and is holding several thousand German prisoners as hostages to insure the payment of the bill, it would seem that American lives are selling at bargain-sale rates.

I saw an announcement the other day to the effect that Madam Nazimova declines to talk to any more "newspaper people."

In the circumstances, stern duty will require that, as a newspaper person, I make a few faces at Nazimova. When she was on the stage I thought she was a great actress. I saw both Nazimova and Mrs. Fisk in "Hedda Gabbler;" at least I understood what Nazimova's version was all about; Mrs. Fisk's remained a sealed mystery for me.

Since she has come to the screen she has put over just one good picture; that was "Revelation."

I saw her "War Brides" the other day for the first time. I'll admit that it would have required a super intellect to have extracted any intelligent thought from all that drivel; but Nazimova seemed even a little worse than necessary. To tell the truth, during some of the great emotional scenes I looked on in alarm, fearing that the lady had swallowed a tack.

It seems amazing that a story so stupid and tiresome could have won New York recognition. In one scene a boy is taken from a plow and without preliminary training becomes a member of the Prussian Guard. Thereafter the only way the captain of his company can find out the army orders is through the recruit, who tells him what to do.

I rode out to Hollywood the other day in a car that was carrying a cargo of little Japanese naval cadets from the training ship at San Pedro. If there was anything about our great and glowing city that agitated their interest they kept it heroically to themselves. As far as I could observe the cadets on both sides of the car kept their attention riveted on the nails in the bottom of the car floor. None of them as much as glanced outdoors during the entire trip.

"I suppose," remarked a women behind me with vicious emphasis, "that they are waiting for Der Tag."

Well, I suppose so. What attitude would the good lady like to have a professional naval officer maintain toward his profession? After you have spent some years playing with cannon there naturally comes into your soul a curiosity to hear them go off. Would she have them burst into tears at the thought of a sea fight?

Don't ever believe but what our sailors and all other sailors are Der Taging just as hard as the Japs.

It would be lovely to be able to believe all the beautiful pipe dreams about the brotherhood of man that President Wilson believes in. Very, very lovely; but the fact is the poor old world is headed straight for another bunch of wars.

The little Japs I saw on the street car will be in—one side or another.

Sir George Paish, the financial headlight of England, has a delicate way of putting it; we'll have to hand him that much.

Instead of roughly telling us that Europe is going to repudiate her debts he says that there will be "capital levies, both national and international;" and that England and America ought to cancel a "thousand millions" of the money owed to them by Italy and France and "pool an international credit in the League of Nations."

In other words, we are never going to get our money back. Which fact is various other things, but not surprising.

We have been bilked, bunked and stung.

But there is nothing to do but put it down to experience. It is, of course, a physical impossibility to raise enough money by taxation from any country in Europe to pay the interest on the war debts, let alone the principal.

Whatever country seriously attempts it will have a revolution and a repudiation of the undertakings, financial and otherwise, of the outgoing administration.

But, cheer up! The President is apparently about to saddle Armenia, with her debts and her troubles and her revolutions, upon us. Meanwhile, our own workingmen seriously threaten revolution on account of the prices raised to the flying point by the shipments of food to Europe.

THE LANCER.

HAD REAL BOYS, TOO.

Codville is very proud of its schools, which boast all the latest improvements. Every visitor is asked: "Have you seen our schools?"

"I have," replied one man promptly, in answer to the question. "They're quite good."

"Splendid, aren't they?" gushed the native. "Fine buildings and all the most up-to-date fittings. By the way, what was the first thing which struck you on entering?"

"A bean from a beanshooter," said the visitor, coldly.—[Unidentified.

monies. There I met Wong Kaiwan, the grand master of ceremonies, and K. C. Tong, the master of ceremonies. The latter is the official interpreter for President Hsu.

After an informal introduction, I was very courteously informed that my interview with the President could not be of more than five minutes' duration. I told them I had come all the way from America to see the President and pleaded for ten minutes. The grand master of ceremonies bowed and assented. Then tea was served and all was well.

Soon the little procession we formed started out and after passing through several courtyards, in which were many soldiers, all at attention, we reached the private apartments of the President. Ascending a flight of steps, we entered a large and very magnificent reception room. Here stood a group of uniformed officials, the President's bodyguard. I had only a moment to view this scene of magnificence, for almost at once a superb curtain was slowly drawn aside and we stepped into the presence of His Excellency, President Hsu Shih Chang, the ruler of more than 400,000,000 Chinese.

COURTEOUS RECEPTION.

The President, who was seated at a wonderful table, rose and bowed. The courtesy was returned. He approached me and made another bow and I followed suit again. Then, rolling up the sleeve of his splendid coat, he shook hands with me warmly. After this ceremony we were seated and the interview was on.

I stated at some length my own views on the subjects of Korea and Shantung and possible solutions of difficulties gathered about them. Also, I presented a proposal in connection with Chinese finances. The interview, that had been limited to ten minutes, was lengthened to nearer half an hour; it was plain that the masters of ceremony and the President himself followed all I said with keen interest.

When I had finished speaking and Mr. Tong was through translating, I asked: "What does the President say to my statement, Mr. Tong?"

There was a deep silence. Finally the President spoke, and I was informed that an answer would be sent to me later in the day.

WHAT HSU SHIH-CHANG SAID.

The President's statement, typewritten, came in the afternoon. It was as follows:

"President Hsu, in an interview with Mr. Stilson, says that what China at present wants is the development of education and industry. China is a great country with abundant resources lying undeveloped and she suffers from lack of adequate communication. She must build railroads, open up the mines, encourage industry and develop the uncultivated land. She will educate the people so that they will be of service to the country in all the above things.

"China and America, being two great republics, entertain the same democratic views and China would try to put all needed reforms into execution when she receives the financial support from foreign countries and when she has developed her industries and education.

"The President also says that he heartily indorses all the views expressed by President Wilson in regard to the organization of the League of Nations and so forth.

"In reply to Mr. Stilson's inquiry as to his views concerning the formation of a new banking syndicate, the President says that he had seen Mr. Abbott about the matter. Mr. Abbott's scheme is to organize a new consortium to finance China with Japan as a participant also, and the President's idea is that the matter solely depends on the attitude of the different governments and also that of the American bankers and people."

The statement is a typical diplomatic document. As a matter of fact, President Hsu and most of the officials of the Chinese government dare not call their souls their own.

PLAN FOR CITY DE LUXE.

Blanchard Conceives Future Los Angeles to Rival Babylon, Athens, Rome.

BY WILLIAM LEE WOLLETT,
Architect for the Blanchard Plan.

[See Illustrations in Rotogravure Section.]

Plans for an inner city of Los Angeles to rival the architectural glories of monumental art of the past and of the finest municipalities of today, are the culmination of the conception of this city's civic center problem, as worked out by F. W. Blanchard.

The original idea was that high ground above the Broadway and Hill-street tunnels could be used to good purpose in erecting buildings that would be an adornment to the metropolis and that the group of public buildings in the north end should be expanded. This germinated into a magnificent plan linking the north end, Normal Hill and the projected library site at Eleventh and Hope streets in one vast scheme. These three centers, with their projected antennae, comprise the plan for the inner city of Los Angeles.

In view of the certainty that this will soon be a city of more than 1,000,000 people and that great building operations must come, it is considered beyond argument that this expansion should be in accordance with a well-worked out and coordinated plan, and not haphazard, as in the past and at present.

BENEFITS EVIDENT.

Arguments to the business men, whose interests may be involved in this proposed plan of action, would be appropriate in this description, but from my observation of those who have come under the influence of this particular plan and Mr. Blanchard's explanation, argument appears to be, or at least has been heretofore, unnecessary. The desirability of co-ordinating the city's plan and thus stabilizing the city's growth is palpable.

In particular the "Normal Hill" will be utilized for a great recreation center, according to the plan. Here will be placed the great convention hall, seating more than 10,000 people and suitable for all kinds of public gatherings, automobile and horse shows, conventions, pageants, etc. A music hall for concerts by symphony orchestras and other musical events is to have appropriate accommodations for the reception and entertainment of guests of the city. This group will be both on the axis of Hope street and on the axis of a widened Fifth street.

On Fifth street it is proposed to arrange a monumental approach of wide steps, interspersed with gardens in which pools and tropical plantings and noble statues will exhale the atmosphere of our beautiful Southland. On the slopes to flank the group of buildings on the Hope-street side, there will be arranged terraced gardens, exedra and a casino. It is proposed to make a veritable beauty spot of this hill site Joined by a park area to Pershing Square, these buildings and the entourage will be a fit counterpart of the other elements of the city plan.

THE LIBRARY.

On the axis of Hope street, in a parked space located between Eleventh and Tenth streets, will be found a beautiful circular and domed library building. The library building will be of the same general type as the new City Courts Building in New York City, which is said to be one of America's master works. Ample park spaces are to be provided by cutting through the middle of the blocks bounded by Eleventh and Tenth streets, thus giving access to Figueroa street, where a Little Community Theater is planned, and also in the other direction, i.e., east, to the vicinity of the Examiner Building, a public square is to extend.

The parks above referred to are to be treated in a monumental manner, as proper accompaniment to the library building and the other elements of the plan. In the square, which is to be the satisfying point on the axis of Broadway, and which also marks the meeting point of Spring and Main streets, there will be an obelisk commemorating the dedication of the inner city of Los Angeles to the service of the community. The probable donor of this monument is a private individual.

UNION TERMINAL.

Coming back to our starting point, the north end, by way of Main and Los Angeles streets, we meet the "gates of the city," for at the Plaza it is proposed to locate the union terminal for which Mr. Blanchard has so long labored—a terminal for a city which is destined to have a million or more inhabitants within a short space of years. It is proposed to leave the Plaza with its old church and other primitive buildings as nearly intact as practical necessity will permit. At the edge of the Plaza, and in full view of the vistas on Main street, is to be a monument to Junipero Serra, commorating the days of the Spanish regime and erected by the Spanish people of the community. This monument will be of a commanding nature as to size and will count as a terminal point of Main street, looking north. The high tower of the union terminal station is to be located on the axis of Los Angeles street, and will thus contribute to the dignity and form of this part of the city. On the axis of each of the other main streets, Spring, Broadway and Hill, there will be important improvements—thus a Victory fountain in the midst of a big public park, on the axis of Spring street, between First and Temple streets, and near by a public bath in the Old Temple Block. This public bath is to be of the "Baths of Caracalla" type, which is to say, monumental in form and of an enduring material. Over the Broadway tunnel will be a picturesque tourist hotel, which will be seen towering toward the sky, with the mountains as a background. On the axis of Hill street, over the tunnel, will be the monumental portion of the City Hall. The buildings to skirt the base of the City Hall group will be approached from Broadway and on the level of that street, like the Capitol Building at Washington, D. C. Access to the building will be obtained either by grand monumental stairways or by elevators from the Broadway level or the Hill-street level.

STATE BUILDING.

Opposite the City Hall and on the present Courthouse site it is planned that the State shall erect a magnificent building; this State building is shown in two groups, in order to develop an axis through to the Spring-street park. On this axis is to be the Victory Fountain before mentioned as being on the axis of Spring street. This fountain, to perform a double function of forming a beauty spot at the end of Spring street and of completing the view from the City Hall site, will be embellished with swaying palms, the splash of columns of water, which will automatically spray plantings of tropical plants. The whole park area, including the Victory Fountain is to be electrically lighted, so that by day and by night this element of the city plan will be a dream of lovliness.

D'Arcy Ryan, America's famous lighting expert, of San Francisco World's Fair fame, and whom Mr. Blanchard secured to do the lighting of Broadway, Los Angeles, has offered to give his services for the purpose of lighting the various features of this plan. He believes the inner city of Los Angeles may be made more beautiful by night than any city in the country.

To recapitulate, it is proposed to give form and beauty to the city by placing new buildings required in properly placed and co-ordinated groups, to stabilize values and enhance the charm of the city as a place in which to live and as a tourist center and to rehabilitate depleted values in the heart of the city. It is proposed to have an orderly and carefully thought-out scheme. The improvements indicated in the proposed plan are inevitable, as part of the city's natural growth. Shall these improvements be placed as suggested or in some other way? Shall the new buildings be placed haphazard without any plan? These are the pertinent questions.

EDUCATING THE PUBLIC.

In order to bring this city plan idea keenly to the attention of all, certain facts, which are pertinent, should be made available. As instance of nonplanning of the greater city, there are several hundred

FAST START BY NEW UNIVERSITY.

Old State Normal, Now Branch of Berkeley and with Full Curriculum, Serves Thousand Students at Summer Session; Famous Educators Here.

BY HELEN SOMMERS.

There's no Campanile pointing the way to the stars for those on learning bent; no oaks to stroll beneath; no queer cow trails to follow up to the Big C, and none of a host of other things you fondly finger over in that section of your memory devoted to your university days at Berkeley, but it's here, nevertheless, that newly budded branch from the State university now in summer session in the buildings of the Los Angeles State Normal School on North Vermont avenue.

Here and there you will discover an echo of the Berkeley campus, and the atmosphere is there, the big, broad, elevating atmosphere of California's halls. By what miracle did this intangible thing answering to the name of atmosphere get down here to us in the south? Through the most concrete means. It came in the Pullmans (running via tracks or highway) that brought the professors. We take off our hats to the professors, for it feels fine, very fine, to have some of that choice atmosphere transplanted to our own City of the Angels.

It was the prophecy of the wiseacres, that attendance at the second summer session held in Los Angeles, and the first as a part of the University of California, would reach the thousand mark, which it has dutifully done minus but a handful, a dozen or so. Outside of those registered, are many who daily attend certain lectures as auditors. Berkeley, with twenty summer sessions to her credit, has had a decided falling off in number this year, having a total of 3191 students enrolled, and Berkeley has had as many as 5000 enrolled at her summer session.

We have twenty-six departments in the southern branch of the university summer session, whereas they have seven more departments at the northern campus, although we have not as many courses in each department as they have in the north. But there's a dearth of men at our summer session. To the 781 women enrolled are only 132 men.

A summer session appeals to broker and bricklayer alike and offers them strong qualities for their work. Butcher, baker and candlestick maker, no matter what their business may be, 'tis quite the popular adventure, and all in the day's work, to attend summer session, if you can possibly get there. Of course, teachers lead with 574, students 186, 61 homekeepers, 31 nurses, and a varying number of physicians, ranchers, actresses, miners, salesmen and women, laborers, masseuses, street car conductors, lawyers, journalists, clerks, designers, inspector of textiles, librarian, playground directors, school superintendents, business women, authors, bank employees, secretaries, social service workers, sisters, and telegraph and telephone operators.

And they hail from the Yukon to Mexico, from the Atlantic seaboard to the Pacific. Canada, Alaska, and Mexico. Here twenty-five States are represented: Arizona, 42, Colorado 8, Idaho 3, Illinois 5, Indiana 1, Kansas 2, Minnesota 2, Missouri 3, Nebraska 7, Nevada 2, New Jersey 3, New Mexico 4, Ohio 2, Oklahoma 2, Oregon 4, Pennsylvania 4, South Dakota 4, Tennessee 1, Texas 12, Utah 6 and Washington 3. From twenty-two counties of California sessioners have flocked and from the city of Los Angeles come 401 questers of learning.

There are 325 who have graduated from high school, 300 from Normal and eighty from the finest universities in the country.

A sharp eye can readily detect a school teacher from a club woman. Their apparel, you know, is as different as a daisy from an azalea. The teachers wear last year's Milans with ribbon of the vintage of 1915 adorning them, or a would-be dashing sport hat picked up for 59c on some basement cranny on Broadway. While the club woman—well, she usually disports a silk sweater in the most ethereal shade of pink, costing $50 or so. The school teachers evince a supercilious superiority to fashionable dress, while the club woman caters to it, consciously or not.

There is nothing more charming than to see all the sweet-faced, white-haired women taking courses at the university, where they brush shoulders with youth in a most democratic fashion, and are as intensely interested as any of their younger generation.

TAKE THINGS SERIOUSLY.

There is one curious and outstanding angle about many of the sessioners. They very carefully set down the age, the birth place and the date of birth with a score of other commonplace facts to be found at any time in any library, concerning the gentleman under the microscopic eye of the professor, but when a really rollicking or booming idea strikes their ear drums, pencils are motionless. The professor reels off a rattling good story worthy of a general uproar of laughter, but silence reigns for a full fifteen seconds before they "fall."

The club women come to take notes with tiny gold pencils kept caged in mere specks of notebooks for just such ultra-intellectual occasions as this. And they take wispy notes on the overwhelming deluges of philosophy or fact which the "giants" from the great universities in the East and West, as well as from across the "big pond," expound. These club women attempt the co-ed attitude, and not altogether unsuccessfully in some instances. They hang their parasols on the seat in front of them and hook their hats on their knees or flop them down on that oily plateau, a typical schoolroom floor, with a true co-ed flourish.

Teachers must be learners, said Dr. Walter Morris Hart, dean of the summer session at Berkeley and father of the local sessions, while he was here last week; and without exception these teachers back him up. Everyone is up and coming to the best of his or her ability. The age demands it, and these teachers are proving themselves equal to it. Summer session is their "brushing up,;" it lops off years from their ages and they grow a new crop of energy with this turning of tables, being taught instead of teaching.

No hours are wasted. If you have a free hour, you drop into somebody's class, it doesn't matter whether the lecture is on avocado culture or on immigration. But, of course, there is that one exception, the lecture by Prof. William Lyon Phelps, Lampson professor of English literature at Yale, and noted author, lecturer and leading authority on present-day literature. The cue was given in a clever jingle appearing in one of the biweekly issues of the summer session newspaper.

"A lady from South Figueroa
Found life a most terrible boah;
So she escaped one day
In her gay Chevrolet,
And came to hear the Yale Lyon
roah."

POPULAR INSTRUCTORS.

Prof. Phelps originally had a lecture room in Millspaugh Hall, but the huge volume of his classes forced him to move to much larger quarters. This is the favorite haven for those who come as auditors, and Prof. Phelps's lectures draw crowds numbering close to half a thousand. If all the other lecture rooms should suddenly find themselves without an audience of a single sessioner, there would be no mystery about it. Any one could tell you that the "Pied Piper" was Prof. Phelps, and the "hill" that opened up and swallowed all his followers was California Hall.

There are many other instructors of national fame at the summer session. Take Florence Sutton, of the family of great tennis players! and Senorita Carolina Marcial Dorado, associate professor of Spanish at Bryn Mawr, whom Dean Monroe E. Deutsch, introduced in a manner that endeared her to all native Californians: "The tie that binds; Spain, the mother, California, the daughter." And there is Prof. Perham William Nahl, associate professor of forehand drawing and art anatomy at Berkeley, whose sketching classes on the lawns provoke much amusement with their striking poses. Dr. J. E. Coit, expert in citriculture and professor at the university since 1909, naturally looms big in our southern landscape.

One can reach the summer session by taking the Heliotrope-avenue cars, but many of the elite come in their own machines, spiffy roadsters, sedans, coupes and limousines, but of Fords, nary a one has appeared on the campus to date. This absence of flivvers is the most unique feature of the summer session.

Ugh! Calomel Sickens; Salivates!
Please Try Dodson's Liver Tone

I am sincere! My medicine does not upset liver and bowels so you lose a day's work.

You are bilious! Your liver is sluggish! You feel lazy, dizzy and all knocked out. Your head is dull, your tongue is coated, breath bad; stomach sour and bowels constipated. But don't take salivating calomel. It makes you sick; you may lose a day's work.

Calomel is mercury or quicksilver which causes necrosis of the bones. Calomel crashes into sour bile like dynamite, breaking it up. That's when you feel that awful nausea and cramping.

If you want to enjoy the nicest, gentlest liver and bowel cleansing you ever experienced, just take a dose of harmless Dodson's Liver Tone tonight. Your druggist or dealer sells you a bottle of Dodson's Liver Tone for a few cents, under my personal money-back guarantee that each spoonful will clean your sluggish liver better than a dose of nasty calomel and that it won't make you sick.

Dodson's Liver Tone is real liver medicine. You'll know it next morning because you will wake up feeling fine; your liver will be working, your headache and dizziness gone, your stomach will be sweet and your bowels regular. You will feel like working; you'll be cheerful, full of vigor and ambition.

Dodson's Liver Tone is entirely vegetable, therefore harmless and cannot salivate. Give it to your children. Millions of people are using Dodson's Liver Tone instead of dangerous calomel now. Your druggist will tell you that the sale of calomel is almost stopped entirely here.

NEW PHASE OF MERRY WAR OVER CLERKSHIP.

WILLIAM L. CLARK NOW FEARS MANDATE WILL BE IGNORED. DOWD'S JOB LIMITED?

In answer to a complaint in intervention, William L. Clark, who recently obtained an alternative writ of mandate to compel the Civil Service Commission to certify his name and two others on a list eligible for appointment as County Clerk or show cause why not, yesterday filed an amended complaint. Mr. Clark, in the amended complaint, alleges, among other things, that he has been informed by members of the commission that they will not place his name among the eligibles for appointment, or on the list for appointment at all.

The amended complaint was filed by Attorney Minor Moore in answer to a complaint in intervention filed on behalf of Herman C. Lichtenberger, head of the probate department of the County Clerk's office, who alleges that Mr. Clark, as an employee of the commission, had no right to take the examination for clerk at all.

In the document filed yesterday Mr. Clark claims that he is entitled to have his name certified, but that he was informed the commissioners had no intention of so certifying it to the Board of Supervisors. He also alleges that the appointment of Roy W. Dowds, as acting County Clerk, can legally last only sixty days from appointment.

Argument on the writ will be heard before Judge Jackson on August 5.

POLITICS.

THE WATCHMAN.

TREND OF POLITICAL THOUGHT AND ACTION.

By the Sentry on His Beat.

With the incoming of a new city administration, and the annual struggle to make the municipal income meet the departmental demands, which has required a cut of nearly $2,000,000, the cry about the dollar tax limit is again revived. The situation also brings up discussion of other alleged weaknesses of the present patchwork city charter, and the necessity for a modern governing document that will meet the needs of a city headed rapidly toward the acquirement of 1,000,000 population.

While a city charter could not be put before the people of Los Angeles for their approval or disapproval until next year, it is an obvious fact that months of preparation will be necessary for the construction of a well-conceived document. Mayor Snyder says this subject will be given his careful consideration as soon as the fleet-welcoming activities are out of the way, and that the strong business and civic organizations of Los Angeles will be called into conference on the subject of the selection of a board of freeholders for the purpose of getting to work on a real man-size city charter.

It is devoutly to be hoped that the freak propositions that have crept into other proposed charters will be studiously avoided, and a strong, sensible, businesslike document will be forthcoming.

A Sensible Movement.

The Municipal League, erstwhile inclined to the path of fads and fancies, has finally struck a sensible route on at least one public matter. That is the consolidation of city and county jails under one management; the humanitarian plan of cleaning up present City Jail quarters and putting prisoners out on farms as speedily as possible after the courts have passed upon their cases.

The Board of Supervisors, while having taken no official action, individually indorse the movement; the City Council members are in line; various civic and business organizations give their approval to what seems a sensible business move and a more just treatment of offenders of the law.

It is all in accord with the sure-coming city-county consolidation. One by one, adjacent communities are annexing to Los Angeles, and much on the general line of providing one government is being accomplished in this manner. Eventually, in the opinion of The Watchman, certain outside sections of Los Angeles county will form a new county and the city-county consolidation will become a reality.

"Honor to Whom," Etc.

A pleasing event of the past week was the complimentary luncheon tendered by the Los Angeles Optimists' Club to Arthur Baker on Friday at the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Beside club members there was a large assemblage of other friends of Mr. Baker, and a handsomely-engraved watch, with chain, was presented to him in appreciation of his services to the community.

Mr. Baker leaves the city's employ as purchasing agent on the 16th inst., to become State assistant purchasing agent, where his peculiar talents will be applied to a much wider field. Naturally, the question arises as to who will be the Mayor's appointee to fill the vacancy here. The indications are that Thomas Oughton, assistant purchasing agent, is in line for the place; but there is a possibility, it is said, that the plum may fall to Frank Folsom, storehouse keeper, or to D. P. Nicklin, purchasing agent for the police service department.

Time for a Showdown.

Those who are very close to Mayor Snyder declare that the ensuing week doubtless will bring definite action on His Honor's plan to secure the removal of various Woodman appointees whom he considers not in sympathy with his administration.

The Mayor has not directly asked these appointees for their resignations, but he has expressed his attitude, through the public press and otherwise, so that they are fully aware of his sentiments—yet no resignations have been forthcoming. Now that Councilmen are back from vacations, and the Mayor has conferred with them individually, it appears the propitious time to act has arrived.

The Mayor, doubtless, will call certain commissioners and other Woodman appointees before him and give them the opportunity to resign. If they refuse, the next step will be to ask the Council to support him in their removal, and to make explicit statements to the Council members as to just why he desires their retirement. The Mayor is confident that he will have the support of the Council.

Two-horned Dilemma.

Should the Fire Commission violate the law adopted by the initiative vote of the people of Los Angeles, and, therefore, not subject to change by the City Council, and keep smaller crews at its fire houses than this law provides, in order that it may give some protection to other districts, or should it obey the law, close up such fire houses as cannot be fully manned, and throw the various districts open to serious fire hazards?

Which ever way the commission acts, it must face a dilemma. For some time past the law-breaking attitude has been given preference; now the commission proposes to obey the law and put the responsibility on the Council—or the people who voted the two-platoon system. The Fire Commission and members of the City Council will confer tomorrow morning on the definite policy to be followed.

Demand for "Stovepipes."

The naming of various and sundry prominent cits. on Reception committees for the welcoming of the fleet has caused a flurry on sartorial lines. Some of these men never in their lives wore a silk hat, but they are grimly determined to meet the dictates of Fashion Arbiter Blanchard. One of the committeemen has announced that it will set him back nearly $300 to provide the necessary togs for wear during this democratic welcome to the Pacific fleet. Humble citizens who were overlooked when the lists were named by Mayor Snyder may congratulate their pocketbooks, anyway.

But there's some comfort to the appointees in the fact that present outlay may be made use of again. A little later President Wilson will be here, and by that time the silk hat owners may have become used to the new headgear. A silk hat of the proper pedigree will keep, and it's a handy thing to have in the family.

That Special Session.

Gossip has it that Hiram Johnson has passed the word to Gov. Stephens, to lay off that stuff about any extra session of the State Legislature for the purpose of indorsing national woman suffrage. Gossip has it that Hiram has become convinced that the women are for the League of Nations, and that his political aspirations would be given a sudden swat if the women of the United States all had the vote.

It is interesting, by the way, to note that various Assemblymen of Los Angeles, and presumably other districts, have been approached by prominent club women and asked to cancel their bills for remuneration in case an extra session has been called so that extra expense to the State might not be a stumbling-block. It is also interesting to note that, so far as known, not a single Assemblyman has had "the cause" sufficiently at heart to promise to renounce his stipend.

Gifts to the Parks?

It is the purpose of the new Mayor of Los Angeles to advance in every possible way the practical application of the bequest of the late Col. Griffith J. Griffith for the benefit of Griffith Park. For years the late Col. Griffith, seconded by his son, Van Griffith, worked for the improvement of that magnificent domain, Griffith Park, which he donated to the city, but no such progress was made as was desired.

Isn't it about time for men and women who have made fortunes in Los Angeles to follow the example of San Franciscans who have given portions of their fortunes for the beautification of Golden Gate Park. That park has museum, music stand, conservatory, children's playground, etc., and many beautiful statues, as gifts from its citizens. The opportunity for Angelenos' gifts awaits.

This item isn't strictly political, and there is more or less doubt as to the propriety of its appearance in this column; but there has been more or less politics in the Griffith Park situation for many years, so we'll let it ride.

PLAN FOR A CITY DE LUXE

thousand dollars' worth of unnecessary street pavement in Los Angeles, due to the faulty planning of streets. In this connection, it would not be difficult to show that on account of ill-considered subdivision and improperly co-ordinated and disproportioned street planning, there has been lost to the taxpayer of the city of Los Angeles an amount equal to the price of a public library building. Also a probable congestion on Broadway within a period of five years will require subway solution; also $40,000,000 of depreciation of values in the heart of the city in the past five years, due to the speculative instincts of the community, "misdirected." Would it not be well to educate public sentiment? Would it be well to produce conditions in the city of Los Angeles which would induce outsiders to purchase Los Angeles inside property rather than to encourage a sentiment which induces the local capitalist to gain a dollar at one end of the town and be content to lose it at the other?

Therefore, I believe it is absolutely essential to the intelligent comprehension of this problem, by the public at large, that certain facts above referred to, and others, be presented with authority. Whether the city of Los Angeles as a whole shall be encouraged in legitimate desire for orderly growth, comfortable and sanitary conditions and beauty, when it may be easily obtained by the exercise of forethought and the spirit of service on the part of the "city fathers" is the question evoked by this plan.

ROUND OF JOY FOR "GOBS."

Lavish Welcome Prepared for Sailors; Clubs to Entertain Officers.

The Enlisted Men's Club will be the Mecca of the sailors of the Pacific fleet during the visit of the armada. Announcement of the club's plans, made yesterday by Mrs. M. J. Connell, founder, revealed the most lavish preparations. The third floor, gymnasium and basement of Trinity Hotel will be thrown open so that every man of the fleet can find there all the comforts of home.

Here's what will be "on tap" in the way of "eats" all the time, day and night, to be served free to any sailor of the Pacific fleet: Sandwiches, cake, doughnuts, pies, ice cream, coffee, tea, milk, all the fruits of the season. And there will be no limit to the service.

There will be jazz music at the club all the time, and a dance every night. A big soda fountain is being installed and there will be an expert "mixer." Extra telephones have been put in for the boys' use and qualified men will be placed in charge of information bureaus.

Here is a list of amusements to be found at the club for the sailors to choose from: Talking machine, piano, books, current magazines, daily papers, stringed musical instruments, stationery, souvenir postcards, dominoes, checkers, chess, parcheesi, cards, player piano, billiards, writing desks, lounges and soft, easy chairs, checking-room, gymnasium.

AT MEN'S CLUBS.

Plans for the entertainment of officers at the men's clubs are under way and during fleet week these clubs will practically hold open house.

William May Garland is chairman of the committee and has been in conference with Will Davis, president of the California Club, and in telegraphic communication with F. B. Silverwood, president of the Jonathan Club, who is absent from the city. Mr. Garland himself is president of the Los Angeles Athletic Club.

A system is being arranged so that every member of each organization can extend as many cards as he wishes to officers of the fleet. Each clubman will be expected to play host to two or three officers.

LONG BEACH PROGRAMME.

Elaborate plans for entertaining the men are being made by the War Camp Community Service of Los Angeles, its activities extending from Los Angeles to Long Beach, San Pedro, Monrovia, Pasadena, Arcadia, Venice and Riverside. The W.C.C.S. will take charge of a series of entertainments at Long Beach on the day the fleet arrives.

Representatives of the Enlisted Men's Club will present each sailor with a complete programme of all entertainments scheduled for this city. A beach barbecue will be served Saturday afternoon and a ball will be given Saturday night. There will be 1000 girls at this dance, and music will be provided by a band and orchestra. Girls may get tickets by applying at the W.C.C.S. Club at Long Beach.

Mrs. C. H. Spence is chairman of the Committee of Chaperones for the ball. The committee consists of the following Long Beach women: Mmes. Abby De Avirett, John N. Craig, J. A. Rominger, Frank Merriam, George H. Besoncon, H. L. Pillsbury, P. H. Grote, J. W. Anderson, A. T. Cowley, Dr. Margaret V. Clark, Dr. Nellie Schenck, Mmes. F. L. Rogers, L. P. Crutcher, F. M. Nickels, O. M. Nearley, L. N. Whealton, Kitty Foote, Arthur Ross, W. C Shaw, Herbert Ahlswede, Fred S. James, Ray R. Clark, J. J. Penny, Claude Cummins, J. D. Humiston, I. R. Hall, W. E. King, L. E. Howard, Miss Maude E. Homer, Mmes. Genevria E. Wall, Lillian B. Spannagel, J. H. Meldrum, Adelaide Luna, Irene Nason, Roy McClure, Herbert Browne, C. F. A. Johnson, John Meteer, H. W. Dyer, J. M. Tanner, J. E. Shimer, S. A. D. Shilling.

At Long Beach Sunday night every church will serve free cold suppers to the men. On Sunday afternoon there will be a big community sing at Long Beach Park, with Eugene Tincher directing.

KNIGHTS WILL MAKE JACKIES HAPPY HERE.

The thirty-four thousand officers and men of the great fleet are to be accorded a royal reception by members of more than sixty Knights of Columbus' councils along the Pacific Coast, according to plans mapped out yesterday at a meeting in Knights of Columbus' Auditorium at which were gathered prominent knights from all parts of the coast.

J. Vincent Hannon, chairman of the reception committee of Los Angeles Council, No. 615, outlined the local programme, which will include dances every night except Sunday, afternoon receptions and open-house at all times.

Millions of cigarettes, bales of writing paper and envelopes and large supplies of hard candy and athletic equipment will be distributed among the men according to Daniel E. Doran, of San Francisco, special representative of the Knights of Columbus War Activities Committee, who attended the session.

D. Joseph Coyne, John T. Curtin, Dr. Arnold Burkelman, Louis J. Euler and Joseph Tuitte were appointed to assist Mr. Hannon in making plans for the local reception.

Two hundred cots will be installed in the Knights of Columbus Building for the convenience of the men, and a special reception station has been established at the foot of First street, San Pedro, where the Knights will conduct an information bureau with comforts for the men. Thomas K. Adlard, Knights of Columbus secretary in charge of the building at the submarine base, will be assisted by members of San Pedro and Los Angeles Councils in taking care of the men.

TO RECEIVE SECRETARY.

Dinner and Speaking at Function for Daniels Here.

A reception and dinner for Secretary of the Navy Daniels and Mrs. Daniels will be given at the Jonathan Club next Saturday evening by the committee of thirty prominent citizens headed by Dr. Randolph Hill and named by the Mayor as a Reception Committee for the Secretary. George Denis will be toastmaster and it is expected that Mayor Snyder and Mr. Daniels, as well as others, will speak. The affair will be formal and 200 invitations will be issued. Members of the Jonathan Club will be admitted for the speaking after the dinner.

The Reception Committee will go to San Diego by special train at 9 o'clock a.m., Friday, to greet the Secretary.

proaches will admit developments sufficient to provide maintenance and operation of the Pacific fleet at its present strength, so as to meet all needs of the navy. Estimates have been requested and the commandant has been instructed to be prepared to discuss the matter with Secretary Daniels. A sum of $50,000,000 was said by Capt. Beach to be enough to establish the naval base. This sum, if the naval base is decided upon, will undoubtedly be paid to California contractors to construct the base.

PRICES

So far as house furnishings are concerned, prices to the retailer are continually on the up-grade. Naturally the retailer's prices to the consumer are taking the same course for it stands to reason that the more the retailer has to pay to replace an article sold, the more he must get for his merchandise. This fact leads us to suggest to all householders and to all prospective home-makers that the time to buy is NOW, from stocks accumulated at old and lower prices—from Brent's, because the stocks are large and rightly priced, consistent with good business methods. Our prices, like those at other stores, are continually going up, but we can assure you that comparison will prove that we are several "notches" behind in this upward price trend—due in main part to early buying and, for these times, good deliveries from our many manufacturers. Comparison will prove our assertion. Our prices are lower.

BETTER HOMES

You are cordially invited to bring your "Better Home" plans to Brent's. Our entire organization is at your service at all times—whether your wants be large or small we will deem it a pleasure to assist you in every possible way. Unquestionably, the time for furnishing is NOW and we are sure that you will realize this fact if you study existing conditions and the outlook for the future. You must realize that purchases made NOW will mean great savings.

Here at "Brent's" it is not necessary for you to pay cash. Your wants can be supplied and your home made a "Better Home" if you take advantage of the confidence we have in you and avail yourself of the opportunities offered in our wonderfully easy "Credit Plan"—a plan that is elastic to a degree, unincumbered by drastic rules and regulations and conditions. A plan of great magnitude, built around our 30 years of experience and our 30-year-old slogan:

WE TRUST THE PEOPLE.

Call and see us at your convenience, inspect our lines — compare our prices with those quoted elsewhere. Let us explain to you our method of furnishing your home.

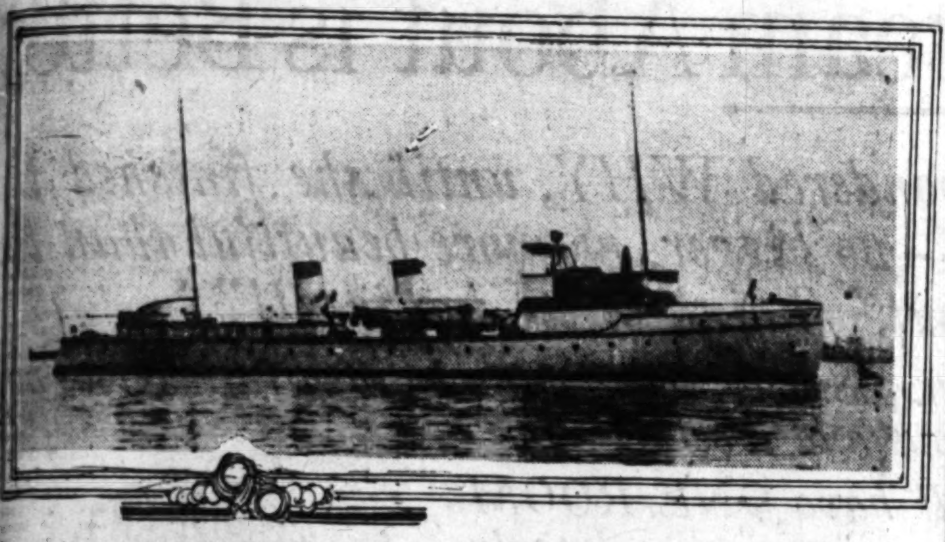
and Their Officers in Southland.

For Official Reception Committee to the Fleet.



G. Allan Hancock's Yacht, the Velero.

FOR FLEET'S RECEPTION.

Rigid Naval Etiquette is to be Observed When Big Ships Arrive.

All the rigid formality of naval etiquette will be observed upon the arrival of the fleet here next Saturday, and the reception of the ships by an official committee of representative citizens will be strictly according to the navy "Hoyle."

Every member of the reception committee will go armed with a full list of navy rules and regulations, while several resident navy men will be present to act as coaches if necessary. The reception committee will go aboard Rear-Admiral Rodman's flagship, the New Mexico, on G. Allan Hancock's private yacht, the Velero, tendered for the purpose.

With the Secretary of the Navy aboard the flagship the naval requirements demand the fulfillment of a most formal programme. If a gun can be mounted aboard the Velero in readiness for the event, this will mean a volley of nineteen guns. Should Governor Stephens be aboard the private yacht with the local reception committee a return salute of seventeen guns will be made by the flagship, otherwise the New Mexico will give only an informal acknowledgement of the Velero's greeting.

Members of the party will stand uncovered during the exchange of salutes, which may include the sending of a wireless message to the flagship and informal messages by semaphore.

The Velero will "lie to," while the flagship and other vessels of the fleet cast anchor. Thereupon the official welcoming committee will board the New Mexico, advancing according to seniority. Sailors will stand at salute, and the party will be received by the Secretary of the Navy, Admiral Rodman and staff of officers. Introductions will follow, members of the committee being presented in turn to the higher ranking officers of the flagship.

An informal discussion will then be held during which the programme for the entertainment of officers and men of the fleet will be outlined.

With the departure of the reception committee from the flagship, if accompanied by Governor Stephens a salute of seventeen guns will be given. The Governor will be attended by eight side-boys, and the traditional "four ruffles" will be given.

This latter ritual, which is one of the quaint ceremonials of the navy, is generally referred to as "piping the call" or the "boatswain's call." It is given by the boatswain, standing back of the side-boys, and consists of four melodious toned notes blown on a small musical instrument. These notes, beginning with a low tremulous sound, rise to a high crescendo.

Following the visit of the reception committee to the flagship, the courtesy of a return-call will be made by the officers of the ship, which last ceremonial ends the formalities of greeting and welcoming the fleet.

The Velero, which has been loaned by its owner, G. Allan Hancock, for the use of the reception committee, for its formal visit to the flagship, will in every way meet the punctilious demands of the event.

It has a length of one hundred feet, carries a powerful wireless apparatus which has a sending power of 200 miles and a receiving radius of approximately 3000 miles. The craft has a tonnage of 57 tons net, and two 150-horse-power standard engines. Its speed is twelve knots an hour or something like fourteen miles. Its interior is palatially appointed, with six commodious staterooms, salon, galley and ample deck space. The yacht can readily accommodate the members of the official welcoming committee, who will number something over twenty-five.

And All Rectal Diseases

WITHOUT an OPERATION

For twenty-five years we have been curing diseases of the rectum and lower bowel. During that time our experience has enabled us to develop a method that is superior to others. We cure without surgery and our patients are not confined in bed and seldom lose a moment's time from their business.

Drs. White and Wainwright,
Los Angeles, Cal.

July 23, 1919.

Dear Sirs:—I wish to congratulate you upon your successful method of treating piles and fistula. My case no doubt was like thousands of others you have handled since being in the Special class. I can heartily recommend you to any one so troubled. For it was like a vacation to me during my short stay in Los Angeles. To leave there a cured man of a troublesome ailment, which had been hanging on for several years. Dreading an operation at a hospital by inexperienced hands in that line, I decided to lay my case before you and am glad I did. For during my stay in your city I gained four pounds in weight and cannot praise you too highly in your sure way of treatment, which besides being painless and bloodless, does not hinder any one from attending to business or upon pleasure bent as I was. They will be doubly rewarded for the treatments as it will not inconvenience any one in the least, which alone is worthy of consideration. Trusting you will have continued success as in the past, I am yours truly,

RULES TO GUARD BIG FLEET CROWDS DRAWN.

HARBOR COMMISSION ADOPTS TRANSPORTATION RATES FOR WATER TRIPS.

Rules and regulations for the accommodation and protection of the thousands of people expected to visit the fleet were prescribed yesterday in an order adopted by the Board of Harbor Commissioners.

To avoid complications and confusion, the board named the San Pedro Transportation Company as the exclusive selling agent of tickets for transportation between the designated landing barges and the warships.

The rates established by the board are as follows:

For a continuous trip from the harbor landings around the fleet and return, 75 cents.

One-way fare from landings to any warship in each direction, 25 cents.

Fare from one warship to another warship, 10 cents.

Ten per cent. of the money collected from the sale of tickets is to be paid to the city of Los Angeles. As the San Pedro Transportation Company must charter 300 or 400 launches and ferry boats to accommodate the public, the company must pay 80 per cent. of the gross receipts raised by each vessel to the owner of the launch or ferry.

Mayor Snyder has announced that he will issue a proclamation calling upon the people of Los Angeles to begin the decoration of their homes and places of business tomorrow morning.

The Mayor has also requested the City Council to designate next Saturday a holiday for all city employees, to give them an opporunity to witness the arrival of the fleet.

BEDS FOR SAILORS.

Six Hundred Fifty Promised, But More Are Needed.

A good start has been made according to the report made by Capt. C. A. Rexroad, heading the Committee for Free Beds for the Sailors. The Y.M.C.A. and the Knights of Columbus have furnished 400 beds each, and the Enlisted Men's Hotel has pledged to house 150. The Bible Institute has pledged about 100. The churches are soliciting their membership today, through the agency of the Federation of Churches, for pledges to furnish free beds in the homes of their members. Good substantial results are expected from this campaign, but there will still be a large number to be cared for. Hotel men who can reserve a little extra space, lodges that are willing to arrange for lodgings free for a number of these sailors, also individuals who are in a position to help, should call up War Camp Community Service and tell Capt. Rexroad how many of our guests you can provide with free lodgings.

Y.M.C.A. TO SERVE TARS.

Definite plans concerning the participation of the Y.M.C.A. in the reception to be given the Pacific fleet were announced yesterday by W. H. Wallace, executive secretary of the central Y.M.C.A., following a meeting of committeemen from San Pedro, Long Beach and Los Angeles. The Y.M.C.A.'s of the three cities will co-operate in offering the sailors opportunity for free use of information headquarters, telephones, free baths, reading facilities, automobile rides, sleeping accommodations and even entertainment on the landing at the Submarine Base while the men are waiting for boats to convey them back to their ships at night.

In addition to this service, Mr. Wallace stated, the Y.M.C.A. is preparing to furnish at least 250 girls to serve meals at Exposition Park. Most of these will be "hello" girls employed by the Southern California Telephone Company, under the chaperonage of Mrs. A. B. Cass, wife of the president of the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A.

J. W. Hillard, camp secretary for the navy Y.M.C.A. at the harbor, has made arrangements for opening headquarters for the sailors in one of the large warehouses at the landing.

Information booths, telephones, lavatories, writing tables and even baths are to be installed. Hundreds of cots are being secured from the War Work Council of the Y.M.C.A. at San Francisco. These will be used both in the city and at the harbor.

The Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. has offered its auditorium roof and other hall and dormitory space for approximately 500 cots. The shower baths and swimming pool at the central Y.M.C.A. on South Hope street will be open to the visiting sailors during the entire period of their stay.

Long Beach also will offer bath and sleeping facilities and other accommodations.

It was stated that funds from the National War Work Council have been set aside for entertainment use of Y.M.C.A.s in every coast city at which the fleet will touch. A group of secertaries will accompany the fleet from San Diego north.

IOWANS TO GREET ARMADA

Iowans look forward to next Saturday with especial interest, for not only will they hold their regular picnic-reunion on that day at Bixby Park, Long Beach, but they will also have a fine look at the great fleet from the bluffs, one block from the park. In order to accommodate the picnickers, the county headquarters and registers will be opened at 7 o'clock in the morning at the park, thus giving ample time for all Hawkeyes to circulate about and renew old friendships before the fleet arrives in the afternoon.

Iowa headquarters will be at the Schuyler Hotel on Ocean avenue, and plans are being made to take care of 50,000 guests if need be, for a record-breaking attendance is expected not merely from the Southland, but from all parts of California. A feature of the exercises will be the singing by the Iowan songstresses, Mmes. Barbara Merkel Sherman and Anna Merkel Evans, of the "Iowa Song," composed by Mrs. Stella Bullard Gilbert.

"I'm Thankful that the Home I Dream About is Bette than the home I can afford TODAY!" she said, and someone wondered WHY, until she finished t remark. "If I were satisfied with having the same sort of home---no bigger, no more beautiful than t one where we live now---I would have no home to DREAM about. Think of it---no ideal!"

She said that there is happiness in aspiring, hopeful, striving discontent. Surely there must be inspiration too, a stimulus to climb higher in the world—the incentive is so wholesome, generous and lovely.

A NEW YORK paper a short time ago stated there were prospects of Los Angeles becoming the largest city in the United States. A mammoth industry that has recentlly established its factories in Los Angeles expressed eight reasons for its choice of this location:

- —Ideal Climatic Conditions
- —Most Bountiful Water Supply
- —Cheapest Power
- —Finest Roads
- —Most Satisfactory Labor Conditions
- —Convenience of Transcontinental Transportation
- —Closest Proximity to the undeveloped territories of the Pacific Ocean
- —AND a Harbor which, when made to meet the requirements, will, with the aid of the Panama Canal, offer access to any port in the world.

Members of the United States Chamber of Commerce, realizing the possibilities of Los Angeles, are visiting us this week.

Let us gird up our loins to accept not only the opportunities we already have, but those we can make for ourselves.

If we "make hay while the sun shines," taking advantage of the glorious opportunities already ours, we may accomplish what the New York prophet has foretold.

During forty years we've learned that men and women who cherished cheerful longings for homes better than their means permit, TODAY, find abundant happiness as they go through life, and continually ATTAIN more of the beautiful and worth-while things that they desire.

MUSIC SHOWS HOLD STAGE.

Eltinge Revue to Provide Smart Entertainment.

New Play at the Majestic; Burbank Reopening.

Summer Programme at the Vaudeville Houses.

The stage is to continue merrily along its course this week, with a series of bright offerings, and no slowing down of a number of productions. The musical show is to the fore, with Julian Eltinge appearing in his smart new revue. Also there's to be a revival of "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway" by a new musical comedy company. Lewis Stone and associated players have a new and clever play, according to all reports, while "Civvy Clothes" doesn't show any signs of moving away. Comedy, melody and novelty are much in evidence in the vaudeville bills.

Mason.

Julian Eltinge, in a diversified entertainment, called the "Revue of Nineteen-Nineteen" is to hold the attention of patrons of the Mason this week, with his usual clever type of production. Feminine impersonation and Eltinge are synonymous, and in his latest show he has the opportunity of presenting some of the best of his old angles and some unusual new ones on this type of entertainment.

Eltinge has a company in which there are at least five people who have made special hits locally and elsewhere. There are Cleo Gascoigne, dancer; Marjorie Bennett sister of Enid Bennett; Virginia Whitman and Arthur Shirley; Leo Beers, entertainer. Others appearing in the new Eltinge company are the Gaudsmith brothers, the Littlejohns, Kathleen Dewey, Marionne and Gorhada.

The show has made a big success on tour.

Majestic.

Marion Fairfax's dramatic novelty, "The Talker," will be Lewis S. Stone's new vehicle at the Majestic Theater, beginning tonight.

"The Talker" is a woman, of course—the wife of a $35 clerk who couldn't provide his wife with the luxuries for which she had married—or for which she foolishly told herself she had married. And she listens to the advances of a youth who has fortune and looks—and "the manner." She prates of woman's freedom—of her equality with man—and proceeds to create talk by going to cafes with her admirer.

This talk contaminates the mind of the wife's sister who ultimately is ruined by the cad of the piece, but the wife herself, convinced of her error, returns to her husband.

There is a big lesson in "The Talker"—also a lot of good clean comedy.

Morosco.

And still the end of the sensational run here of Thompson Buchanan's great comedy success does not seem to be in sight. "Civilian Clothes" begins its sixth week with today's matinee at the Morosco theater, capacity houses making a continued run to the production imperative, it is announced.

The beauty of the play is that it is not a war play. The many laugh-producing situations in "Civilian Clothes" are the result of the most novel ideas born of the war period. It proves an extremely happy clearing of the clouds.

Clyde Fillmore, the young eastern actor is making a hit in the leading role of Capt. McGinnis. Eleanor Woodruff, playing the character of his aristocratic wife is warmly acclaimed. Others in the play are Harlan Tucker, Arline Griffith, Alfred Whitman, Eloise Clement, Roscoe Karns, Lillian Elliott, Dora May Howe, Joseph Eggenton, Leta Nelson, James Corrigan, Russ Dudley, Harry Duffield, May Hanna and Charles Buck.

Burbank.

The Burbank opens today with a new musical comedy company, playing George M. Cohan's popular "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," produced under the direction of A. R. Pelton, a theatrical man of Denver. The company is known as Harry Siebert's new Burbank Musical Comedy Company.

Marie Rich will be seen as Mary Jenkins, the housemaid, and George Banta, Jr., as Tom Bennett, the heir to the Castleton millions. Larry Richardson as Kid Burns, is said to be an exceptional type for the part.

A chorus of sixteen girls and eight men will sing and dance.

There are many tuneful numbers in "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," among the more prominent being "So Long Mary," "Popular Millionaire," and "Mary is a Grand Old Name."

New scenery and new costumes have been secured for the production.

Orpheum.

Nellie V. Nichols, the popular singing comedienne, will top the bill at the Orpheum, beginning tomorrow. She will offer an entirely new act of character songs and studies. Miss Nichols first won success in the old Casino here, and then went to New York, where they "discovered" her—as they have many another of our products. She has since been a star standard vaudeville headliner, and stands quite alone in her line. Her Italian, Jewish and other character impersonations are very clever.

Jack Clifford and Miriam Will, also favorites here, are still playing their revised version of "At Jasper Junction," wherein he is a rube of the real type and she a city girl. Deiro, the piano-accordeon virtuoso also is on the bill. A fourth feature is the Russian classic and ballet dancing of Theodor Bekefi, formerly of the Russian imperial ballet. He is assisted by Sofia Scherer and Lorraine Marie Wise. Holdovers are Taylor Granville and Laura Pierpont in the tremendous melodrama success, "An American Ace;". Harry Hines, the fifty-eighth variety of nuts; Eddie Janis and Rene Chaplow, in their musical act, and the three Jahns, equilibrists.

Pantages.

Another collection of novel vaudeville acts will make up the show at Pantages, beginning with the matinee tomorrow.

The headliner for the week will be particularly appreciated by the children. It is Schepp's Comedy Animal Circus, with a stage full of trained monkeys, including a Brazilian monkey that cracks nuts with a couple of bricks throughout the act; a monkey soldier who drills with a rifle and then gives some impersonations, a tight wire monkey acrobat, and a tiny baby monkey that makes a leap for life.

The "Teeter" septette presents an unusually good acrobatic act including aerial feats, and the Olga Samanoff Trio, presents solos and ensemble numbers on the piano, cello and violin. Arthur Lloyd entertains with playing cards, etc., in an amusing manner. Cook and Lorenz sing, dance and tell funny stories. Nadelle and Follette produce what they call a ragtime cocktail.

Also on this programme there will be the screen Magazine and a new comedy picture.

Hippodrome.

"Dust of Desire," a dramatic story on the triangle idea, with Ruby De Reimer in the leading feminine role, will be the photoplay feature at the Hippodrome starting today. The accompanying vaudeville show is headed by the Ben Hassen Troupe of Arab tumblers. Others on the bill are Tracy, Palmer and Tracy in songs, dances and piano eccentricities; Dale Wilson, comedienne and singer, Lowry's Canines, introducing talking dogs; Fred and Peggy Pymm in "Tag Day for Ould Ireland," and Ella Le Vail, aerial artist.

Pathe News completes the programme.

DOROTHY'S VACATION A CINEMA SPREE.

Guess how Dorothy Phillips is spending her vacation.

The Universal star is attending from ten to twenty picture theaters a week.

When she is playing in a production she either has to work at night or is too tired to go downtown, and she bitterly complains that she never gets to see her rivals and confreres on the screen.

While her director, Allen Holubar, is seeking her next starring vehicle she is having a veritable cinema-orgy.

NEW PICTURES ON THE SCREEN.

is to play the lead in the New York production of "Civilian Clothes," and Claire Anderson form the triumvirate of screen luminaries who will enact the chief characters in J. F. Poland's picture play.

"The Spitfire of Seville" is the title of the film. It was produced at Universal City under the direction of George Seigmann, who made "My Unmarried Wife."

Mlle. Nova plays the Spitfire, with Hall as the American artist, and Miss Anderson in the rather ungrateful role of the American girl who loses her sweetheart to the senorina espagnol.

The photograph is by Alfred Gosden, kinemacolor expert.

Tally's.

Norma Talmadge's latest success "The Way of a Woman" to show at Tally's this week is already familiar to many theatergoers in its stage form when it was called "Nancy Lee." The play was written by Eugene Walter, and the photoplay version retains the elements of dramatic suspense which made the stage drama so popular.

Miss Talmadge appears as the proud and haughty daughter of the aristocratic South. The story of "The Way of a Woman" deals with the trials of this young girl. She marries a dissolute New Yorker for the financial advantages she hopes he will bring to her family. Her gradual disillusionment and later regeneration provide an interesting plot.

In conjunction with the feature, there will be attractive films and music.

Alhambra.

William Farnum's western photoplay, "The Lone Star Ranger," will be held over for a second week at the Alhambra Theater.

Mr. Farnum has been seen in many picturesque roles during his screen and stage career, but it can safely be said that as the fearless Texas ranger, Steele, he gives one of the most interesting portrayals.

Director J. Gordon Edwards surrounded his star with a cast including Charles Clary, Louise Lovely, G. Raymond Nye and Irene Rich.

The usual added attractions will be given, in addition to the feature.

De Luxe.

Salutary lessons to young brides who think themselves neglected by their hard working husbands and who engage in more or less harmless flirtations with other men, are embraced in the development of the story of "Let's Elope," Marguerite Clark's picture which is being presented at the De Luxe for two days. The treatment of the theme by producer and star has been guided by delicacy and taste.

The story is based upon Fred Jackson's successful play "The Naughty Wife," which made a hit in New York during the seasons of 1917-18.

Dorothy Dalton will be the attraction Tuesday and Wednesday in "The Lady of Red Butte."

MISS JAMES IN DENVER.

Grace James, well-known singer of this city, woh is visiting in Denver, has been studying with Percy Rector Stephens of Chicago during her vacation. She writes that she has heard Saslavsky in his ensemble concerts and also Reinald Werrenrath.

ALLEN HOLUBAR SEES FILMS AT HOME.

Allen Holubar, the Universal director, has joined the ranks of exhibitors. That is, Holubar exhibits his films in the seclusion of his own home to the most exacting critic in the world.

The critic is Dorothy Phillips, Holubar's wife, and the star of the Universal super-features that he directs.

After the dinner at the Holubar home the director and his wife draw comfortable chairs to the end of the library and watch the film as it is projected on a portable silver screen placed over the fireplace mantel.

Heretofore, Mr. Holubar and Miss Phillips returned to Universal City in the evening to view their day's work. Their home projection machine now makes the trip unnecessary.

ELINOR GLYN TOUCHES CHORDS OF LIFE.

The literary reputation of Elinor Glyn, author of "The Career of Katherine Bush," a thrilling story of English life and manners, which is to be shown in its film version at the California Theater this week, rests upon her brilliant descriptive powers, her daring conception of characters and her artistic treatment of any theme her facile imagination conceives. Underlying her fiction is a sub-strata of truth which renders her pen portraits highly realistic, comprehensible and natural. Her natural dramatic faculty is highly developed, the result being that all of her books have thrills and an appeal distinctly their own.

In the story of "The Career of Katherine Bush," Mrs. Glyn paints the portrait of a young woman who carves out her own career successfully, but before she reaches her goal, that of marriage to a celebrated nobleman, she suffers many a bitter pang occasioned by her recollection of imprudences of her early life. She is a woman of high ideals and she risks the loss of the love of the man she yearns for by telling him of her career, but instead of sacrificing her future he takes her to him forgivingly, and both are rendered happy.

JUMPS FROM HEAVY TO LIGHT.

George McDaniel has played the heavy in so many recent photoplays that his change to the comedy role of Ricky, the Spaghetti King, in "Lombardi, Ltd.," now in rehearsal at Metro, is rather startling. Among the black-browed roles he has assumed are the Tiger with Theda Bara in "The She Devil," the editor in George Siegmann's new picture, "Playing the Game;" Archibald Crocker, the gentlemanly drunk, with Monroe Salisbury, in "The Door Between;" Pinto Dupont, "sympathetic" heavy, with Salisbury, in "Hungry Eyes;" Caballuco, with Ella Hall, in "Love in Chains;" Nigel Anstruther, with Constance Talmadge, in "The Shuttle;" the "heavy juvenile," with William S. Hart and Katherine MacDonald, in "Shark Monroe."

MANY KIDDIES ASSIST LILA.

Lila Lee is entirely surrounded by kiddies of all ages in her latest Famous Players-Lasky starring vehicle, under the direction of Robert G. Vignola. The youngsters are of all sizes and descriptions, as well as varying ages. The picture is an original story by Beulah Marie Dix, internationally known for her marked ability as a scenarist.

EDESON SIGNS WITH SELZNICK.

Engaged for Production of "Sealed Hearts."

Tom Mix Now Sojourning in Oklahoma.

News and Gossip of Picture Play Realm.

Myron Selznick announces that he has engaged no less celebrated an actor than Robert Edeson to play in the second Eugene O'Brien production, "Sealed Hearts," which was written by Edmund Goulding. This should cause no end of comment in motion picture and theatrical circles, as Mr. Edeson is not only ranked among America's foremost actors, but he has long been one of the stage's greatest stars. He has always been at the head of his own companies and it required much persuasion and an especially inviting salary to influence Mr. Edeson to play a secondary role.

"Sealed Hearts" is an out of the ordinary picture because there are practically but three parts in the story. Eugene O'Brien will have the stellar role. Robert Edeson will have the other principal male role, and Lucille Stewart, who played with Mr. O'Brien in "The Perfect Lover" will have the leading feminine role.

Mix Leaves for Oklahoma.

Tom Mix, the William Fox cowpuncher star, and Sol. M. Wurtzel, general superintendent of the Fox Studios in Hollywood, California, left for Oklahoma Wednesday morning where they will make arrangements to take one of the most important pictures the daring star has ever undertaken.

It is expected this will be the best and most sensational story in which Tom Mix has appeared. It will contain stunts which he has never before undertaken, and perhaps more dangerous than those which have heretofore thrilled audiences all over the country.

Their headquarters for the picture will be at Ponca City, and it is expected several weeks will be spent there, despite the heat prevailing in Oklahoma. Mrs. Mix will follow her husband next week with Edward J. LeSaint, the director, and Mrs. LeSaint as well as other members of the Mix Company. More than fifty persons with fifty horses will leave for Ponca City, all the horses which have become famous in the Mix pictures, Tony, Aggie, Cloudy, Red, Eagle, Joe and Chick, Dev Jennings, the Mix Company photographer, with Ace Hunter and Roy Carpenter, assistants, and Lee Moore, Tom Mix's trainer, will accompany the star and Mr. Wurtzel.

Walthall Completes "Confession."

Henry Walthall has nearly written finis to his latest feature, "The Confession," directed by Bertram Bracken, and after a short vacation will start upon a new production, the working script of which is now being completed by Franklyn Hall. The story is "The Kentucky Colonel," adapted from the book of that name by Opie Read, and will afford Mr. Walthall an excellent opportunity of displaying his pre-eminent ability.

Work on this new production will begin in about three weeks, sets being now under construction at the National Studios, under the supervision of Art Director Martin Doner.

Kerrigan's Ghastly Collection.

To the casual observer it would seem that J. Warren Kerrigan's latest production, "The Joyous Liar," must have to do with cannibals, Dyak head-hunters, or other collectors of "human ivory"—judging from the number of skulls in evidence around his set. At the completion of the picture a whole cartload of shining white "trophies" were carted away to the ghastly skeleton chamber of the Brunton studio property room.

But it was not a case of cannibals or head-hunters. On the contrary, those skulls in "The Joyous Liar" serve to inject a lot of comedy spice into the adventure and romance of the story, and are the "pets" of a scientific criminologist.

Allan Dwan on Second.

Allan Dwan has started filming the initial scenes of his second production as an independent producer, at the head of the Allan Dwan Feature Productions. Harold MacGrath's romance of adventure, "The Luck of the Irish," has been selected as the story, and will be enacted by a cast of well-known and popular players. James Kirkwood has been cast in the role of William Grogan, a young plumber of Lower New York, who from his basement window dreams of life, as he wished it were, until fate gives him the necessary money to start out in life in quest of those things which have been but dreams. In the part of Ruth Warren, Anna Q. Nilsson will have exceptional opportunities for the kind of work in which she has won her greatest favor, while Harry Northrup and Ward Crane will have much to do with the development of the story.

Viola Lost in Wilds.

Viola Dana lost!

Not to be outdone by stories telling of one film star lost in the wilds of China, another in darkest Africa, and a noted opera singer in Mexico, the sparkling little comedienne of Screen Classics (Inc.) productions has gone and done likewise.

Viola Dana was lost—lost in the wilds of the big new Metro stage. It took John Ince, who is directing her in "Please Get Married," fully half an hour to locate his small star. He found her wandering patiently around a maze of big flats that were set up in as mystifying a manner as the famous labyrinth of Crete where maidens used to be exiled as the prey of the monster Minotaur.

Makes Prisoners Happy.

"When I took some food and toys to the Temple Club in the City Jail of Los Angeles last December," said Frank Beal, director at the William Fox studios in Hollywood, "I did not expect any other return than the pleasure of making a few unfortunates happy."

But Mr. Beal did more than that.

fered wounds and were gassed, are also on the list.

Sergt. Floyd Goodman, a United States machine gunner, of the "suicide club," three times seriously wounded, and cited for bravery while in the front-line trenches, knew enough about militarism to inject true realism into the scenes. A number of men who had either seen service abroad or who had done duty at home, were engaged by the Goldwyn casting director, Clifford Robertson, from his file of thousands of such names.

Altogether there were about 300 extra players, men in uniform and full dress, and women in evening gowns. The affair was gorgeous, but difficult to make, as well as very costly, as it is one of the largest and most sumptuously-appointed interior settings ever constructed. It was designed and executed by Art Director Hugo Ballin.

Fatty on Move Again.

Fatty Arbuckle is on the move.

He generally is. There is no more active individual on earth than this same hefty gentleman.

But this move is a considerable one for his entire studio equipment has been taken from Glendale to Culver City, where he now occupies one of the most modern plants on the Pacific Coast, ideally situated and fitted for comedy work of the latest and best character.

The comedian has just completed "Back Stage" at Glendale and his next comedy will be a rural picture, bucolic in the extreme, with pretty little Molly Malone as leading woman again and with Buster Keaton playing a most important role.

Fatty likes the farm and is partial to comedies which picture the life of the ruralite, amongst the chickens, cows and horses.

Of course, there is a love story—a really dainty and delectable one, 'tis said. And as for humor—well, there is enough comedy every moment, it is said, to keep the most copper-riveted grouch on earth in paroxysms of merriment.

Work on the settings, etc., has already been started and soon Fatty and his crew of funmakers will be busy before the camera in their new, spick-and-span, up-to-date plant.

How About the Punch?

The recent intimation that the depiction of intoxicating liquors and their effect on the consumers thereof will in future be taboo in motion pictures has brought consternation to the hearts of producers, who have already begun to wonder what will happen when the reels are really removed from the films. Henry Lehrman, the noted comedy producer, having duly sworn, deposes and says:

If wet goods must disappear from film comedy, bald-headed theater patrons may find comfort in the fact that dry goods are following in the same pathway.

Many a film actor will sprain his ankle within the next few months, when he strides up to a coffee counter and reaches for the rail.

It is a sad thing to realize that the kick in comedies must now be registered entirely with the feet.

Picture the hero, disappointed in love, rushing off to a tea room and making a beast of himself on Lipton's best.

How can he save the heroine from the drunken bully, if there are no drunken bullies?

If a ship captain can't take a schooner over the bar, will they even prevent his making port in a storm? Can we show a horse's neck or a bier? How about the old parlor wood box, if there happens to be a stick in it?

Bowers Signs with Goldwyn.

John Bowers, leading man in Goldwyn pictures, signed another year's contract July 17, to remain with the Goldwyn organization until November 20, 1920. His latest release is "Through the Wrong Door," with Madge Kennedy, in which he plays a romantic young miner of the West.

Bowers is an athletic type, a lover of motoring, golf, swimming and yachting, being the owner of the Uncas, a $25,000 racing craft, which he is to bring through the Panama Canal to the West coast this summer. The speedy boat is a seventy-footer, and is a palatial home on the water. As a boxer and wrestler, Bowers is able to meet the best in his class. He works out daily at his Culver City bungalow, and on the roads through the nearby countryside.

The picture he starts at present is with Pauline Frederick, under the direction of Frank Lloyd. This is his first experience with Miss Frederick and Mr. Lloyd. The story is laid in England, the name of which has not been decided upon.

Abandons Oriental Trip.

For several weeks Allan Dwan has been trying to make arrangements to take his company of players to the Orient for the filming of his newest picture which will be taken from Harold MacGrath's romance of mystery and adventure, "The Luck of the Irish." Owing to the scarcity of boats and the uncertainty of travel, however, he has practically abandoned the idea, and is now planning to build the many large scenes that will be required for the production.

It was Mr. Dwan's original intention to leave the early part of August for Honolulu, to spend a few days there and then go to Singapore, Cairo and other places in the Orient, but after exhausting every possible effort to make arrangements for passage for his company, he has found the steamship companies will not guarantee return passage before the early part of next year.

Charles H. Kyson, a well-known architect, has been engaged as Mr. Dwan's art director. Mr. Kyson is already supervising the building of a number of the sets that will be used for the early scenes of the story, while he is also preparing the plans for many mamouth settings including an exact reproduction of the port of Singapore, a number of street scenes and interiors in Singapore, as well as scenes reproducing spots in Cairo and other places through the Orient.

A. D. Has New Duty.

Assistant Director Fred Warren, who is aiding John Ince with the direction of Viola Dana's new starring vehicle, "Please Get Married," which she is making for Screen Classics, Inc., under the supervision of Maxwell Karger, missed his vocation when he entered the picture game. He should have been a nurse maid.

When they were shooting the fire scene in "Please Get Married," there were a number of children on the set who were going to be used later on in the day. Suddenly, without any provocation, little Oscar began to bawl. No particular attention was paid him, so he bawled harder. Then the call for quiet came, and all the noise suddenly ceased, but Oscar kept right on like the brook.

"Turn 'im off," Director Ince bellowed, so Warren went to his task.

First he stood on his head, and when that failed to bring results, he tried somersaults. Oscar was interested. So interested in fact, that he forgot to cry. The camera started to grind and the picture went on, but all the time, Fred Warren was turning somersaults for Oscar. When the scene was finished, the assistant director called it a day's work and left the somersaulting to the next unfortunate.

Frenchwoman a Visitor.

Mlle. Jacqueline Bertillon, niece of the late Alphonse Bertillon, the famous criminal expert of France, is as typically French as French can be; charmingly so. But she announces herself in favor of prohibition! This was a distinct shock to the studio world, but there was no doubting Mlle. Bertillon's sincerity, nor her frankly expressed admiration for the class of American people responsible for the national drought.

Mlle. Bertillon, herself the most eminent woman lawyer in France, is in America on a mission for her government, making an extensive study of the American juvenile courts, dependents' homes, and orphanage systems. The problems confronting the French government concerning orphans, widows, and all of those rendered destitute and helpless by the war, are being taken up with great thoroughness, and Mlle. Bertillon's appointment as the emissary of her government in this matter is a mark of recognition won by her record during a single year of legal practice in Paris.

Mlle. Bertillon spent the day, Wednesday, at the various motion-picture studios, saying that no visit to Los Angeles could be complete without such a tour.

Lewis is Busy Hero.

If Mitchell Lewis' director succeeds in working it into the story there will be at least one added scene in "The Last of His People" that wasn't set down in the original story by its authors, Robert Bradbury and Frank Howard Clark, and if the cameramen haven't missed their guess they caught every incident of the thrilling rescue which turned an impending tragedy into a breathless screen situation.

It seems that Bradbury was directing a scene with Catherine Van Buren, the leading woman, standing on a steep bank of the Hood River, in Oregon, where the Lewis company is on location, and the cameras were grinding away when suddenly the edge of the bank where Miss Van Buren was standing gave way and amid a shower of rocks and running dirt the popular leading lady was plunged into the swirling, swift-running current of the river, and disappeared from the horrified view of those remaining on the bank.

Mitchell Lewis had just finished tying a canoe to a tree on the opposite side of the river when he heard the crash and splash of the cave-in and the shouts of the company. In a flash he plunged into the stream and reached the bobbing head in time to prevent the young woman from being swept into the rapids and over the falls just below. By this time Miss Van Buren had become unconscious and Lewis afterwards declared that had it not been for this fact he would never have been able to breast the force of the current in his struggle towards the shore.

Supporting the dead weight of his burden with one arm and battling his way in the stream and shunting off rocks with the other he managed to head toward a dead tree lying out in the river where a dozen pair of hands readily snatched him and his burden out of danger. After Miss Van Buren regained consciousness and a semblance of comfort in warm blankets, she seemed none the worse for her unconventional dip and outside of a few bruises from rocks in the water, and a ruined gown, no other damage occurred.

Pacific Company Starts.

A new serial, "The Radium Raiders," with an all-star cast, including Cleo Madison, Eileen Sedgwick, Ed Brady, Bob Kortman and Bob Reeves, has just been commenced, with Robert B. Broadwell directing. The first three episodes of the story, which is written by Frederick Bennett, author of Helen Holmes serials, and many other screen productions, will be shot at Universal City. It is a thirty-six-reel production, and is produced by the Pacific Producing Company, Los Angeles.

In this production the author promises a "sensible but sensational" serial, equally interesting to the "guttersnipe as to the college professor" and although it is replete with thrills and suspense it promises a certain informative tinge. The opening portion of the serial is laid in Northern Montana, and may be called western, but not "woolly." The director, Mr. Broadwell, was recently connected with William S Hart and took with him "Daredevil" Kortman, who participated in some of the most sensational fights and special stunts of the Hart productions. As assistant director, Fred Hamer, who worked on all the large Griffith productions, is expected to prove of special value.

MAY ENTER "LEGIT."

It is possible that Helen Jerome Eddy may go on the stage, as eastern managers in the "legit" are making overtures. She achieved a subtle portrayal of the Japanese role in "The Pine Tree," with Henry B. Walthall, at the Community Theater only a few months ago, and her work in the Studio Theater, when she played Mrs. Quickly in Barrie's "Rosalind," was also notable. She has appeared here also as Mrs. Early in Lady Gregory's "Spreading the News," and Nan in Masefield's "The Tragedy of Nan."

MORE WESTERN STARS.

There are two new western stars on the cinema horizon. "Hoot" Gibson, who has supported Harry Carey in many of his big western productions, is to be co-starred in two-reel western dramas with Mildred Moore, formerly leading woman with Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran, the Universal comedians. Reeves Eason has been assigned to direct the new stars.

PLAYS IMPRESARIO

William Courtleigh, New York actor, will play the role of Paolo Salvo, the Italian impresario in Clara Kimball Young's forthcoming production, "Eyes of Youth," at the Garson studios. The role of Salvo is one of the best character parts to which the screen has fallen heir in several years. It was a sensation in the New York stage production.

TABLET TO MARLOWE.

Sir Frank Benson recently unveiled a memorial tablet to Christopher Marlowe, which has been placed in the Church of St. Nicholas, Deptford, in which parish the poet died June 1, 1593, of wounds received in a tavern brawl. The tablet describes Marlowe as "the founder of grandiloquent blank verse," and bears the quotation:

"Cut is the branch that might have grown full straight."

Sir Frank said they honored Marlowe beacuse he so fully represented that wonderful Elizabethan Age—unrivaled for the various products of human activity, the various forces set going in every direction of human life—which are so full of achievements so greatly daring, so strong, and which laid the foundation of the empire. The peer of Shakespeare, he had enriched our language for all time with lines such as "She gilds the flowing waters as they glide," and hte picture of a king, "The perfect shadow of a sunshine day."—[London Telegraph.

SONG'S INFLUENCE ON IMPEDIMENT.

It has been well agreed for some time that music exerts a very marked influence on the physical health of the individual. During the war, the soothing influence of harmony proved exceedingly beneficial in cases of shell shock and the like. The medical profession has taken note of the power of music in this direction, and in certain instances have even advised its use as a curative agent.

In relation to this idea it has been found that singing has a very marked influence in bettering the condition of the stutterer. It has been applied to this purpose in Europe, but is new to America.

One local teacher of standing, Anthony Carlson, has introduced this European idea to peculiar advantage of certain of his pupils, although only incidentally to his programme of instruction and concert giving. He has achieved quite a distinct success in several instances among the musically inclined.

In describing this method of remedying the defect, Mr. Carlson said: "There is nothing new about the method, as it has had quite a vogue abroad. It is a well known fact that the difficulties of the stutterer arise from his lack of control over the muscles in the middle and back of his tongue. By developing these muscles in a systematic way, over a period of time, a great deal can be done to remove the impediment, and even cause it to practically totally disappear.

"Of course, in the beginning singing does not form a part of the routine course. It is necessary first to losen up the muscles and give flexibility and control to the tongue through a series of gymnastic exercises. Later the making of tone becomes a great benefit. By changing the pitch of the voice much can be done to aid the stutterer even under ordinary conditions and without any previous exercises. This idea is used in the preliminary vocal exercises. Later oftentimes the stutterer will develop an unusually good voice, while his speaking tones will differ entirely from what they originally were."

Mr. Carlson already has a number of pupils who are endeavoring to overcome the impediment in their speech, and his method has proved quite effective. He himself has a remarkable control of the muscles which have to do with voice production, and he believes very largely in this muscular development for attaining power and breadth in singing.

"Sent over lots of socks and sweaters, eh?"

"Naw. He cables over all baseball scores every day."—[Louisville Courier-Journal.

VIVIAN LIKES FIRES.

Fire! Fire!

The engines were there, clanging and hissing. The firemen played a white stream of water right into the heart of a flaming structure which closely resembled a tenement house in the slums of a large city. Everything was bustle and confusion. A half-crazed looking old woman was running wildly about shouting, "Revenge! Revenge!"

Suddenly a handsome young fellow made his way out of the fire-gutted cellar of the burning building, carrying in his arms the unconscious figure of a beautiful girl. He bore his limp burden straight toward the crowd of onlookers and put the girl on her feet. Instantly, the expression of terror on his face relaxed and also the lifeless look on the girl's face brightened to a smile.

That smile caused a voice from the crowd to mention to a companion in sotto voce, "Yes, thats' Vivian Martin."

"Whew, I'm having an awfully thrilling time in this picture," said the Lasky star, who is appearing in "The Third Kiss," at Grauman's this week. "I've just been rescued from this burning tenement." Then to a friend who stood near by: "I'm supposed to have been locked in there by that crazy woman you probably saw running about. It was also she who set the building on fire.

"I like fires," she continued, smiling in spite of her drenched clothing. "When I was a child I used to receive terrible spankings for following the engines. But this is the first time I've ever been rescued from one. It's some fun, believe me."

"Call it fun if you like," said the friend, as she pointed to the once lovely little frock Miss Martin wore, now scorched and singed in several places and literally soaked with water.

"Oh, that," smiled the little star, "just makes it all the more exciting. You know it wouldn't seem as though I had made a good scene if I hadn't run some kind of a risk. And being doused with that water was just like taking a shower bath, only it was a little more violent. My leading man, Harrison Ford, is the one who had the worst of it. Just imagine, he had to carry me out of the fire. It was easy for me. All I did was to lie still and pretend I was unconscious."

Then the man who was accompanying Miss Martin's girl friend said something about Ford hardly having the "worst of it," when accorded such a delightful privilege as to carry so precious a burden from the seething flames. And Miss Martin smiled and thanked him, while the other girl's face looked just a trifle less joyous for a moment.

Then Robert Vignola, director, and Frank Garbut, cameraman, having removed themselves to terra firma, the former called to Miss Martin for a close-up. After this she was bundled into a limousine and rushed to her dressing-room, where the wet clothing might be removed.

ELTINGE PLANS BIG TOUR.

Plans for a tour of the world to follow his appearance in Los Angeles, beginning next Monday night, have been announced by Julian Eltinge, foremost feminine impersonator.

The idea to circle the globe with his own show is an old one with Eltinge, but the four years of the great war delayed consummation of the plans.

Eltinge brought his new company and vaudeville review to Los Angeles for its opening. If all goes well, and Eltinge believes they will, preparations for the world tour will be completed after the engagement in Los Angeles at the Mason Opera House.

Eltinge has received hundreds of offers for appearances in England and France during his stage career, and has always nursed a desire to make the trip to Europe. If his plans for the world tour materialize, Eltinge will make appearances in Great Britain, France, Australia, Japan and even China.

According to the famous feminine impersonator, the Chinese like feminine impersonation work as it is a part of the tradition of the oriental theaters. Feminine characterization is also especially liked by the Japanese, he says.

TAKES A WOMAN TO MANAGE A CAT.

AT LEAST, THAT'S WHAT THEY DISCOVERED AT LASKY'S.

The spotlight was all arranged in a narrow passageway—a setting in "Captain Dieppe," starring Robert Warwick, now in the course of production at the Lasky studio—the camera was focused and everything was in readiness for a scene. A small, beautiful cat, with a pedigree a mile long and valued somewhere up in three figures, was placed in the scene by a property man and the cameraman started cranking. But the cat deliberately walked off the set; nothing could persuade her to remain.

The operation was tried repeatedly, but without success. Something like a dozen playthings which cats are usually fond of, such as tassels, strings, beautiful bits of cloth hung from sticks, were devised and manipulated by a force of property men, but the cat refused to play.

The director was tearing his hair and the cameraman was pacing wildly up and down the set. Miss Helen Chadwick, playing the leading feminine role opposite Maj. Warwick in the picture, strolled on the scene and saw the difficulty.

"You don't know how to handle a cat," she said, as she picked it up and placed it in the desired spot. The actress simply stood off and smiled at the cat; it cocked its head to one side and stayed right in front of the camera while the required scene was photographed.

BREAK THE ICE AT GARSON STUDIOS.

CLARA KIMBALL YOUNG COMPANY RETURNS FROM NORTH.

Work at the new Garson studios at 1845 Allesandro street was officially inaugurated yesterday with the taking of the first stage scenes of "Eyes of Youth," with Clara Kimball Young in the role of Gina Ashling.

Miss Young and her company returned yesterday morning from San Francisco, where several dock and ship scenes have been taken, to find the big stage of the new Garson studios ready for them.

The stage covers over 20,000 square feet of space and is completely housed with old mission form of architecture, which conforms with the surrounding detail of the studio in general.

At 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon the crank of the camera was turned for the first time on the new stage and Harry Garson, president and general director of the studios, stated that it was his belief that "Eyes of Youth" would be ready for distribution early in October.

EDESON SIGNS WITH SELZNICK.

Members of the Temple Club found him such a good fellow that they made him an honorary member. The Temple Club is an organization of those prisoners who, having a little more money than others, can afford to buy food and other articles to solace them in their confinement. The director went there to help out the relative of a friend, in jail for a minor offense. He then decided to make Christmas happy for the prisoners.

"After it was published the other day that I was to direct Miss Gladys Brockwell in a crook picture, I received a mysterious telephone message at my home. It ran something like this: 'I see you are going to be in charge of a crook picture. If it's going to be the real thing, maybe I can help you.'

"Who are you?" I asked.

"'I was in jail when you were made a member of the Temple Club,' was the answer.

"I told the man, who explained he was a very well-known burglar—very well known to the police—to come to the studio in Hollywood, and when he arrived we went into conference with Miss Brockwell. I know Mr. Fox wants realism and accuracy in detail in his pictures, and as there was not a doubt this burglar knew more about crime than Miss Brockwell or I, we were glad to take his expert advice. As a result, I believe in making this picture, I have been able to add a few touches I would not have thought of. When the picture is run for the first time, the burglar will be there for a final conference."

Makes Elinor Weep.

In "The Lost Princess," now being made at the William Fox studios in Hollywood, Cal., Scott Dunlap, the director, labored yesterday morning long enough to ring tears from Miss Elinor Fair, co-star with Albert Ray. Miss Fair was in a particularly gay mood.

"I don't believe I can cry today," she told the energetic director.

He went to the telephone, and called up Morris Stoloff, the well-known concert violinist, a personal friend, who had just returned to Los Angeles from a successful tour of the eastern States.

"Bring along the sweetest and saddest music you have," said Mr. Dunlap, and on his arrival in the afternoon, Mr. Dunlap said:

"Now sit down and make her cry."

While other scenes of the picture were being taken Miss Fair listened to a concert of French, Italian and Slavic music from a master of the violin. It charmed her, but did not bring tears. Then Mr. Stoloff tried "I Love You Truly, Dear." She was sobered. He hardly stopped before he took up "Love's Old Sweet Song." The tears came.

"She's ready," said the violinist to Mr. Dunlap.

They put her in the affecting scene she was to play when an appeal is made to the princess to return to her foreign home. She was highly wrought up. At the proper instant the director cleared the set so no outside influence might reach his star, and the violinist began with "I Love You Truly, Dear." The tears flowed plentifully. The scene was done three times and still the tears came.

"Stop her," finally said the director.

Mr. Stoloff, despite his classical ambitions, began "Hay Foot, Straw Foot," and in a moment he had the pretty star trying to dance a jig.

Lytell Dons Thimble.

Bert Lytell is an adaptable young actor. There is one scene in "Lombardi, Ltd.," that calls for the creation of a living model of a Lombardi gown. In the stage version the difficulty was easily surmountable. Distance lent enchantment, and the details of the gown's construction were not too discernible.

But the camera's searching eye brings the audience a foot or two away while Bert Lytell, in the screen version by June Mathis of the Hattons comedy, builds his "masterpiece." Therefore, Mr. Lytell has gone into training.

Every day he receives a lesson in dressmaking from Mme. Chappelle, a Los Angeles modiste, and for several days previous to the taking of the actual scene, he spent several hours daily in practice. Once or twice he has caught himself saying in all earnestness:

"You know, I just can't decide which I like best over silver cloth—chiffon or Georgette crepe—and then one gets a sweet effect with these, etc."

But the hearers know he is just forgetting himself in his role—that is one of the characteristics of this young actor—and as soon as he realizes it he laughs with them.

Of Women's Footwear in This Season's Modes

The first big week of our sale was a record-breaking success. Our facilities were taxed to the utmost. We regret that thousands of people left the store because all seats were continuously occupied from the opening to the closing hours.

Now that the great first week rush is over, you can be served quickly and without delay.

The selections are still large and comprehensive. To miss this sale is to actually lose money.

Remember—this sale offering embraces only the fashionable modes of the day—in white kid, white canvas, black kid, patent leather—with low heels and Louis heels.

Note—Turn to Part II, Page 9, for announcement of our Men's Shoe Sale.

First Comprehensive Display of

Early Autumn Fashions in FROCKS and SUITS

One of the new satin gowns with Georgette and metallic trimming.

WE CAN promise some most interesting revelations to style-seekers Monday when the first really comprehensive display of the season's new modes will be given. There will be presented some of the highest examples of the designer's art, executed in rich weaves of silk and other fabrics, seemingly in variety unending.

Among the beautiful new materials introduced is Mignonette, a fascinating silk knitted weave, distinctly different, and certain to be very much in vogue this year. Also silk Peau de Peche, the material which will be most popular in fashionable suits. Beaver, Hudson Seal and Squirrel will be used in trimmings; large patch pockets, cuffs and shawl collars.

Long, lithe lines and ingenious draping characterize the new gowns, and there are many unusual and artistic effects in embroidery and embellishments.

ONCE A JUDGE, NOW SENATOR.

Republican Who Carried His State for Hughes Discourses of Men and Things.

BY JAMES B. MORROW.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 1.—Seated in his mahogany chair, his heels resting on the edge of his mahogany desk, Charles L. McNary, blond-haired and blue-eyed, said: "I am a nut."

Which laconicism was half jest and half fact. More truthfully, however, Charles L. McNary could have remarked: "I am a prune." Also he could have stated: "I am a hop," or, "I am a pear," or, "I am a cherry."

Here was an original specimen for the interviewer to investigate and classify. Not only because he had described himself uniquely but also for the reason that he had practically been dumb up to that point.

And he, a United States Senator! the definition of which functionary is often given as being "a person of extraordinary volubility, whose custom it is to arise in his place and talk for hours, seemingly to himself, inasmuch as no one else appears to listen."

"Publicity," said this slim, youngish-looking man, "doesn't interest me."

Yet it should. Without it, Charles L. McNary never would have been a justice of the Supreme Court of Oregon, nor a Senator in the Congress of the United States.

All politicians should walk humbly in the presence of editors and reporters. And this is a notice for them to that effect. Working against his realization of the whole truth is the fact that Senator McNary was once a judge, which office, in its relation to those who are not judges, and would not be if they could, is sometimes misunderstood by the occupants thereof.

"Well, then," the interviewer said, "let us dwell on agriculture for a moment."

Immediately, out of the Senatorial robes and the judicial ermine, emerged the farmer, clothed in white trousers and a black coat, his face smiling and his eyes glowing. The secret spring had been found and the door of discourse swung open wide enough.

There was no trouble after that. It was then that the Senator, placing his feet where they did not belong, exclaimed: "I am a nut," meaning, of course, sentimentally and not physically.

NINE WEEKS ON THE WAY.

Filberts are among his crops and walnut trees fill one of his orchards. Besides, he grows more prunes than any other man on the continent. Such are his pleasures.

When not in Washington, he practices law at Salem, in and near which city the McNarys have lived for three generations. Under the spell of fruits and nuts the Senator told about the family. How Grandfather McNary, in a wagon drawn by oxen, traveled nine weeks between Tennessee and Oregon. And how the Claggetts of Kentucky, journeying in similar fashion and on about the same schedule, also took up land in the vicinity of Salem.

Each family lived in a log cabin on a farm of 640 acres. And Hugh Linza McNary and Margaret Claggett, son and daughter of the Scotch-Irish pioneers, grew up and were married and became parents of Charles, formerly a judge and now a Senator and one of the two or three or four Republicans who purpose to vote for the League of Nations.

"I am willing to try anything once," he said, referring to the league. "So are my fellow Oregonians. But we think matters over, first. Then we act. That is the reason our State in recent years has been the pace-maker for the rest of the Union."

Left an orphan at an early age, Charles L. McNary went to live with his sister in Salem. During four summer vacations, while a student at the High School, he worked in a nursery. He saw what miraculous things could be done with trees and flowers under the hand of a man who understood his business.

It is true that Charles McNary, after two years at Stanford University, read law; that he was admitted to the bar; that he became the partner of his brother John; and he gained a large and profitable practice; that he was elected a judge of the highest court in his State and that he is now a Senator in Congress, but Charles McNary all along had been what might be called an incipient orchardist.

NUT AND FRUIT ORCHARDS.

Prune King in the Senate.

Senator Charles L. McNary,
Once a Supreme judge of Oregon, who has gone to the Senate.

In thought, at first, but actually one after he had accumulated money enough to purchase parts of his father's and grandfather's old farms. This he did about twelve years ago. And now he has 110 acres of prunes, fifty acres of walnuts, twenty-eight acres of cherries, twenty acres of filberts, an equal area of hops and fifteen acres of pears. Then there are other orchards of prunes that he jointly owns with other men. In short, he is America's prune king.

He is fond of his fruit trees and has photographs of them in his office, but he prefers to talk of nuts, especially filberts, concerning which he is the country's greatest specialist.

"Filberts were not being commercially grown in the United States," Senator McNary said, "when I began studying them scientifically. I found that the climate in the region of the Mediterranean Sea, where the finest filberts in the world are produced, is similar in many respects to the climate in Western Oregon.

"Our consular agents in Spain sent me twenty-four varieties of trees. I began at once to experiment. This is very interesting work. And pruning is as much of an art as surgery. A surgeon must know where and how to cut. So must an orchardist.

"As my filbert trees developed, I found some among them that blossomed late. Winter killed the nuts. These trees I called 'sleepers.' Theoretically, sap is forced up a tree and into its branches from the roots. The sap of the 'sleepers,' then, didn't start soon enough. Otherwise such trees would blossom with the others.

"But I cut off the tops of the 'sleepers' and grafted on the trunks scions taken from normal bloomers. Theoretically, that did not change the flow of sap as to time. Practically, however, it did. The scions, growing into strong branches, didn't wait for the roots to send up the sap, but began pulling it up themselves and so they blossomed and bore fruit and ceased to be what I called them.

THE PROFITS IN FILBERTS.

"An orchardist has countless opportunities to experiment and learn the laws of nature. No work, except that of a judge on the bench, who has cases to study, is anywhere near so fascinating. I live five miles from my orchards and can reach them in twenty minutes, over a good road, from my home or office. In them I take my vacations, from day to day, when I feel like it, and lose no more time from my business than I would were I to play golf or go fishing.

"We have no official statistics in this country bearing on filberts, but I estimate that an acre of trees, at the end of twelve years, will yield 1600 pounds of nuts. At 15 cents a pound, the return would be $240, from which the expense of production, $80 to the acre, would have to be subtracted. I have trees that are bearing nuts and believe, from my experience so far, that the yield in this country will equal that in Spain or elsewhere."

"You have also done considerable experimental work in politics," the interviewer observed.

"Yes, if you so describe my activities in that direction," Senator McNary answered. "My brother was in politics, while I was a young man, and was running for office and I assisted him. But I never was a candidate myself until I felt that I would like to be an associate justice of our Supreme Court. I had practiced law in Salem for fifteen years and had never held a political office.

"One can go stale in politics, as well as in athletics. The man who is a candidate every year, first for this and then for that, wears himself out and wearies the public. I desired to be a supreme judge, but I waited until I thought I had a good chance to be nominated and elected.

"Stepping-stones are all right—across brooks and creeks. But why use them in politics? There is more competition for the lower offices than for the higher ones. That fact is overlooked by most candidates.

WON OREGON FOR HUGHES.

"Well, I was nominated and elected. After serving my term I returned to my practice and in 1916 was chairman of our State committee and Oregon was carried by Hughes and Fairbanks."

"Which made you the logical man for Senator," the interviewer said.

"At any rate, I am here," the Senator replied, waving his arms toward the window and making an air map of Washington and the District of Columbia.

"Are the initiative, referendum and the recall of office-holders still the harbingers of the millennium in the eyes of Oregonians?"

"The people of our State," the Senator answered, "desire now exactly what they desire dwhen the reforms that you mention were thoughtfully discussed and then deliberately adopted. Not 5 per cent. of our voters would support the proposition to repeal the initiative, the referendum or the recall.

"No State officer, so far, has been recalled, but the law is ready if ever such an act on the part of the people becomes necessary. Oregon has been called an experimental station in legislation. All that I care to say is that the experiments have been successful. Ridicule of Oregon has not changed the facts. It has no effect whatever on the minds of our voters.

"We are not like the people of the East—afraid of the foreigner. Nor like the people of the South, who are in terror of the negro. All of us, practically, are Americans. Therefore, we do as we please. Freedom dwells in Oregon. It is the most thoroughly American State in the Union.

"Fundamentally, Oregon is safe and sound. Christian missionaries were its first white inhabitants. You know the story of Marcus Whitman the medical missionary, and Henry N. Spaulding, the preacher, who, with their brave young wives, crossed the continent in 1836 and opened Oregon as a home to others of their countrymen. Whitman, although he was warned that it couldn't be done, took a wagon with him. He broke the road over which later missionaries traveled. Emigrants from Tennessee, Kentucky and Missouri followed.

PROUD OF THE PIONEERS.

"They were daring men, all of them; Americans to the core, adventurous, intelligent and sensible. Now, I call attention to the beginnings of Oregon as a part of the territory of the United States. As it began, so it has continued.

"Next came settlers from Eastern Pennnsylvania, Ohio and Iowa, and later from Kansas and Nebraska. Were there any better living men and women in the world? That's the stock that is dominant in Oregon today. The settlers were each entitled to take up a homestead of 640 acres. They became ranchers and farmers on a large scale. They saw themselves, their neighbors and their country in a large way.

"They lived out of doors and their characters and their vision expanded in the open and they saw things to which they had been blind in their old homes beyond the mountains, across which they had toiled behind their teams of oxen.

"Schools were built. Churches were established. And on the rainy days of winter the pioneers read books and thought out their problems. The sons and daughters and the grandsons and grand-daughters of these men learned what had been done in Australia and New Zealand. They trusted one another. Their neighbors, they believed, were honest and sensible. If anything unwise were done it would be changed and no harm would ensue.

"Then appeared William Simon U'Ren, who, in time, was called

CONVENT SCHOOLING GAVE HER START.

RENE CHAPLOW FOUND HER TALENT IN QUIET CLOISTER HERE.

From a Los Angeles convent to the Orpheum stage is the weird and almost unprecedented leap made by Rene Chaplow, born and bred here—and she doesn't regret it, either. Nor does the convent, if the truth be told, for the good sisters have sent her their blessing and are proud of her career.

Rene Chaplow is the daughter of Mrs. S. E. Peck, of 1030 South Hope street, and she was born when the family lived in Figueroa street here. As soon as she was old enough she went to convent, and at once attracted the sisters' attention by her voice. She received admirable training in musical lines, and, when graduated, made her debut on the concert stage, first here and later in the East, with marked success.

Then came the inevitable—she met and wed Eddie Janis, the violinist, who had found success and fame in Orpheum vaudeville circles. That their ways might not separate, Miss Chaplow gave up her concert engagements, and took up stage dancing and the like. When she had mastered these new lines, she and her husband put on their present act.

"It was the splendid convent training that gave me my start," says Miss Chaplow, "and I feel that I owe to the good sisters the foundation of my later stage success. No, I have not regretted the change from the quiet cloisters to the hurry and rush of vaudeville, for in it I have found not only my work but—my husband."

SUMMER BLOUSES; DAINTY NECKLACES.

The collarless tunic blouse of the moment demands something in the way of a necklace or a string of beads to break a too severe neck line. With simple morning blouses of dimity or handkerchief linen, the lorgnette ribbon is worn, and if one does not possess or need a lorgnette a locket or charm may be swung from the ribbon. Black moire or gros grain ribbon about half an inch wide is smarter this season than the white-edged or black-edged ribbon of last year, and your black lorgnette ribbon must be passed around the neck, swinging between the blouse fronts, instead of being passed under the blouse collar. Worn around the neck, the black ribbon makes a longer and narrower loop than it did passed beneath the collar.

Bead necklaces are rather long also, to give this long, narrow loop on the bodice front. Some women have half a dozen of these necklaces for the color is the important thing in adding a string of beads to a costume. Jet bead necklaces are smart with all-white costumes, and there seems to be a special vogue for bright red necklaces. A very pretty string has blue wooden beads strung on slender gold links, the beads widely separated and in different sizes. Another necklace is of victory red beads with gold filagree beads between them on a chain of fine gold links. A dainty necklace is made of apple green glass cabuchons, square in shape, alternating with groups of pear-shaped carbuchons, the square ones much larger than the beads in pear-shaped cut.

PINERO LAY FOR MISS FREDERICK.

Frank Lloyd is now directing Pauline Frederick in a picturization of one of Arthur Wing Pinero's most celebrated plays, arranged for the screen by J. E. Nash, and involving the support of an unusually brilliant ensemble. Florence Deshon, recently arrived from New York to fulfill a five-year contract with Goldwyn, brings her fiery personality as a foil for Miss Frederick's repressed histrionism, while John Bowers, now an established Goldwyn favorite leading man, assumed his first role with Miss Frederick. How Nuxated Iron Helped

JACK DEMPSEY

"TIGER OF THE RING"

Tells a Secret of His Training—Recommends Nuxated Iron To Every Man and Woman Who Wants To Build Greater

Strength, Energy & Power

"Nuxated Iron put power behind my punch helped me to accom
what I did at Toledo."
JACK DEMP

Today recognized as the physical superior to any living man—the Superman of the Age—Jack Dempsey, Heavyweight Champion of the world, explains below the part Nuxated Iron played in helping to prepare him for the supreme test of his career. In his decisive, smashing victory over the mighty Willard who had never before been knocked from his feet, Dempsey displayed a dynamic overwhelming strength and power never before known in the history of the ring. That he took Nuxated Iron as a part of his training is convincing evidence of the importance Dempsey attached to keeping his blood rich in strength-giving iron, and the high regard in which he holds Nuxated Iron as a master strength and blood builder.

In a statement made at his training quarters in Toledo the scene of the big battle, Jack Dempsey said: "After commencing the use of Nuxated Iron during my training for the big fight with Jess Willard, I soon noticed that I could stand harder strains with less fatigue than before, and I realized that I had found a tonic and blood builder which played an important part in getting me into fine condition. Formerly I had relied solely upon strength-building foods and outdoor exercise to keep my blood rich in red corpuscles, but with the World's Championship at stake, I felt that I should leave nothing undone that might help me to win. I was advised of the great value of Nuxated Iron for building up the blood, strengthening the nerves and aiding in keeping the body fit, and I am firmly convinced that its use has helped to wonderfully increase my stamina and endurance. Nuxated Iron put added power behind my punch and helped me to accomplish what I did at Toledo. From the results in my own case where the possession of super endurance is necessary I feel that I am in a position to strongly recommend Nuxated Iron to every man and woman who wants to build greater strength, energy and power."

In connection with the foregoing statement made by Jack Dempsey, Dr. James Francis Sullivan, formerly physician of Bellevue Hospital (Outdoor Dept.), New York, and the Westchester County Hospital, said: "The methods of training adopted by Willard and Dempsey may have had a great deal to do with the outcome of this fight. According to reports Dempsey placed himself unreservedly in the hands of expert trainers and competent physicians and heeded their advice. In my opinion whoever made the suggestion that Nuxated Iron should play a part in getting Dempsey into condition is to be commended for his foresight. No man without plenty of rich red blood filled with health-giving and strength-building iron could withstand the terrific onslaughts of a giant like Willard. It should occur to every thinking person that if a man as physically fit as Dempsey should consider it advisable to take Nuxated Iron, how much more important it is for the average man or woman to see that there is no lack of iron in the blood. There is today a surprising number of persons who suffer from iron deficiency. Many a capable man or woman falls just short of winning because they don't back up their mentality with the physical strength and energy which comes from having plenty of iron in the blood. Lack of iron in the blood not only makes a man a physical and mental weakling, nervous, irritable, easily fatigued, but it utterly robs him of that virile force, that stamina and strength of will which are so necessary to success and power in every walk of life. It may also transform a beautiful, sweet-tempered woman into one who is cross, nervous and irritable. To help make strong, keen, red-blooded Americans there is nothing in my experience which I have found so valuable as organic iron—Nuxated Iron."

Dr. John J. Van Horne, formerly Medical Inspector and Clinical Physician on the Board of Health of the City of New York, says: "Strength and

William Harrison ("Jack") Dempsey:

Although like an untamed tiger in the ring, the intensely human side of the new World's Champion is clearly shown by a remark he is quoted as making just before the big fight, in which he said: "I have telegraphed my Mother, that I will win the championship and I am not going to disappoint her. I'm going to win that title if for no other reason than because I've promised her I would."

Dempsey describes here the part Nuxated Iron played in helping him to keep his promise to win the title.

MARY JANE COMES HOME.

though she would probably change to pink next week, while the New Girl manicured her already highly-polished nails. Ella having paused to close her mouth while she put some grease paint on her lips, the New Girl inquired elegantly, "Well, Ella, what you got on your chest this time?"

Ella, having made her mouth into the correct Cupid's bow, critically examined it in the hand mirror, and then went on:

Well, you see, Mary Jane's folks are far from rich. A picture firm had promised the child a contract, and hadn't come through. Mary Jane's pa had died a soldier in France, her little brother, Jim, had a cough that cost the family a lot, and things altogether wasn't very velvety in the Irving family. That made it all the more natural for it to happen what did happen.

You see little Mary Jane played in pictures so much around in these big homes of the wealthy, that she got kind of dissatisfied with the little bungalow she called home. There was one big house in particular out on Wilshire boulevard, where she worked in three pictures. She used to sit on the stone bench beside the lion and gaze up at the windows — for they never worked inside the house—and wonder what it was like. I was with her in two pictures, playing her nurse. "Ella," she'd say to me, "What do you suppose is behind those curtains? Oh, if I could only live in that place."

CAPTIVATES HOSTS.

They say, you know, that if you wish hard enough for anything you always get it. Anyhow, one day the strangest thing happened. An old gentleman and an old lady came out of the house and watched them making the scene. They were very proper and very precise, but they took a great shine to Mary Jane Irving. They lifted her on their laps and talked to her, and said how they wished they had a little girl. Mary Jane was kinda bashful, but when they asked her if she would like to come into the house and have some ice cream and play with the cat, she said, Oh, yes! They asked me in, too, seeing, I guess, that I had class, even though earning but $7.50 a day, and thinking, I suppose, that my bright face and golden hair would lighten up the old dump. So in we went.

Mary Jane was all excitement. She ran and danced through the house, and I saw those two old people look at each other, and I heard the old guy say to the old dame, "Wouldn't it be sweet to have this little one always about the house?" And the old dame answered, "Oh, my yes!" Then they asked her a lot of questions. She was so sweet and wistful I don't wonder they wanted her. But they didn't figure then on what a perpetual motioner Mary Jane is.

Next, I heard, they went down to see Mary Jane's mama, and when they left Mrs. Irving was crying, and Mary Jane was all torn between dancing around the room and trying to comfort her ma. You see, those two old centenarians had offered to take Mary Jane to adopt if she suited, and nobody knew just what to do about it. It was an awful sphynx whether to let her go or whether to let her go on with her career.

Mary Jane didn't want to leave her maw—but her maw told her she mustn't cry, that they must do what was best.

"And will you be happy seeing me only twice a month, mama?" she asked. Mary Jane's ma gulped and said, "Yes, sure."

Then Mary Jane began to plan about the little auto she could drive around the tennis court with Bennie Alexander, and about the dolls she'd have named Mary Pickford and Vivian Martin and everything.

So it was settled, and Mary Jane moved over to her rich, big home. They let me come and see her, me wearing my quietest clothes—and oh, how shocked I was that first time, finding Jane so clean and so quiet and altogether unnatural!

"But I'm getting a lovely education," she says, looking up at me and pretty nearly crying.

"What is it, dearie?" I says, taking her on my lap.

But she was game.

NOT SO EASY TO BE NICE.

"Everything's grand!" she says. "Only—only—if I could only just get a wee bit dirty sometimes! I have to be so clean all the time, nothing comes off me when they touch me. And, oh, Ella"—and her little lip trembled—"if I could just see my nice, dear Lydia Yeamans Titus and have her buy me all-day suckers and lay my head on her breast, or have dear old Spotty Aitken smooth down my hair and tell me a fairy story, or have Mrs. Brunton wash my face and scold me and then buy me ice cream the next minute, or Mr. Brunton make his bull terrier do tricks for me—oh, dear, it's an awful strain to be so nice, Ella!

"And I have to sleep all alone in a great, big, grand bedroom, Ella! Nurse has a room off mine—but you know how far away the next room can seem when the person in it doesn't take the least bit of interest in you at night unless you have the stomachache and then gives you caster oil! . . . And I always thought," Mary Jane went on in a whisper, "that butlers was like they are in pictures—straight and hard-looking, but underneath kind and loving to little children. But they ain't. They're cruel! They don't play bear with you in the front room and let you muzzle 'em at all! They won't even let you play ball in the big ole front room.

"And cooks despise you out of meal hours. The more to eat there is in a house, the less thay want to give you. anyhow, tmes when you're really hungry. . . . And my nurse is always talking to me about manners. Why, Bessie Barriscale and Dustin Farnum, they're just lovely, and they never talk about manners. I guess they just got 'em, that's all, and they don't have to talk about 'em. But I spose it's all for the best, Ella." And she heaved a big sigh.

It seems they let the kid out to play with the brakes on, and with a nurse along to see she didn't dirty her dress or buy popcorn off the dago at the corner, considered unsanitary because he wore earrings, or something—or romp with the dog or do any other natural kid thing.

She was sent to dancing school—and the very first day she broke up the place. You see, in her picture work she had learned a lot of fancy steps, and when Mrs. Portland arrived she found Mary Jane innocently pirouetting like a ballet dancer—and she took her home quick and put her to bed without any supper.

Afterward Mary got a doll and inamed it Charlie Chaplin, and they told her Charlie was vulgar, and she said, "No, he isn't—he's a artist—my mamma says so." And she cried and cried, thinking she was never going to see him any more. It semed you could go and see a Griffith picture once in a great while without ruining your self for life, but all other "movies" were taboo! Just imagine how hard that was on a kid who used to work in 'em!

Mummies Help Some.

It got so it seemed the two bright spots in her life was mummies and Sunday-school! The mummies was at Exposition Park, where the Portlands took her to improve her mind. The only thing that interested her there was the mummies! She liked to play how they was was when they lived. Poor little kid—just imagine how hard up she must be for a chum when that chum was a mummy that had been dead 1500 years!

"As for Sunday-school, it really was a bright place. O' course she had always gone when she wasn't working, but this was one of them new sensiole kind o' Sunday-schools, where they play a system o' separating a kid from its natural cussedness in a manner entirely painless, and where the word "hell" would be considered only in the light of a swear-word.

"I'm really afraid, Ella," she said to me, one day, in the funny little old-fashioned way she had sometimes, "I'm really afraid that as a life brightener I'm a failure!"

But she was always game. She never told her mother, when she went twice a week to see her. Anyhow I suppose all the kids' envying her helped to cheer her up—that would naturally ease up anybody's trouble—having everybody envy you. So she keeps a stiff upper lip and never lets on to her mamma, and her mama never lets on to her.

She had tutors and governesses—a perfect army of 'em—and oh, dear, she did try so hard to learn arithmetic, but just couldn't! One day she was fussing over a problem about a man who wanted to divide his money between his four sons. Suddenly she burst out with—"Oh, let the silly things fight for it!" And geography was so hard, too—the only way she could remember the different States was by the color—why didn't they always keep Maine pink and California green, she asked—they was always changging 'em on her! But she liked her reading and writing and learning poetry and stuff like that.

Mary Jane was a funny little thing. She'd stand things and stand 'em as long as she could, and then she'd bust out. The meter never did work very well on Mary Jane.

But finally she found out how to get out of her lessons. Stiff and proper as them teachers were, they all loved the movies. And when she got so tired of lessons she couldn't stand it, she'd start in and do imitations of Charlie Chaplin and Mary Pickford and Mabel Normand and Douglas Fairbanks and Bill Hart till she broke up the school.

Well, one day I went to see her, looking as proper as prunes and prisms, but with my hair fixed so I could pull it out from under my hat as soon as I got out of the house, and I found Mary Jane looking so white and thin I was scared. Her eyes was as big as saucers and there was no more joy of life in her than there is in the dummy they throw out of the auto when it goes over a cliff.

"They're — they're goin' to Europe!" she told me, looking like she'd told me they was going to make her do a diving stunt in a picture when she couldn't swim. "An' they're goin' to take me with 'em! They think it will improve me, maybe!"

I guess the little thing got desperate right then and there, thinking of her mamma and all, for the next time I called an awful thing had happened.

It was Fourth of July and I found that grand, silent place in a uproar! Mary Jane was gone! They had searched and searched, they said, and now they had sent for Mary's mother. She came on a run, white and wild-looking. Then came word from Bennie Alexander's mother over the phone—Bennie was gone, too! He had come over in the morning, the Portlands remembered, and had asked that Mary Jane be allowed to come out and play, but even though it was the Fourth she had a lot of lessons today. They had told her she couldn't have any firecrackers or nigger chasers or anything to celebrate with, for fear she might hurt herself.

"Well, it's an awful blow, Mrs. Portland," Mary Jane had said, "but I'll try to bear it."

Then the Portlands had gone out in their limousine to hear some patriotic addresses at Exposition Park and Mary Jane did her imitations and broke up her teachers and they went home.

The hunt went on, and finally down by the back gate we found this note, evidently dropped by Bennie in the haste of flight. It was signed by Mary Jane, and it said: "Dear Bennie: No I can't elope with you and run off with the gipsies. It wouldn't be rite. Besides gipsies are dirty and won't let us bath. Misses Portland is kind and is giving me edjucation and it's hard to bare but good for me. Come over this afternoon and we will go over to the scalper's and dress dolls. I got some close."

Well, I leave it to you if that wasn't a sphynx, dearie!

Mrs. Portland wrinkled and wrinkled over it. "Scalpers! Scalpers!" she kept repeating.

Suddenly I remembered. Mary Jane meant the sculptor's studio about half a mile down the street and around a corner. Mary Jane and me had often admired the statues of angels and venuses and cherubs and such like truck setting about in the studio, and she had made friends with the artist, just as she always does with everybody.

NEW ANGLES ON SCULPTURE.

We went down to the studio, Mrs. Portland behaving almost human, and found the door unlocked, but evidently nobody anywhere about. We called, but nobody answered. Then as our eyes grew used to the dimness, we looked on an odd sight. A lofty marble Moses lost all his dignity clad in that simple, clinging garment known as a night shirt. Appollo Belvedere was respectable but funny in overalls, looking a little like Bill Hart. A round little cherub wore ragged clothes, and bore faint resemblance to Mary Pickford.

There was no doubt she and Bennie intended a funny little statue the artist called a faun for Charlie Chaplin, as it wore a derby hat and some loose trousers draped around the front, with big feet sticking out underneath; but the funniest of all was a Venus de Milo with a tam tipped over one eye and no other clothes on at all, in the dressing of which the kids had seemingly been interrupted. We could plainly see, however, she was going to be Dorothy Gish when she was finished.

So these were Mary Jane's dolls, and she and Bennie were having an orgy of housekeeping and show with their idols as dolls, all dressed up in things Mary had dragged out of the Portland attic.

By and by a bit of color caught my eye, and there was Mary Jane, fast asleep on a rug, clasping tight to her flat little breast the hard form of a small Clytie. And over on the sofa lay Bennie, also asleep, still grasping a bit of cake in his dirty little fist. The artist had gone out for his dinner, it seems, and had left the kids alone.

We woke the children up, and Mary Jane looked bewildered a minute, then she flew to her maw. "Oh, mama, mama!" she cried. "I dreamed—" Then she stopped and looked scared and bashful.

"I don't care what you dreamed," said her mother, hugging and rocking her like a picture scene. "You ain't ever, ever going away from me again!"

Mary Jane peeked around at Mrs. Portland in a frightened kind of way.

But Mrs. Portland had the funniest look of positive relief you ever saw.

"Please," began Mary Jane timidly, while her lips trembled, "please, may I stay with mamma? I think being adopted is nice, but ——"

"Why," said Mrs. Portland, looking at her husband, whose hard old face also was strangely wreathed with smiles, "Why, yes, if you like best, dear."

Well, dearie, the long and short of it is, Mary Jane Irving was out working on the lot this morning. Mary Pickford played tag with her, Spotty Aitkin made her a doll out of his red bandana that he's using in the picture, Dustin Farnum tossed her 'way up in the air three times, all the cowboys hollers, Lydia Titus grabbed her and cried over her and bought her two bits' worth of allday suckers, and when I left Mr. Brunton's bull terrier was jumping through her arms, and she was looking up into my face with her eyes all shining and cheeks like roses, and she was saying:

"Oh, gee, Ella—this is the life!"

FURNITURE SALES AS AN INDEX OF GROWTH.

CITY'S EXPANSION IS SHOWN IN SURE WAY—BIG SALE AT HAMBURGER'S.

It is said that those who would gauge the growth of Los Angeles solely by the census reports would get no adequate idea of the real expansion of the metropolis of the Pacific Coast. A surer index of the city's increase in homes and population is found, it is said by merchants, in the sales of furniture.

In every part of Los Angeles big and little homes are going up, and they are being furnished at once for occupants, the demand for all kinds of dwellings far exceeding the supply. A sight more familiar than ever is that of great loaded furniture vans depositing household goods at newly-built bungalows and cottages.

Hence, it is remarked that those who are about to furnish homes are in luck just now, as August is the month of furniture bargains all over the country. Hamburger's—one of Los Angeles' biggest stores—opens its August furniture sale tomorrow, always a big event in local mercantile circles. Those who know the stability of this concern and its straightforward policy, will be interested in learning of this chance to get fine goods at lower prices than ever.

FILMS ATTRACT ACTRESS.

The stage debut of Annette de Foe, scheduled for the Mason this fall in David Gally's underworld drama, "The Victim," has been postponed, owing to the fact that Miss de Foe has two picture engagements.

PAY DAY ABOLISHED.

The act of "paying off" in a big industrial plant is a considerable item of expense when there is taken into consideration the accounting, putting the money in envelopes and the loss of time of the employees in going after their money. Pay day is abolished by the latest scheme for handling this problem which has been suggested for adoption at a great English soap manufacturing establishment. Each employee would be required to have a private bank account, either in the firm's bank or in any other; the weekly or monthly pay roll would be sent to the firm's bank, and the sum each man is entitled to would be placed to his credit. Then he could draw whatever he needed for household or other expenses and leave the rest to his credit, where it would draw interest. The firm would supplement all balances with additions. This would do away with pay envelopes and standing in line and would encourage saving.—[Indianapolis News.

THE OUT-O'-DOORS WATCH

The Strap Watch comes into its own with the sportsman. In the blackness of the night-camp the friendly radium dial is always "at hand"—or swinging across "the Green" the golfer finds it far more convenient than the pocket watch—while to the fisherman, the strap watch gives the correct time without betraying his presence in fishing for his pocket watch.

Notice—how many real fellows you see wearing them now; that's because they have made good. A sensible sort of a "utility watch" to have around.

Priced from $20.00 to $50.00 in silver; gold from $55.00 up.

Amazing Revelation!

During the First Six Months of 1919

THE TIMES

Published Almost As Many Lines of Want-Ads As All Other Four Los Angeles Newspapers Combined

One of the most astonishing records ever made by an American Newspaper

THE TIMES ALONE
2,874,046
Agate Lines of
WANT-ADS

All Other Los Angeles Newspapers Combined
EXAMINER
3,178,980
Agate Lines of
WANT-ADS

And Yet

While THE TIMES published this prodigious volume of Want-Ads, amounting to nearly Three Million Agate Lines, the entire mass—every Want-Ad that has been carried in THE TIMES for the past six months—could be struck away and still the remaining display advertising would completely overwhelm all the advertising of any other newspaper in Southern California.

THE TIMES' display advertising for the first six months of 1919 reached the titanic amount of Six Million Two Hundred and Forty Thousand and Nine Hundred and Fifty-eight (6,240,958) agate lines.

THE TIMES' display advertising alone exceeded all the advertising in the Examiner by 550,308 agate lines. Exceeded the Express by 1,860,442 agate lines, exceeded the Herald by 593,638 agate lines.

What Is The Explanation?

That it is possible to reach the whole purchasing public through THE TIMES alone, and that it is enormously more economical to reach the public in ONE newspaper at ONE low rate than to use FOUR OTHER newspapers and pay FOUR rates.

NOVELTIES, IDEAS AND PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS.

By Olive Gray.

Up-to-Datest:

The most ornate of head-dresses for evening wear: Bandeaux of silver ribbon, gold galloon, tissue and tulle offset with grapes, with flowers, with oriental ornaments and with jewels. This is a revival welcome to every pretty girl making her loveliness more lovely, and to every plain woman, causing her plainness to be forgotten in the charm of her head decoration.

The dainty boudoir caps of a few years ago are embarking upon a sea of renewed popularity. Embroidered nets and fine batiste are sometimes used for the main part of such caps, forming "hoods" similar to those worn by babies. These are edged with lace and ribbon and bedecked with hand-made flowers or flowers of heavy hand embroidery.

Now is the time to buy:

The summer frock, in summer frock sales; for one more is always needed to eke out during the warm weather of August and even of September and October in our climate, where the good old summer time extends its lazy length until late fall.

The few or many articles for making home presentable when the return from out-of-doors gives us a stranger view of our premises—when we look upon them as though through alien eyes and eyes critical. One or two new pieces, a new rug, draperies, curtains—and behold the home refreshed, rejuvenated.

Fruitful Monday-ing.

"Do you know how I do my week-ending?" asked Evelyn, supremest of housewives, when I met her downtown the other day. Of course, I could not guess. Then I recalled that she is spending the summer at Cat — well you know where, of course; so I was just beginning to formulate a puzzle about week-ending, when she was all-the-weeking, when she went on—"Well, you see, I make it a point, during July and August, to come to town on Monday morning, just to take advantage of the clearance sales." "So, while others leave town for the week-end, you return here!" I said. "Yes, but I return on Monday, and I figure that it more than pays me to do so; in fact, I am laying up money for future needs in the savings effected for the home and in our wardrobes."

"Wise and prudent girl," was my commendation. "This week," she continued, "I shall not return on Tuesday, as usual—but must remain—oh, I cannoa say how long, to gather in all the profits of the new month's sales. I expect to save enough on household linens alone to purchase for myself a lovely fur—which I shall also secure at a bargain price." and she went on her Monday-ing in a happy frame of mind.

Aero-Sent.

The adman and King Cotton joined hands, and joined the aero squad, by way of experiment, and well satisfied, decided to henceforth deliver the trophies of the bargain chase, by plane to purchasers on Catalina. Talk about being up-to-date! Could anything be higher up than this? Dwellers on the Magic Isle, or those sojourning there, may order their pajamas, or neckwear, or bathing suits, or anything that suits, and presto, away the package goes, straight as the crow flies and as rapidly, reaching the destination almost before the ink is dry on the charge account, or upon the address on the bundle. I suppose that even a pink, scented note might be thus transported—done up in a gift pair of stockings, or a bathing brief of most alluring color—and would thus reach its destination before the manly love of the sender could cool.

A Clothes Press Peep.

Just to peep into Annette's clothes press is to renew one's faith in the preservation possibility of good care for clothes.

In the first place her press is well lighted and ventilated. For this well-spring of delight she owes thanks to the architect who planned the house. Then the closet is papered with light, dainty paper, which adds its quota to the immaculate appearance of the tiny room and also does its share in giving forth light. The shelves are well arranged, too, and afford the maximum of space, together with the utmost of protection to the things stored there. There are hat blocks covered in a dainty and colorful cretonne, harmonizing with the wall paper; there are shoe trees in every pair of shoes, and all footwear is protected by covers which keep out dust. A secret which is Annette's pride is the fact that her favorite sachet permeates the shoes while they are in press, for her trees are padded and sacheted as carefully as are her hangers and the folders which contain her frocks. Over her hats she drops a thin cheesecloth, while they are on the block, and this light cover, which does not displace or "wilt" either flowers or ostrich tips, is also scented with a faint aroma. There are long, easily-opened drawers for housing Annette's evening frocks, and others for her blouses. Her underwear is kept in her chiffonier, and this receptacle has scented pads which lend a flowery fragrance to every garment while it rests. One secret of Annette's ever-readiness to go to affairs at a moment's notice is the manner of caring for her clothes. Many a delight has been hers, just because she never keeps friends waiting. She keeps together the things which belong together. When it comes to dressing, there's no search for this or that, and no substituting. She knows where everything is to be found and it is her boast—when she indulges in such self-gratulation—that she could dress in the dark, in fifteen minutes to go somewhere, if she wanted to.

Tastefully Enrolled.

Did I ever tell you about those delicious little orange rolls which are a specialty at that cozy tea shop? I have never found them elsewhere; and so unique are they in taste that I would go there just for those, even if the place were not otherwise as delightful as it is. The rolls are intended as a luncheon accompaniment, but so accommodating are the powers presiding over the place that they will save them to serve at 5 o'clock, if one makes a reservation. We often assemble there for a cup of the cheery, with those wonderful little rolls and other tasties as an accompaniment of the restful half hour.

Parisian Fads.

French women persist in the use of many-colored silks in lingerie, and it really looks as though we would be obliged to follow in their wake, if we would prove wide awake in fashioning. Lavender, old rose, green, yellow, apricot and even black silk, crepe and batiste in chemises, camisoles and teddies are a craze over there. Black satin ribbons, black velvet bands and even flowers formed from black ribbon velvet adorn some of the new underthings which seem to have the hall-mark of Paris visible in every fold.

Under Command of Fashion.

For the sea voyage have a suit made of flannel or heavy serge.

Silk lace and chiffon make some of the prettiest evening dresses.

Earrings are mostly showy, and of pearl, jade, jet and lapis lazuli.

Godet fullness is a characteristic of many of the new tailored suits.

Italian gray is one of the new shades for felt hats for motoring.

A white cotton voile is daintily trimmed with bands of pink voile.

A waistcoat in color or white adds to the smartness of the tailored suit.

Louis XVI influences are strong in garments for the advanced season.

Knitted fabric capes have collars of angora wool in contrasting colors.

Brown net over brown satin makes a distinguished afternoon dress.

Blue charmeuse with red embroidery makes a frock of fascinating effect.

Girdles for the new long georgette blouses sometimes end in three-toned tassels.

Dainty summer wraps are made of two layers of georgette crepe of contrasting colors.

A smart wrap-coat is of heavy white cheviot and moleskin with heavy embroidery in color.

A fashionable fillet for the hair is a band of gold with clusters of purple grapes at the sides.

Some evening gowns have narrow trains, but the latest idea is to allow a sash to trail at the side.

A fillet of spangled net is charmingly finished with a big bow of brown tulle, Alsatian style.

A narrow line of white appears about the neck and bottom of the sleeves of the newest dresses.

FAR EAST BECKONS.

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) July 16.—The American business man is coming to realize the great potential markets of the world today are in the Far East. With a population eight times that of the United States, it offers unequaled possibilities for trade and investment.

America got a taste of the great trade opportunities of the far eastern countries during the war when its exports to Asia more than doubled. Lack of shipping facilities prevented even greater expansion of trade with these countries. Now the American exporters are fighting to retain the advantage they gained over other competitors during the war.

According to F. R. Eldridge, Jr., chief of the Far Eastern Division, Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, of the Department of Commerce, the future and permanency of American trade in the Far East will depend largely upon the amount of American capital invested. He has lived in the Far East for years, has made a careful and thoughtful study of trade conditions there, and is convinced that no longer does trade follow the flag, but, rather, does trade follow a loan.

"All the world knows that most of the free capital of the world today," he said, "is in the United States, and all the world is looking to this country to go into the undeveloped regions of the earth's surface, and wave the creative wand of wealth. Not that these countries of the Far East are without wealth and resources of their own. In the Far East the potentialities are beyond the dreams of the wildest optimist. But the people are not sure of themselves. The workings of modern finance are not within their ken, and wealth to them still means something to hoard, to conceal and to lie fallow.

"There is something unfortunate in the term 'Far East,' which undoubtedly reacts indirectly on the American business man who is asked to invest his money in enterprises of even the most promising character. Perhaps, if some daring aviator were to startle the world by flying to Japan in sixty hours by way of the Great Circle and Aleutian Islands, a distance of about 4000 miles, it would bring about a realization that the term 'Far East,' which was appropriate in the day of the clipper ship, is out of place in this era of modern means of travel. This drawing closer of the east and west by quicker and better means of transportation and communication will do more than anything else to dissipate the feeling of mystery and aloofness which marks the attitude of the average American investor today.

"China, of all the Far Eastern countries, with its population three times as large as that of the United States, offers the most logical field for investment and trade development. In all Far Eastern countries except China, Japan and Siam the interests of the home governments are, of course, paramount in their respective colonies or dependencies. But even where this is the case, as in India, there is a breaking away from the traditional lines of industrial effort such as textiles, leather and mining and new ventures such as steel and cement works are beginning to attract foreign capital.

"Great signs of progress are being noted in the internal development of these countries. Gasoline engines on the plantations are no novelty, and rice-hulling plants, bone-crushing factories and oil mills are all demanding working capital and machinery. Under normal conditions this capital would be supplied by England, but conditions are not normal today, and the industrial growth of newer India will not await the rehabilitation of British machine-making industries or consent to be handicapped through lack of British capital.

"Not all of these ventures, as reports show, are immediate successes, but the failures are more than likely due to lack of preparatory study. It is not improbable that Great Britain, without the capital to supply herself, will take a broad view of the value of American capital participating in Indian industrial advancement.

"In the Dutch East Indies the question resolves itself more into one of providing ships for maintaining the direct trade which developed so wonderfully during the last years of the war, and showed clearly that these islands could be made direct suppliers of our raw materials and purchasers of our manufactured goods. Here is a demand not only for American capital to develop the vast rubber lands of Sumatra, but a genuine and steady demand for our miscellaneous manufactured goods, oil pressing machinery, sugar machinery, tobacco machinery and a varied line of hardware and agricultural tools and implements. Our best investments would be made in direct steamship lines and banks willing to extend the credits which were granted by European nations before the war.

"In French Indo-China, Siam and British Malaya, the trading opportunities are good and numerous bids for American capital to engage in tungsten, tin and antimony mining as well as rubber planting are being made. These countries have depended almost entirely on European capital in the past, and are now beginning to realize that if they are to further develop, the money for such enterprise must come from the world's banker—the United States.

"In our own Philippines we, of course, must not be backward. The improvements which have been inaugurated with American wealth are only a harbinger of what is possible. The tremendous growth of the copra oil milling industry during the war has been a revelation of the possibilities of our own island possessions. No matter what form of government is granted, the United States is and will remain commercially dominant in the Philippines. The greater the developments the clearer it is realised that the islands are an ideal source of needed raw materials as well as an admirable market for our manufactured products. Moreover, no surer guarantee of the continued progressive and independent conditions of the islands could be sought than in closer commercial relations with the United States after such time as political autonomy is granted.

"The basis for American future trade in the Far East is the American invested dollar. Every American should look forward to the time when investment in Far Eastern securities will be just as great a service to his country as were his investments in Liberty Bonds. For, in order to keep American industries on a high plane, we must have scale production, and the greatest potential markets where such products may be disposed of lie in the Far East.

"Great Britain's foreign investments before the war bore a direct relation to her foreign trade. By investing in and holding fifty per cent. of Liberty Bonds, Great Britain sold China half of the goods she imported. Far Eastern investments now beckon to American capital to come and enjoy the same advantages. No longer does trade follow the flag, but trade always has and always will continue to follow the loan."

WHAT CONSULS SAY.

The order of October 23, 1918, commandeering all fiber flaxseed in Canada, exclusive of the quantity required by the dominion for sowing purposes in 1919, has been rescinded by an order passed on May 26, 1919. The surplus seed was commandeered at the request of the Raw Materials Department of the Imperial War Office for shipment to Ireland to be grown there for the production of flax fiber.

The estimated total value of poultry and eggs produced each year in China is about $420,000,000. Not all the poultry and eggs produced are consumed locally, however. Shipments of eggs from China during 1917 totaled 37,742,000 pounds, valued at $2,388,000, and of egg albumen and yolk 58,868,000 pounds, valued at $12,359,000.

The principal natural resources of Finland are its forest and waterfalls. Not less than 200,000 square kilometers (one square kilometer equals 0.286 square mile) of the total area, 333,140 square kilometers, are covered with forests, which thus comprise about 60 per cent. of the total area of the country. In relative richness of woods no other country in Europe can compete with Finland and only Russia possesses a greater area; the wood districts of Sweden are somewhat smaller than Finland's.

The republic of Czecho-Slovakia (comprising Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, and Slovakia) plans to remodel, enlarge, and re-equip its telephone system. For this purpose a mission consisting of representatives of the Department of Post, Telephone, and Telegraph and experienced engineers will be sent to the United States to study and report on the various systems, switchboards, apparatus, appliances, etc., and recommend what in their opinion would best suit the conditions in the new republic.

Recent published returns say that there are now in Australia 91,676,281 sheep and 11,040,391 cattle. Owing to the lack of tonnage, the frozen meat exported last year was a very small quantity, only 177,797 carcasses of mutton and 161,917 carcasses of lamb being shipped. The beef shipment totaled 1,407,421 quarters, or about 200,000 below the previous year. With the exception of about 8000 quarters, the whole of the beef was exported from Queensland.

WOMEN'S WORK AND WOMEN'S CLUBS.

BY LADY JANE.

Members of the Philanthropy and Civics Club were hostesses last Friday, to 100 little children, who saw the sea for the first time on that day. Santa Monica welcomed them with open arms, and the club members provided them with all manner of entertainment from 9 a.m. until 6 p.m. Because of the widespread interest in the race riots which have stirred Chicago, Mrs. Lillias Goldsmith, president of the club, will address the members, at their meeting, Tuesday, on "The Negro and the New Democracy." She will use for reference Dr. Theodore Weyle's book, "The New Democracy." Mrs. Goldsmith also will read a one-act play, which was produced for the first time by the Washington-Square Players, "Children" is the title of the play, in which the characters are colored people.

Last Wednesday the Entre Nous Club's second luncheon of the season was given at the home of Mrs. Carrie Chase, 224 North Soto street. Dr. William Jeffries, of the Boyle Heights Methodist Church, spoke on "American Womanhood," and Mrs. Rose McClure, the president, told of the plans of the programme chairman, by which four meetings are to be devoted to studying the League of Nations, which will be presented in a way so that each member will take part by answering questions and discussing the subject. Parliamentry law work will also be a feature of the meetings for the first two months. Miss Ellen Chase, daughter of the hostess, gave piano selections, and Miss Ethel Nories of Berkeley, played and sang.

THE OPEN-AIR THEATER.

New Projects for the Utilization of Our Natural Play Settings.

BY JAMES M. WARNACK.

In spite of the advice and the examples of such men as Whitman, Emerson, Thoreau and others of their stamp, who, praising all schools, yet belonging to none, insisted on America insisting on herself, we, as a nation, continue to be copyists, especially in the fields of art.

In government, while we may not be exactly original, we at least have shown some initiative and bid fair to out-Plato Plato. In science we must, of course, bow to the wizards of other lands and and ages, yet we have no apologies to offer for our attempts to improve upon old inventions.

In literature, while we may have produced few great writers, we have at least produced, within our very brief span of existence, many authors who have drawn their inspirations chiefly from the soil, scenery and conditions peculiar to America. In religion, we cling pretty steadfastly to the old churches, yet, under our Constitution, we have dared to make for ourselves many new gods and creeds.

But when it comes to art, it seems that we have always doubted if we really knew what beauty means. Art! Speak it softly, or write it with a capital A, Mr. American, if you are in presence of a European—and also take care to frankly admit your ignorance of and your inability to accomplish anything worthy in painting, sculpture, music and drama, in order to give your Greek, French or Italian friend an opportunity to rant about the glories of ancient Greece, the French school or the Renaissance!

There is no intention here to decry or to depreciate the old schools and the old masters. But they have had their day and place, and, while it would be ridiculous for America to refuse to incorporate into her art all that is worth while in the ancient or modern arts of Europe, yet is it not high time that lovers of the beautiful in this beautiful country were asking, "What's the matter with America?"

Take the theater, for instance. Here in Southern California, "where nature helps industry most" and where it would gladly help art as much, there has been talk and talk, even back unto pueblo days, of building a Greek theater. The project will doubtless be realized in the near future, for Griffith J. Griffith, who gave Griffith Park to Los Angeles, left $100,000 for the erection of a Greek theater in Vermont Canyon. However, that site is about a mile and a half from a car line at present and it is not likely that the theater will be built until a car line is built to pass in closer proximity to the proposed site.

WHY THE GREEK?

Yet why, necessarily, a Greek theater? The theater-going public will doubtless welcome it, when it is built. It will at least be a sort of modern antique and, as such (if for no other reason,) will doubtless be well patronized. But what's the matter with a California theater, an open-air structure, patterned somewhat after the Grecian style, if you will, but still suggesting California rather than Greece?

Some such project as this was in the minds of many of our local and national artists when they formed the Theater Arts Alliance, which is said to be a nonprofit, co-operative corporation, inspired by the successful productions of "Julius Caesar" at Beachwood Canyon, and by "The Light of Asia" on Krotona Hill.

According to officials of the new organization, the Theater Arts Alliance already has practically sufficient funds to build the first of their proposed art buildings, which will be a pageant theater, open-air style, seating 2000 people and with the Hollywood hills for a stage. The architect will probably be Louis Christian Mullgardt, famous as the architect of the Court of Ages at the San Francisco fair.

"We expect to have a big string of fine buildings," said H. Ellis Reed, secretary of the alliance, "including a clubhouse, an art printing establishment, an administration building and a closed theater.

"Our closed theater, however, will not be a competitor of other Los Angeles theaters, any more than will our printing house attempt to compete with Los Angeles print shops, because the work which we will turn out, both at the theater and the print shops, will be entirely different from other work.

"The location for our home is in the heart of Hollywood, at the intersection of two splendidly-paved boulevards, Cahuenga and Highland avenues, twenty-five minutes from the center of Los Angeles. Pacific Electric cars pass the entrance, providing cheap and adequate transportation.

"The location comprises an enchanting valley with encircling mountains, a natural bowl of sixty-five acres, partly wooded.

Romantic Situation.

"Romantic interest attaches to the location. It is situated on the historic El Camino Real, along which the faithful padres were wont to wend their way in the olden, golden days.

"There is no doubt that such performances as are planned by the alliance will become events of world-wide interest. Tourist travel will swing around the date of the great yearly festival play, and the spiritual type of many of the productions to be offered will make of Hollywood a place of pilgrimage, a western Oberammergau."

"The whole idea of the Theater Arts Alliance," continued Mr. Reed "is to make Southern California a home for artists and for those who love beauty in human expression as well as in nature.

"God has set the stage for us," he said. "It is for us Californians to put on the play.

"Until we can draw great artists and make them feel at home here, we have failed to prove worthy of our beautiful southern land. There is nothing but the people to prevent the Southland from becoming a new world Greece, a land shining with physical, mental and spiritual beauty. Here, if the Arts Alliance has its way, local talent will be given a hearing and a showing and scholarships will be provided for worthy and ambitious pupils.

"This is not a money-making scheme. The actors will be paid for their work, of course—but if anybody expects to 'invest' $1000 and realize a profit on it, he will be mistaken."

The president of the alliance is Mrs. William York Stevenson, who financed "The Light of Asia" and who was the first American to produce Maeterlinck's "Sister Beatrice" in this country. Mrs. Stevenson is also president of the Philadelphia Art Alliance and she has just completed a campaign in that city for $600,000 to promote the arts. The other officers of the organization are as follows: First vice-president, Dr. T. Percival Gerson; second vice-president, Dr. H. Gale Atwater; treasurer, C. G. Greenwood, vice-president of the Hollywood National Bank; directors, Messrs. Ted Shawn and A. P. Warrington and Mmes. Marie Rankin Clarke and Frank Keenan.

NEW KINKS IN THE VERSE OF SERVICE.

FAY TINCHER PHOTOPLAY PARODIES FAMOUS ALASKA POEM.

"Dangerous Nan McGrew" is the title of a Christie special comedy in which Fay Tincher is being featured as "the lady McGrew of Dead Dog, Wyo." When Robert W. Service wrote his famous verses about Dan McGrew, he probably never realized the possibilities of a wild, rough, gun-toting young lady such as Fay Tincher pictures in her characterization.

"A bunch of boys were sipping their sodas in the Dead Dog ice cream store,
The Mayor of the town had a cherry fizz, and was smacking his lips for more,
Back of the counter, uncorking the pop, was Dangerous Nan Mc-
Grew,
And licking his spoon was her whiskered lover, the gentleman cowboy, Lew."

That is a picture of the fast-dying—if not dead—community of Dead Dog before it became necessary in the plot for Dangerous Nan, the soda jerker, to zip things up a bit, learn to pack a gun, and make up the peaceful citizenry like desperate men and typical dance-hall women for the sake of throwing a scare into a mild-mannered eastern professor, who was on the train from New York, coming West to claim the hand of Nan in marriage and win a $10,000 estate.

KEEP AMERICA READING.

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) July 24.—An important question is now agitating the American Library Association. It would very much like to know what is going to become of it—whether it is going to have to pull in its belt as rapidly and as gracefully as have other war organizations, or whether it is to retain its present expansive girth, now that peace has arrived.

The army wants it to go on supplying books to soldiers, and the navy is equally anxious that it should continue its ministrations to that service. But now that the war is a thing of the past, Congress is losing interest in the welfare of the enlisted man, and is inspired with a large ambition for cutting down expenses. Neither the army nor the navy has the funds to keep the library association operating at its present status. The Military Affairs Committee of the House asked for $1,000,000 to carry out a recreational and educational programme for the peace-time army and the Appropriations Committee reported an appropriation of $150,000—or about the same amount that was spent for [illegible]-handed boxing gloves in the army last year. This does not leave much of a margin to be spent on books.

There is one other hope, however. That is the $100,000,000 educational bill pending in Congress. If a department of education is established, as this bill provides, the organization built up by the American Library Association may be taken over bodily and installed as one of the bureaus in the new department. Unless this occurs, or unless some of our leading philanthropists come to the rescue at the last moment, the association must close its libraries, fire its force of trained librarians, cease the circulation of hundreds of thousands of books, and shrink to its pre-war size. A review of the association's activities during the war reveals what a calamity this would be to the nation.

At the height of its career during the war the association at [illegible] operated forty-nine large libraries and 2887 small branch libraries in this country and 1401 large libraries and a similar number of small ones overseas. Thirty industrial war work plants and [illegible] ships, including 190 transports, were also equipped with libraries. In addition, a circulating book service was supplied to 230 hospitals in this country and to 138 overseas. Altogether it was a stupendous agency for putting the printed page in the hand of the service man. As demobilization proceeded, many of these libraries had to be abandoned and thousands of books had to be shipped home, but a large number are still in operation.

Our public library facilities before the war were painfully inadequate; they are much more so now. The librarians did not go to the trenches simply to get a view of the scenery. They went there to distribute books, and distribute books they did. They found the major portion of the army distinctly devoid of the reading habit, so they proceeded to cultivate it. And so well did they succeed that the libraries became filled to overflowing and a large force of people was kept busy on both sides of the Atlantic Ocean circulating books to supply the demand. A librarian was never too busy to disregard the personal tastes of each soldier. He would work for hours trying to find the books the man wanted and tactfully advising him in reading matter, content in the knowledge that here was another possible book convert. It was an unprecedented opportunity to guide the young men of America toward the habit of reading.

The large demand for technical books from the camp libraries in the early part of the American engagement came as a surprise to librarians. Most authorities had held the opinion that the men would ask chiefly for popular fiction, but instead everyone seemed to be bent upon self-improvement. Electricity, mechanical engineering, astronomy, economics and finance were the subjects that intrigued the American soldier's imagination. With the signing of the armistice, however, there was a sudden and most remarkable change in the nature of books read. The men suddenly evinced a strong inclination for light fiction. "Somthing light and foolish" was the constant demand. In the American library in Paris, for example, books on the technical subjects as well as those on art, history and travel stood idle upon the shelves, while the demand for worthless fiction constantly increased. "Moreover," as one librarian observed, "the quality of the reading was reflected in the faces of the men. They were unhappy, discontented and restless. They could see no beauty in Paris and they were losing the historial significances of the place.

"This was the library's opportunity and it was quickly seized. It was no easy problem to catch and hold the interest of these homesick men, but we strained every effort tactfully to turn the current of the reading. Gradually the morale stiffened. Soldiers who had walked through the streets of Paris with unseeing eyes awakened to the knowledge that there was something more than cafes and vaudeville. Books on France were swept from the shelves. Fifty copies of Victor Hugo's 'Les Miserables' did not begin to fill the demand. Gradually the discontented faces grew less frequent, the restlessness was less apparent."

If libraries can exert such an excellent influence over men at war, it is believed that their influence would be none the less great in peace. As the association points out, social unrest all over the world is increasing by leaps and bounds. Uncle Sam is exceedingly nervous for fear the large number of illiterates in his family will suddenly become infected with Bolshevism. The librarians of the nation are trained in the art of propaganda. They are matches even for the Bolshevists. Nothing can equal the way in which they have learned to excite a man's interest in the Constitution or in expurgated histories of the lives of our Presidents, or in stirring accounts of the achievements of American business. The association believes that, if properly financed, it would be able to do more for popular education and social welfare work than any other force in the country.

So far, the association has not perfected its future plans of operation. It is waiting to find if funds will be forthcoming. But some of its members admit that one of the chief dreams of the organization is to provide more books for rural America. The rural American library as it exists today is a sad and feeble thing. With the exception of popular fiction, it provides very little in the way of education or recreation. In the midst of an agricultural community, it is useless to farmers, for it seldom contains any agricultural information even in the form of an encyclopedia or of a government bulletin.

This spring, Walter Prichard Eaton, the dramatic critic, who is also a farmer, bethought him that the nearest blueberry market was far away and high-priced and that he had some idle land which might very well be planted with blueberry bushes. He was not certain as to the kind of soil required by blueberries, but he had reason to believe that the question of blueberries was fully covered in a farmers' bulletin issued by the Department of Agriculture or in almost any encyclopedia. The rural library near his home failed to produce either, however. He was compelled to send away for the information and by the time it arrived it was too late to plant blueberries.

To make each library fit the needs of its community is the aim of the American Library Association. Moreover, in the absence of any special need the association aims to create one. It wants to follow up the work started during the war—to keep Americans reading, and to keep thousands of useful books circulating throughout the country.

Truly Realistic.

"This snowstorm painting is very fine, indeed," said the critic to the artist. "It almost makes me feel cold to look at it."

"Yes, it must be realistic," admitted the other. "A fellow got into my studio in my absence, looked at the picture, and unconsciously put my fur overcoat on before he went out."—[Exchange.

RESCUE WORK.

BY SUE MILLER SHAW.

It was my good fortune to be an invited guest at a meeting of one of the Los Angeles business clubs. In the course of a most delightful afternoon a discussion took place between several ladies and myself as to what methods it were best to adopt to make a complete reformation of a girl who was wilfully immoral—if such a reformation could be accomplished at all.

After thirty-five years of many successful, complete and happy reformations of so-called "bad women," my answer to the question was:

First, have a perfect understanding with the girl you have in hand; induce her to relate all of her past; her confession must be complete. Second, convince her that you are all-powerful to protect her, that you love her, love her as she has never been loved before. If you cannot love your fallen sister with your whole heart; if you cannot eat, sleep and walk the streets with her hand in yours, never try to raise her by any other methods, or your failure will be complete.

I have in mind the three years' heroic battle which Myrtle and I had together, to develop her mind into understanding that sin burns and hurts the body, while virtue makes it beautiful and beloved, rich in the joy of living and makes the soul safe in passing to a higher plane. It was on a warm day in June that I called for my little mountain wild flower at the home of a friendly clergyman's family where she had begged succor for the night. Myrtle was but 15 years old, and was a mother of two births. She was so badly broken in health and spirit that she had become a mental, moral and physical wreck. The poor little girl had never known anything but poverty, cruelty and sin. Her father was a drunkard and her mother a consumptive with seven children, Myrtle the eldest, to care for as best she could. From such an environment sprang Myrtle. She liked sin at first, she liked the full stomach and the better dress and shoes she obtained for her sin, but when that sin hurt her flesh and put her body in pain, she grew resentful and filled with hatred toward all humanity. She hated girls who did not suffer as she did in order to obtain food and clothing; and all men were in her mind beasts of prey, to be gotten the best of by wit or brute force. A sweet, clean body, plenty of good wholesome food, tender smiling looks, loving, kindly words of praise, and, above all, a sincere, deep, heartfelt purpose to render to others the help she had received, have reformed this once vicious girl. No reform school, no method will reach a shattered soul, if there is not love, with a full understanding of the meaning of the word, going hand in hand with it. The way which many women have of rescuing a girl is to carry her home and place her in some working position there, allowing her to enter her mistress's room only after knocking, and treating her as a servant and an inferior. Rescue work pursued on such lines will usually result in a conspicuous failure.

The inspiration of true rescue work is described in Christ's words: "For I was an hungered, and you gave Me meat; I was thirsty and ye gave Me drink; I was a stranger and ye took Me in; naked, and ye clothed Me."

In the grasp of a hand that conveys love, there is conveyed trust, respect and encouragement. An erring soul is uplifted from an atmosphere of right thinking and right doing. In Mr. Richard C. Cabot's book, "What Men Live By," he quotes from a letter written by one friend to another: "I want to tell you very boisterously and worshipfully how much I love you; I also want not to tell you at all; but to do something for you with my hands and feet, to make your bed, to pick lavender pine cones for you, to do something you would never know I had done. For of the many ways of love, one of the dearest is to serve in silence, to celebrate and not be found out." Nothing is a great business on these lines. The babies never guess nor care how many myriad thoughts of love go into bed making or hair brushing. Cabot says: "Was not Judas's kiss of betrayal the most awful act in history because it was through this sacred symbol of love that his treachery was consummated?" So the greatest disgrace in modern civilization is prostitution. It is not chiefly because of the physical miseries that may or may not follow in its train. It is because of the holiness of that great physical symbol which it drags in the mire. The misdirection of a world force that ought to mean the creation or recreation of all that is best in life.

The young man looked at her in bewilderment.

"If that's the case," he responded gallantly, "I wish I would dream it a dozen times."

EDUCATE THE HEART.

BY HIS EMINENCE JAMES CARDINAL GIBBONS.

[Copyright, 1919; all rights reserved.]

According to Webster's definition to educate is "to instill into the mind principles of art, science, morals, religion and behavior." "To educate," he says, "in the arts is important; in religion is indispensable."

No one will deny that the intellect of our youth should be developed and that they should be made acquainted with the knowledge that will fit them for careers in the world of science and business. Above all it is important that our youth be drilled in the knowledge of our beloved country and the men who framed her laws and defended her rights and claims. The Catholic Church ever has been the fostering mother and munificent patroness of secular education. Nearly all the great universities of Europe were founded and endowed by the Catholic Church. The famous universities of Oxford, Cambridge, Paris, Padua and Bologna owe their existence to her care and solicitude. From the sixth to the sixteenth century she labored with untiring zeal in establishing throughout Europe free schools for the education of the masses. "Ignorance," says Pope Benedict XIV, "is the source of all evil, above all among the working classes."

But secular knowledge alone is not sufficient; along with it should go also a religious training. Indeed religious knowledge is as far above human sciences as the soul above the body, as heaven is above the earth and eternity is above time. It is not sufficient to know how to read and write, or to understand the rudiments of grammar and arithmetic. An education that seeks to instill a knowledge of kings and presidents and take no account of the King of Kings; that determines to a mathematical nicety the motions of the earth and regards not eternity; that treats of human problems and ignores the great problem of life, the origin and destiny of man, little deserves the name. Says Guizot, an eminent Protestant writer of France: "In order to make popular education truly good and socially useful it must be fundamentally religious."

If indeed our soul were to die with the body, if we had no future existence beyond the grave, if we had no account to render to God for our actions, we might more easily dispense with religious knowledge, though even then Christian morality would be a fruitful source of temporal blessings, for, as the apostle teaches: "Piety is profitable to all things having promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come." (1 Tim., iv. 8.)

But God has given man a heart as well as a head. Why, then, improve the one and neglect the other? Improve the mind, if you will, by secular education, but by religious training shape and mold the heart to virtue and morality. Only by a good religious education can man know and fulfill the duties he owes to God, his Creator and Maker. By divorcing the religious and secular education a very shallow and fragmentary knowledge is imparted, which in the long run will prove a curse instead of a blessing.

The experience of past ages proves conclusively that it is a very great illusion to suppose that an intellectual development is sufficient of itself to make virtuous men, or that the moral status of a people is to be estimated by the widespread diffusion of a purely secular knowledge.

When the Roman Empire had reached the highest degree of mental culture it was sunk in the lowest depths of vice and corruption.

The Persian Empire, according to the testimony of Plato, perished on account of vicious education of its princes. While their minds were filled with knowledge, they were guided by no religious influences. The voice of conscience was drowned amid the more eager and captivating cries of passion, and they grew up monsters of lust, rapine and oppression, governed by no law save the instincts of their brutal nature.

I fear statistics would prove that in the United States vice does not recede in proportion as public education advances. Every day our newspapers tell of crimes perpetrated for the most part not by unlettered criminals, but by individuals of consummate address and skill that betray a well-disciplined mind uncontrolled by religion and morality.

Far be it from me to question the sincerity or underrate the zeal of those who are the patrons of a purely secular education. The complaint I have to find is that the system which they espouse does not go far enough.

With us, we want our children to receive an education which will make them not only learned, but pious men. We want them to be not only polished members of society, but also conscientious Christians. We desire for them a training that will form their hearts as well as expand their minds. We wish them to be not only men of the world, but, above all, men of God.

And, therefore, it is that all over this country, at a great sacrifice, we build and maintain schools, academies, colleges and universities, where God and God's Son, Christ, is known and honored, and whose example is held up before the child as worthy of imitation.

THE HELPING HAND.

"How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

Boston has maintained a floating hospital by private charity for twenty-five years. During the heat of summer there are available 100 beds for continuous day and night service for sick babies and small children under 5 years of age, and in addition there are over 100 beds for sick or convalescent babies and small children as day patients who are accompanied by their mothers.

Memorials in cold stone with their allegorical figures are not enough to perpetuate the memory of our dead who lie in France, in the belief of the citizens of Clarinda, Iowa, who contributed a fund toward a living monument. Twenty-one French war orphans make up that living monument, one fatherless child for every Clarinda boy who gave his life for the cause of humanity. The public spirited men and women of that town will care for these little French orphans with this fund, paying for their support through the American branch of the Fatherless Children of France, an organization co-operating with a similar one of which Marshal Joffre is head, to care for the little French children left fatherless through the havoc of war.

Recently that distinguished banker, philanthropist, and prison worker, Adolph Lewisohn, attained his seventieth birthday. Upon that occasion a group of noted penologists, fellow philanthropists and social workers gathered upon the lawn of his magnificent home at Ardsley on the Hudson to do him honor. As a mark of their appreciation a purse of $30,000 was presented to him to promote reform in penal institutions.

Discharged soldiers and sailors sick or out of a job, if they come of Presbyterian families, are asked by Presbyterian officials to communicate with them at once. If they do not know to whom to apply they are asked to apply to any Presbyterian pastor. Through the New Era movement a study is being made of all service, and where other help is not available or where help by must be augmented the people say they stand serve.—[New York Tribune.

SHE HESITATED.

"And so you proposed last night?" asked the young sister.

"Yes, I did," replied her sadly.

"And did she give you couragement?"

"Oh, yes!"

"Then have I to con you?"

"No; she refused me."

"But I thought you said you some encouragement?"

"Well," said the youth, antly, "she looked at me times before she refused [London Answers.

INITIAL SUGGESTIONS FOR THE FALL BRIDE

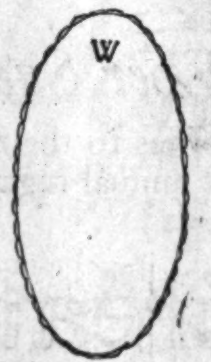
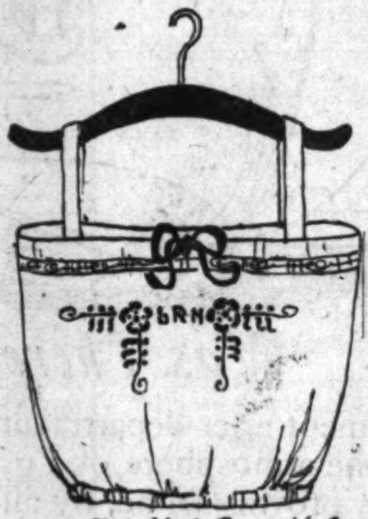
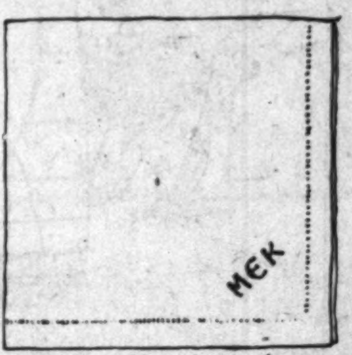
Supplement the Letters With This Needle Fancy.



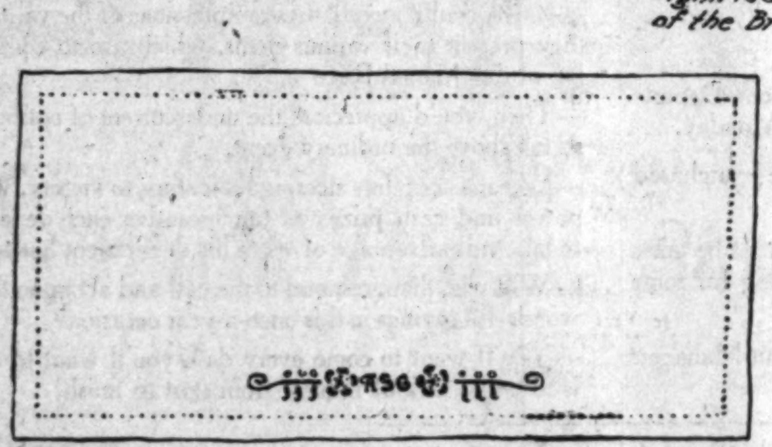
Dignified Treatment of the Bread Tray Cover



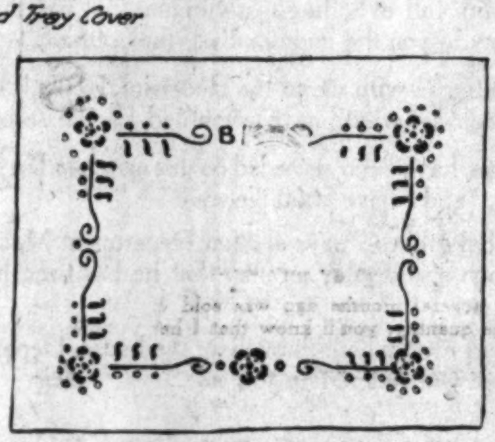
A Fetching Conceit for the Undies



Decorative Importance of the Monogram on the Luncheon Napkin.



Try The Simple Touch-Up on the Dresser Scarf



Dainty Use of the Motif in a Boudoir Pillow

TINY needles are fairly flying over the dainties of the trousseau. You may be the busy little bride, or you may be a needlewoman friend of the busy little bride. Again you may be Mrs. Average Woman with no trousseau worries but with innumerable household responsibilities, among others that all-important one of keeping ahead on the linen closet. But in any case you are going to take more than a passing interest in these initial suggestions and the diversely charming ways that they are used.

The alphabet is ornate without being tediously so, and the flower fancy a most delightful supplement. You may use it in a variety of ways as the drawings suggest, or you may use it not at all where you want to make the monogram all-important, as on the luncheon napkin, and again on the bread-tray cover. Otherwise, it has really amazing possibilities for splitting itself up and repeating itself in all sorts of convenient shapes and sizes.

Now as to the actual working of that posy, you may make a perfect confection of it in eyelet and solid work, and French knots. Or you might work it all solid, the stems and the conventional leaves, however, being treated in the matter of the letters, which you may work up as follows:

The satin stitch with a well-padded foundation of darning cotton, if the padding is kept even and the stitches close, will turn out a fastidiously good-looking letter. Remember, too, that the finer your cotton, the more beautiful in its smoothness will the work be. Of course, that means extra effort, and results just a bit slower, but the increased attractiveness of the finished product is assuredly well worth it.

Or you may outline the letter heavily with a close outline or stem-stitch, and do the "filling in" with wee French knots posed rather close together. Then you might make cut-work of the letters, buttonholing the edges firmly to keep the threads together and cutting the material away after. It's tedious, admittedly, but really very beautiful, as you probably know.

"Again, what say you to using the weaving or pad-as-you-go stitch here, leaving a vein down the center of the letter? Which you do by taking straight stitches back and forth, first at the top of the section to be worked and then about half an inch farther down so that the stitches cross on the right side diagonally and interweave. And so much for the actual work.

As before suggested, there is almost no limit to the adaptations that these letters and designs are capable of. Particularly is this the case with undies, now that all smart undies are being monogrammed. If they are to be trousseau undies, by all means have them of white satin and monogrammed in white, too. And if they are to be just additions to the undie store, there are amazingly pretty things to be done in pastels to delicately tinted handkerchief linen and batiste and voile, chiffon and georgette sets.

Most important, however, if the linens are to go to a little bride-to-be, is that they go bearing her maiden initials. For no longer do the husband's do that very practical and decorative duty.

FOR the dainty batiste or longcloth nightie or camisole, tatted butterflies make quite the daintiest trimming one could wish. You who are translators of the Lore of the Tatters can follow these directions for making the butterflies.

Begin with the head, ring (r) 10 ds, long p, 5 ds, p, 10 ds, close; chain (ch) 6 ds, p, 6 ds; r (6 ds, p) 3 times, 6 ds, close; ch 6 ds, ch 6 ds, join (j) to p of 1st ch, (6 ds, p) twice, 6 ds; r 2 ds, (p 2 ds) 11 times, close; ch 6 ds, (p, 6 ds) 3 times, join 6th p of last r, ch 6 ds, (6 ds, p) 4 times, 6 ds, j between (bet) upper and lower sections of body, ch 6 ds, j to p of 2d r made; r 6 ds, j to last p in long ch 6 ds, (p, 3 ds) 11 times, close. Turn, ch (2 ds, p) 3 times, 2 ds, j to 2d p of r. Continue around the r with 5 chs of picots with 1 ds bet joined to every p of r; 1st ch: 6 p, join; 2d ch: 12 p, join; 3d, 4th, and 5th chs; 6 ps each, join last ch to next p of long ch, ch 6 ds; r (2 ds, p) 7 times, 2 ds, close; ch 3 ds, j to next p of long ch, 3 ds; repeat rs and chs, joining rs with no ch bet, then 2 more with chs, which brings the work to the head; ch 6 ds, pass one thread in front and the other behind the neck; repeat from the chain first mentioned above for the other wing. Set the butterfly in center-front or make two more and set them across the front.

Another way to have them light effectively on "hankie," nightie, camisole or luncheon napkin is to first make an embroidered butterfly, working the wings upon a separate piece of material. Then attach to the piece for which you are making it by working the body of the butterfly thru both the pieces upon which it is worked and the piece to which it is attached. This butterfly with wings which can really flap is a dainty touch for boudoir or linen closet.

Here's a Hint for a Hope Chest

SHOWERS, showers, showers—not drops of H_2O—brides' things, it being a chronic state of females from 17 to 30. (The margin is wide, is it not?)

Madeira work is splendid when you have the price, but when a friend of yours invites you to a shower for a friend of hers, said friend being a total stranger almost, then comes the question: What?

Save the Madeira for your best friend or yourself. Buy several yards of cheesecloth instead and put them into squares the size of a dustcloth. Now with your little needle, neatly briarstitch the hems in different colors. Six, folded attractively, will win the heart of any bride—that is, if she loves useful things to be dainty.

About the Bottom of Your Skirt

NOW that smart blouses are going out "over," if the skirt is to be trimmed at all, it has to be trimmed down below, so to speak. Eager fingers are going to grasp that opportunity to do the distinctive thing to a new skirt and the rejuvenating thing to an old one, with stitchery, or cut-outs, or paint brush.

Wonderfully effective and quite as easy to accomplish is a bold Greek key border to decorate a hem. You may work it in cotton or silk or wool—chenille if the ground is sufficiently dark not to require tubbing. Also you may make it solid or outline.

Further suggestions for the always effective solid work, are the primitively conventional motifs, like squares and diamonds, circles and ovals. Then there are excellent effects to be achieved with bold French knots. But most striking of all treatments for the deep hem of a skirt is cross-stitch relief. Here, as you would presuppose, the background is composed entirely of cross-stitches which would suggest that the design proper be angular rather than curved. When you are stamping, never bother about the cross-stitch part, since that will work itself in mechanically. Then you will outline the design rather heavily, or make the stamping more than ordinarily faint so that it may be eradicated after the background is worked in.

If, however, you want a maximum of strikingness with a minimum of work, then try cut-outs before all else. Again the bigger conventional motifs make the best choice, and plus some bright sprinklings of stitchery, a most effective choice. There is charming chance for contrast in this sort of decoration, too. Can't you imagine the arresting quality of linen on wash satin, and vice versa?

Now, should you prefer trimming that is put on with a brush to that accomplished with needle or scissors, you can do perfectly stunning things with oils. Heavy silk jersey makes a most possible ground for this sort of embellishment, and the worker has just all the freedom that she wants in the matter of design, which may be a delicate spray of posies or a bold splash of geometric figures. Remember that your oil-paint trimming will wash beautifully if you use cold water.

Of Interest to the Lady Carpenter

OF COURSE women have always had the ability to do many sorts of "men's work," but they lacked only the opportunity to show it! Then the war came along and with it came that chance and they made good. Therefore, it is with no hope of being regarded as the least bit original or radical that one suggests new ways of using the ability of the lady carpenter!

If you happen to have a spare corner in your room and no spare cents to fill it, a bit of common sense to guide the hammer and nails and two nice big boxes of twin size will fill it very satisfactorily. You are willing to try it? Very well.

Find two boxes two and one-half feet long. Set them up lengthwise and put in shelves. Give them several coats of white paint and then a coat of white enamel. But do not do this until you have found a nice smooth board the width of the top of the upstanding box and the length of three times the width of the boxes.

Fit this on the top of the two boxes so that the ends of the board are upon the edges of the box. This will allow a space in the middle between the two boxes, of course. Exactly. Just what you want, for this is to be used for the space to slip a little dressing table stool into.

Well, the whole thing is painted now. Then cover the top of the improvised dressing table with cretonne and get a glass to put over the whole top of it if you wish to spend the money for it. If not, just a cover will be sufficient.

Then make little curtains of cretonne for the shelves on either side. One side of shelves will answer beautifully for your shoes, and the other for medicines and toilet preparations of all sorts.

You can make the stool yourself, too. Cover it with the same cretonne used for the dressing table.

A mirror hung above it would make it complete. Surely you have a spare one somewhere in the house which would fill the bill very nicely, providing it had a coat of white paint!

Use Your Sugar Bags for Your Beds!

YOU know the bags which one buys granulated sugar in have the makings of some dainty quilts in them! Get a number of them together, rip and then wash and bleach them in the sun for a day.

Then lay each one out on a table and with a tumbler and lead pencil trace out three intertwining circles. Work these in outline with some delicately colored silk. Of course, you want to work it in the color used in the room upon the bed of which it is to repose in future days.

When you have enough of these pieces worked to make a quilt when joined together, briarstitch them together, quilt and give it a border of silk of about a three-inch depth. You will be pleased with the result and the only materials you have to buy are the embroidery silk and the border!

Or, you might try further patchwork on your sugar bags by the simple addition of some colorful appliques. Conventional motifs in chambray, calico or challis in strikingly contrasting colors might be posed with wonderfully good effect on the sugar bags and treated to a heavy outlining stitch. Which last is invariably striking when it's done with black silk or wool. Try three circles of a vivid orange and purple and green, making them the tumbler size, and "bringing them out" with a black blanket-stitched edge. And that is only one of the many striking and easy cut-out decorations that you can put upon a sugar bag with a patchwork-quilt mission in life.

Unusual Napery

SINCE the war began pure linen for table use has been hard to get, for not much came during the war and what there is is high-priced.

Cotton damask is one of the useful substitutes. It costs about as much as linen used to cost, but a little handwork will make it into an unusual luncheon set of cloth and napkins.

Take two and one-half yards of the material at a yard wide; it will make a luncheon cloth a yard square and six napkins eighteen inches square. Bind both the cloth and the napkins with straight pieces of chambray of any color that harmonizes with your dishes. A yard of chambray is enough. Stitch it to the right side of the napkins, miter the corners and hem it on the wrong side. When the binding is finished it should be about three-eighths of an inch wide.

In one corner of the napkins and in each of the four corners of the luncheon cloth baste a conventionalized flower or fruit made of chambray in colors. Since the charm of decoration lies in its conventional form, let it suggest, rather than imitate, the flower; and to make sure that it is simple, choose such things as morning-glories or tulips or apples or oranges. When the decorations have been basted in place, turn in all the edges and sew the chambray neatly on the foundation.

Any of the substitutes for linen can be used in place of the cotton damask; only choose something that is soft and not too coarse.

Something Different in Crocheted Sweaters

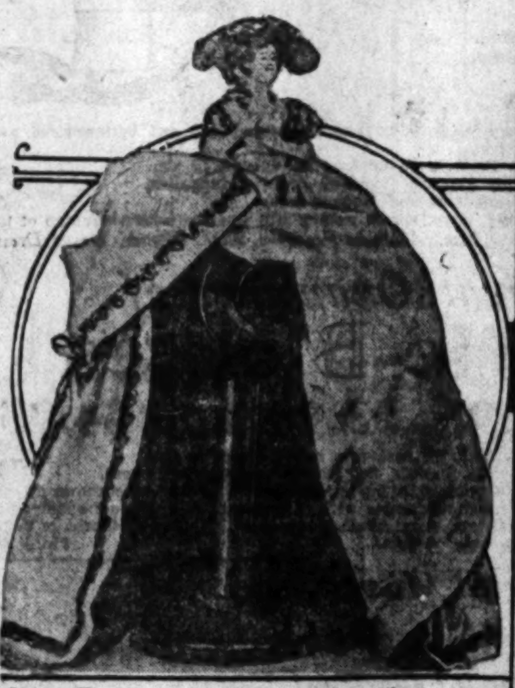
WHY not make a sweater of chenille? One seen last week on a person "who knows" caused much comment that bids well for its popularity. Using the plain filet stitch, charming little slip-over sleeveless ones can be made as well as "regulars" with sleeves 'n all.

The one mentioned was in beaver color worn over a pastel frock, and of the sleeveless type. Another was being made to open in the front and worn with a belt of the plaited chenille.

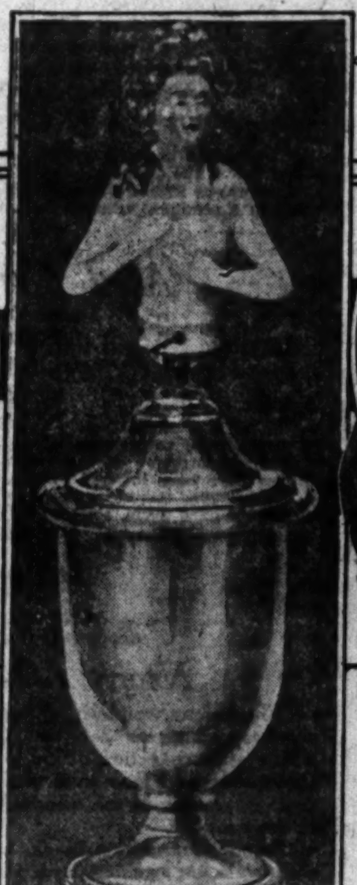
In working with the chenille, care should be taken to work with the nap or against the nap, all one way or all the other. Otherwise, part will seem shaded. Working with the nap produces a smooth, soft-toned effect. Working against the nap reveals the chenille in all its luster, giving a sort of shaded effect.

Picture yourself on that week-end trip, wearing one over your best georgette—think of the eyes of the other women guests! Envy may not be a noble motive—but then, don't you think you'd like to have a sweater like that?

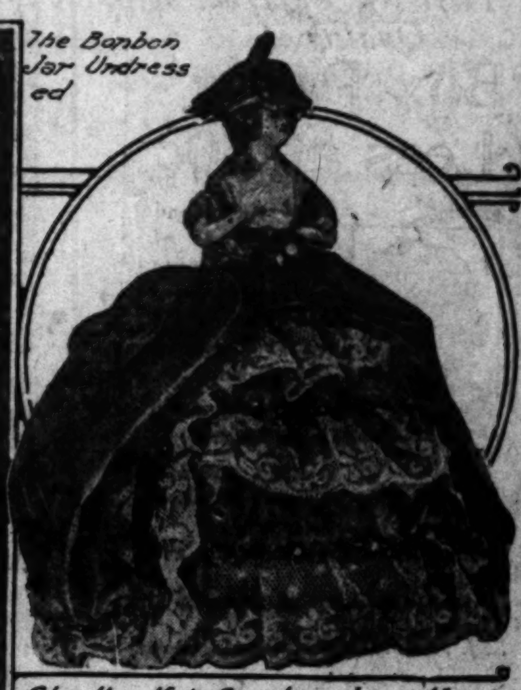
Homely Necessities Daintily Concealed



Her Frock Opens Conveniently at the Side



The Bonbon Jar Undressed



She May Hide Sweetmeats or the Boudoir Lamp

ADMITTEDLY, the telephone is an unbeautiful necessity "as is." And so various means and ways have been devised to bring it into the scheme of the room. It has been painted "to match," and screened in a variety of ways. But it is doubtful if it ever had more charming concealment than this exquisite bit of a silk and china lady provides. She is really only about one-third a lady—that is, the china part of her, anyhow. After that she is the very merest of wire frames, which two portions of her you will do well to buy already made, being satisfied to create and fashion her raiment.

Or you might buy the wee china bust alone and secure it to a wire frame of your own make, which part of the foundation is a matter of two circles of heavy wire of the sort that you use in building lamp shades; a small circle at top and a considerably larger one at bottom, and four oblique "beams" of wire to keep them together. Be quite sure, tho, in making this dolly to go over the telephone, that her framework is big enough for that purpose.

Then when it comes to building her gown, be likewise certain that the model is of the side-closing sort so that the frock may snap open and shut, screenwise, across the mouthpiece of the telephone. Getting more particular about that frock, tho, its hoop tendencies make it a most possible thing for development in lustrous, crisp silks and lace. Let the tiny bodice follow the close low-shoulder line of its period, and, of course, the much bouffant skirt. Black lace and old gold taffeta, then wee pink silk roses, constitute a scheme not to be resisted.

When her ladyship is to play lampshade, the china part of her has annexed to it an electric bulb, and after that the wire frame. Then atop of all that goes her gown in a color, not most becoming to the wearer necessarily, but to the occupant of the boudoir. Rose and cream lace and dabs of old blue flowers make for an ideal glow, of course. Orchid and sunset are responsible for some fetching lights, too. And then there is the ever safe faint yellow and pink combination. Finally, you may complete the picture of Lady Concealment with a hat, if you care to, after the mode of the one hatted lady pictured.

A most practical way for a grown-up to indulge a latent longing to dress as a doll, isn't it?

PLANNING ON A NEW BLOUSE?

Of course, it will be an overblouse. And, of course, it will be decidedly more beautiful and more expensive looking for an elaborate bit of stitching. Well, what you want to do is to plan first of all to see this page next Sunday. Startlingly beautiful is the decorative suggestion that awaits you here, and what is even more appealing than its beauty is its adaptability to all types of blouse!

BROADWAY, FOURTH AND HILL

CHICAGO PLAN GROWS APACE.

Vision of Future Greatness is Before People.

Business Now So Congested Space Must be Made.

Two-Storied Streets may be Constructed.

BY FREDERIC J. HASKIN.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CHICAGO, July 18.—A woman, who was born in Chicago when it boasted a population of 4000 people, recently celebrated her eighty-fifth birthday. That this city of millions should have grown up in a human lifetime is one of the most astonishing facts in the story of America. Never before has a great metropolis sprung into being in anything like so short a time. And the most formidable phase of the matter is the evident fact that Chicago is still an infant. It has all the characteristics of youth. It is active, crude, naive, enthusiastic, undaunted. And it is still growing like a milk-fed chicken.

The present Chicago has its problems. Its downtown section is a roaring confusion of traffic, and it already faces the necessity of building two-story streets. South Water street, its market place, which was a country lane not long ago, is now engulfed in the midst of the city, and produce often rots because congestion prevents it from reaching the stalls. The problem of getting Chicagoans to and from the working center of the city is becoming constantly more serious.

But if the Chicago of today faces these stupendous and vexing problems, what may it expect with the onrush of the decades. Try to imagine Chicago three times its present size, with its suburbs flung three times as far up and down the lake shore, and its business section three times as crowded, noisy and smoky as it is at present.

HOPE IN AIRCRAFT.

Perhaps aircraft will solve the transportation problem, and all the smoke will be done away with by electrification, and all the streets will be three stories high. The giant city which seems sure to come will present no problems for which science and engineering have not suggested a solution. But that solution must be planned and worked out gradually.

Chicago realizes this. It has a plan for its future which is as complete as human foresight can arrange. It is proper to personify the city in this connection, for, to a most unusual extent, the Chicago plan belongs to the whole of Chicago. This plan has been preached on all occasions, it has filled thousands of columns in the newspapers, 53,000 copies of a textbook about it have been used in the public schools, and pictures of this future dream city have been widely displayed. And always the fact has been emphasized that this is a plan for the whole city, one which will benefit all the people, and not merely a class or a section. Every Chicagoan with a mite of imagination carries a picture of the future Chicago in his mind. He sees the now barren and ragged lake front converted into an enormous park, with miles and miles of beach and protected waterway, where he and his family will bathe and picnic, enjoying all the advantages of a lake shore summer resort within sight of the factories and office buildings that give them a living. He sees many miles of narrow and congested thoroughfares, where he now adroitly dodges traffic, converted into spacious boulevards. He sees swift and commodious traction lines, which will whisk him to and from his home, and will carry him in a few minutes from the heart of the business district to cool forest glades, set aside for his pleasure.

PREACHED TO ALL PEOPLE.

These beauties and delights of the future Chicago have been preached to all the people all the time. Anybody in Chicago can tell you about them, and almost anyone will register enthusiasm in doing so. The Chicago plan is really the dream of a city—a great unifying ideal and purpose.

The Chicago plan had its beginning a good many years ago when the great architect, Burnham, presented the city with a set of plans for parking the lake front. From this nucleus has grown a comprehensive plan which comprises, in addition to the lake-front project, the widening and extending of hundreds of miles of streets, the double-decking of two streets at once and of more later, and the creation of many square miles of forest playground on the very edge of the city.

Chicago's finances are badly muddled, but this does not seem to cause any hesitation about carrying out the city plans. Chicago is like a young and vigorous business man who is heavily in debt, but is so confident of his energy and earning capacity that he does not let his debts put any check on his constructive operations. The city has already spent about $55,000,000 on public works and in so doing reached the limit of its bonded indebtedness. Then the assessed value of its property was raised from one-third to one-half, making it now possible to borrow an additional $27,000,000. The city is to vote in November as to whether this amount shall be used in carrying out the programme of the Chicago Plan Commission, and the indications for this authorization are favorable.

WACKER THE CHAIRMAN.

The honorary head of the Chicago Plan Commission is the permanent chairman, Charles H. Wacker. He is a 64-year-old millionaire who has devoted a good part of his time to the plan commission for some ten years, and who possess a quiet determination in going ahead which is valuable to the city. But the chief evangelist of the future Chicago is Walter D. Moody, managing director of the Plan Commission. He is a young-looking but gray-headed man. He has linguistic capacities which for endurance and fluency have never been equaled in ancient or modern times. And nearly all of his eloquence is on one subject—city planning. He firmly believes that city planning is the salvation of the modern world. He believe it will cure everything from rickets to Bolshevism, and he makes a stout argument to that effect. He has facts by the ton. He has studied almost every city on the face of the earth with an eye single to enlarging his knowledge of city planning. He knows not only all the cities that are but all the cities that ever were. In his recent voluminous book, "What of the City?", he writes with charming familiarity about how Belshazzar wrestled with the sewage problem in ancient Babylon.

As a city planner, Moody has become something of a national figure. One hundred and thirty-six American cities have applied to Chicago for aid and advice in city planning, which means that they applied for and received the aid and advice of Walter D. Moody. People come from all over the world to see Moody about city plans. One of his recent visitors was A. Kimena, Commissioner of Prefecture, Tokio, Japan. A Commissioner of Prefecture in Japan seems to be about what we would call a city engineer. After listening to Mr. Moody from dinner until 2 o'clock in the morning, Mr. Kimena requested permission to translate his book into Japanese and went back home to straighten out Tokio.

FIRES ANOTHER GUN.

Moody has fired another gun that is being heard around the world. And you get the impression that he never ceases firing except for meals and sleep. Moody himself insists that he is not a city planner. He says that he is simply a promoter of city plans, which are made by architects and engineers. Promotion, he says, is what most city plans lack. Some 200 American cities have city plans, and not half a dozen of them, according to Moody, hold forth any promise of comprehensive success. The trouble with most of them is that they are only plans for a part of a city, not for a city as a whole.

He says the first thing to do is to get a plan for the whole city which will benefit all parts of it equally and direct its growth as a whole. The next thing is to sell that plan to the people. That is where the promoter comes in. He must convince all the people of the necessity for that plan, and of its equitable and democratic intent. Then it is time enough to pass a law and ask for a bond issue. Most cities are starting at the wrong end of the process.

Moody says that city planning is the real problem of reconstruction, and especially for the reason that war checked and confused the orderly development of cities. More than half of the American people live in cities, and less than half of those live in health and comfort. The great modern cities exercise irresistible magnetism. Like giant squids they suck into themselves life from all sides. They are constantly drawing in clean blood and strong muscle from the country, and from across the seas, and they give success and comfort only to a few. Disease, undernourishment, congestion and death are the lot of the many. The cities consume human life. The draft law made the cities vomit up much of what they had taken in, and it brought forth a horde of weaklings, starvelings and tuberculars. It revealed the undeniable fact that American cities are consuming American man power.

HOUSING OF PEOPLE.

Moody thinks there is no excuse for this. American industry and science are capable of housing all these people well, and feeding them well. It is possible to provide them with playgrounds and amusement and education. And most of these people are willing to work for these things, and they do their share in creating these things for others. Say what you will about the survival of the fittest, the majority fit to survive is getting smaller all the time. It could be made much larger if the conditions of the struggle were a little less hard. The world owes a man a chance to develop himself in return for his labor. It owes him a good place to live in, and clean air and recreation. The cities owe these things to the people, for it is the people who have piled up the wealth of the cities. And this is not socialism or radicalism of any kind. It's equity and common sense.

EXTRAORDINARY.

The Minneapolis police were notified that an office had been burglarized, and before night they arrested several juvenile suspects and recovered $474.33 in Liberty Bonds, cash and checks, $12.32 more than the company reported losing.

That it is a matter of real importance, as well as interesting as a novelty, will be realized when it is considered that the annual destruction by aphids in the Pacific Northwest alone entails a loss of from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000.

Once in his law days, while Lincoln was in Chicago trying a suit, his wife had the roof taken off their house to make the house higher. On Lincoln's return, he manifested great surprise, and asked a passer-by, "Stranger, can you tell me where Lincoln lives?" Receiving the desired information, he then gravely entered the domicile.

HONDURAS NOT CROOKS' HAVEN.

Republic's Fair Name Said to be Injured Unjustly.

Extradition Treaties Apply, Says an Authority.

Sleuths Ignorant of Status of Wanted Men.

The first thing the conscience-stricken offender in the United States automatically thinks about when he feels that he must flee in order to avoid the arm of the law is the safest place on earth from which there is no apparent danger of being forcibly or legally removed.

What in the opinion of professional criminals, crooks, defaulters and forgers is the haven of refuge affording the fullest protection from unleashed human bloodhounds whose traditions have taught them never to give up the trail until the criminal is finally run down and placed within the confines of a cell.

It is Honduras—Honduras, the third largest of the Central American republic with an area of 46,250 square miles, and with a population of nearly 600,000 inhabitants.

In the novel one usually reads that the villian makes his escape to Honduras, the land of the sarsaparilla and the banana.

In the musical comedy there is always a scene showing the disguised scoundrel sneaking about amongst the palm trees and the cocoanut groves.

The movie in its frantic efforts to obtain local color has made Honduras the background of many a plot involving a dash across the American border which finally ended at some Honduran port via a Mexican steamer.

FAIR NAME BESMIRCHED.

Thus has the fair name of Honduras been besmirched and dragged in the dirt by the above mentioned elements of propaganda. The extent of the damage has been enormous. From east to west and from north to south wherever wrongdoers are at work in devising ways and means to beat the law it is common knowledge that Honduras will open wide its doors to protect them from the police. Even now, according to well-informed circles, the fugitive colony of Honduras has grown to large proportions of late owing to this long-established reputation, and the law-abiding citizens of that little South American republic find themselves in a very delicate position with respect to the reception of strange individuals who, for all they know, may be either crooks or well-meaning and respectable citizens from a foreign country. The situation is growing worse right along, and in order to start a backfire against the further invasion of international crooks and their ilk the Honduran Consul-General of New York has started a little propaganda of his own with a view of discouraging the idea that Honduras is a safe haven for fugitives, and of encouraging American police officers to hunt their man even to the very depths of the mountains, for once having captured him, the government of Honduras will gladly co-operate in sending him back to the country of his origin to stand trial.

"Why pick on little Honduras," inquires this suave Latin American official, "Why do fugitives think of Honduras before any other region on earth in order to hide from justice? Do they not know that Honduras is not a place for criminals? Do they not know that we have extradition laws with the United States, empowering American authorities to get a man out of the country, and compel him to stand trial in the United States?"

And to prove his point the Consul-General produced a treaty of extradition solemnized between the United States and Honduras during Elihu Root's term as Secretary of State, which seems to indicate that some of our man hunters have been ignorant of the status of the hunted man once he gained the Honduran border.

FROM THE PACT.

Article I of the pact says: "The government of Honduras and the government of the United States agree to deliver to justice upon request of either party, all individuals accused or convicted of whatever crime is specified in this convention, and committed within the jurisdiction of one of the contracting parties while such individuals were within such jurisdiction at the time the crime was committed, and who seek asylum or are found within the territory of one or the other contracting parties; the understanding is that such delivery will be accomplished on the presentation of proof of guilt in accordance of the laws in the country in which the fugitive or accused may be found, and which may justify his detention and trial if the crime has been committed there."

This article clearly shows that Honduras is not the ideal haven for refugees who have fled the country to avoid prosecution. This should be of interest to police authorities and fugitives alike. It may save the latter car fare.

To make the arbitration treaty complete in every detail a series of twenty-one crimes for which a person may be extradited from either country is listed in the compact. This materially weakens the established reputation that Honduras is kind to the criminal element.

According to the convention the individuals accused or convicted of the following crimes may be delivered over to the proper authorities:

(1.) Assassination, including crimes designated as parricide, voluntary homicide, poisoning and infanticide.

(2.) An attemtp to commit any of the above-mentioned crimes.

(3.) Rape.

(4.) Bigamy.

(5.) Arson.

(6.) Destruction or obstruction of railroads when the lives of human beings are placed in jeopardy.

(7.) Crimes committed on the high seas. (a) Piracy according to interpretation by International law; (b) to sink or destroy intentionally a ship at sea; (c) mutiny or conspiracy by one or more members of the crew or other persons, on board a ship on the high seas for the purpose of rebelling against the authority of the captain or owner of such ship or of taking possession through fraud or violence; (d) boarding a ship on the high seas for the purpose of causing material damage.

(8.) Entering the house of another during the night for the purpose of committing crime.

(9.) Entering the offices of the government and public authorities or banks or savings banks, safety vaults or security companies and other buildings that are not habitations, for the purpose of committing crime.

(10.) Robbery against a person by violence or intimidation.

(11.) Falsification of documents.

(12.) Falsification of official acts of the government and fraudulent use of same.

(13.) Counterfeiting, whether with metal or paper, of money.

(14.) Embezzlement committed by employees of government or of banks when the amount exceeds $200 or its equivalent in Honduran money.

(15.) Theft when such crime is punishable by imprisonment or other corporal punishment by laws of both countries and when amount taken exceeds $200 or its equivalent in Honduran money.

(16.) Abduction.

(17.) Theft when value of stolen goods is $25 or over.

(18.) Obtaining money, bonds or other securities and receiving them with the knowledge that they have been illegally obtained, under false pretenses, when value exceeds $200 or equivalent in Honduran money.

(19.) False testimony or suborning of witnesses.

(20.) Fraud.

(21.) Accomplices of the above-named crimes are also subject to extradition in accordance with the provisions of this convention.

NOT AN IDEAL HAVEN.

In view of the articles appearing in the treaty, it would seem that all reports to the effect that Honduras is an ideal hiding place for fugitives from justice are unfounded as far as the law is concerned. The treaty of extradition furnishes no comfort for evaders of justice, and as the Consul-General insists, "Honduras does not want the criminal element in its midst, and I would like to have it emphatically stated that American authorities should be more energetic in bringing to justice a large number of fugitives who have sought my country, thinking themselves to be beyond the pale of the law. This is not so, as the treaty of extradition indicates."

While ordinary criminals will find no comfort in the news that Honduras is ready to shut the doors of its hospitality to the undesirable element, political refugees may take advantage of the fact that the extradition law existing between the United States and Honduras does not provide that they may be extradited for crimes of a political character.

Thus is the good name of Honduras restored. Hereafter, burglars, robbers, thieves and defaulters will be forced to seek other lands in which to hide. Honduras is too busy developing its sugar, cocoanut, sarsaparilla and banana industry to pay much attention to the entertainment of fugitives from justice.

"Here are your fugitives, come and get them," is Honduras's plea to the United States.

I Shall Not Sing Again.

I shall not sing again.
The child has gone who made my song for me,
The little singing words!
There is no lilt to pain,
The notes would wail, but those he gave to me
Rang with the joy of birds.

I shall not sing again.

It hides his sunny eyes.
I wait out in the rain
But no notes come—his singing lips

The Letter—1919-1940.

Horatio Lang and Mabel Strang
Were lovers fond and true,
Each dreamed about a cosy flat
Designed to shelter two,
Nightly he courted her—they dwelt
One city block apart,
But he couldn't get his courage up
To offer her his heart.

And so Horatio penned a note
In phrases honey sweet,
And laid his love and weekly wage
At Mabel's dainty feet.
He begged her for a line at once
To let him know his fate.
Then mailed the missive joyfully
And sat him down to wait.

The years rolled on with no reply,
And he grew stout and gray,
And Mabel when she met him sniffed
And looked another way.
She married Guy Lewellyn Jenks,
A movie star of fame,
Then, to Horatio's great surprise,
At last her answer came.

"Your letter was delivered, lo!
This afternoon at three,
So your proposal comes," she wrote,
"A little late for me.

Some twenty years ago,
When Burleson ran the mails,
alack!
And they were rather slow."

HUGHES SUPPORTS LEAGUE.

Writes to Senator Hale that Covenant Will Supply Great Need, But Advises Reservations as "Prudent" Course.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, July 28.—That the League of Nations will supply a need and meet a world-wide demand in providing for an adequate development of international law and maintaining machinery for conciliation and conference, is the opinion of Charles Evans Hughes of New York, formerly Justice of the United States Supreme Court and an international lawyer of wide experience. But Mr. Hughes also believes that the prudent course is for America to enter this league with reservations of a "reasonable character."

Mr. Hughes gave his opinion in a letter to Senator Hale of Maine, in answer to the Senator's request for an opinion as to the validity of reservations and a request for an outline of reservations Mr. Hughes deemed advisable.

The complete correspondence on this subject follows:

"SACRIFICES" ISSUE RAISED.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
July 18, 1919.

Hon. Charles Evans Hughes,
98 Broadway,
New York City.

My dear Judge Hughes:—

Many of us in the Senate are in favor of having the United States enter a League of Nations, provided that in doing so we do not sacrifice the sovereignty or traditional policies of our country. We believe that the proposed covenant for a League of Nations in the peace treaty now before the Senate does make such a sacrifice. Rather than take the covenant as it now stands, I am very certain that considerably more than one-third of the Senate would refuse to ratify the treaty altogether. As far as I am personally concerned, I do not want to see this happen, and I do want to see some plan devised whereby the United States may safely enter the League of Nations. It has seemed to some of us that this result could best be accomplished by attaching certain reservations to the proposed covenant, which would limit the participation by the United States in the league. I shall be very glad if you will give me your opinion as to the validity of such reservations, and also as to what reservations in your judgment should be made to safeguard the interests of our country.

Sincerely yours,
FREDERICK HALE.

July 24, 1919.

Hon. Frederick Hale,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

My dear Senator Hale:

I am in receipt of your letter of July 18, and it gives me pleasure to comply with your request for my opinion with respect to the validity and advisability of reservations on the part of the United States in entering the proposed League of Nations.

LEAGUE IS NEEDED.

Permit me to state at the outset the point of view from which I think the questions should be approached. There is plain need for a League of Nations, in order to provide for the adequate development of international law, for creating and maintaining organs of international justice and the machinery of conciliation and conference, and for giving effect to measures of international co-operation, which from time to time may be agreed upon. There is also the immediate exigency to be considered. It is manifest that every reasonable effort should be made to establish peace as promptly as possible, and to bring about a condition in which Europe can resume its normal industrial activity.

I perceive no reason why these objects cannot be attained without sacrificing the essential interests of the United States. There is a middle ground between aloofness and injurious commitments.

MERIT IN PLAN.

I share the regret that suitable steps have not been taken for the formation of international legal principles and to secure judicial determinations of international disputes by impartial tribunals, and that the hope of the world in the determination of disputes has been made to rest so largely upon the decision of bodies likely to be controlled by considerations of expediency. There is merit enough in the proposed plan to make it desirable to secure it, if proper safeguards can be obtained, but it is just as futile to exaggerate its value as it is to see nothing but its defects. One must take a light-hearted view of conditions in the world to assume that the proposed plan will guarantee peace, or bring about a cessation of intrigue and of the rivalries of interests, or prevent nations which cannot protect themselves from being compelled to yield to unjust demands where for any reason great powers deem resistance inexpedient. Rather, the proposed covenant should be viewed as a mere beginning, and while it is important that we should have a beginning, it is equally important that we should not make a false start.

ADVISES PRUDENT COURSE.

I think that the prudent course to enter the proposed league with reservations of a reasonable character, adequate to our security, which should meet ready assent, and thus to establish a condition of amity at the earliest possible moment.

As to the validity of reservations: This question has two aspects: First, with respect to the action on our part which is essential to the making of reservations; and, second, as to the effect of reservations upon other parties to the treaty.

As to the first question, it is manifest that attempted reservations will be ineffectual unless they qualify the act of ratification. The adoption of resolutions by the Senate, setting forth its views, will not affect the obligations of the covenant, if it is, in fact, ratified without reservations, which constitute part of the instrument of ratification.

RESERVATION VALIDITY.

If the Senate should adopt reservations by a majority vote, I assume that these will be made part of the proposed resolution of assent to the treaty, and the question will then be whether the Senate will give its assent, with these reservations, by the requisite two-thirds vote. If the proposed reservations are reasonable, the responsibility for the defeat of the treaty, if it is defeated, will lie with those who refuse the vote essential to the assent. If the Senate gives its assent to the treaty, with reservations, the concurrence of the President will still be necessary, as ratification will not be complete without his action, and the responsibility for a refusal to give the ratification with the reservations as adopted by the Senate as a part of the instrument of ratification would thus lie with the President.

Assuming that the reservations are made as a part of the instrument of ratification, the other parties to the treaty will be notified accordingly. As a contract, the treaty, of course, will bind only those who consent to it. The nation making reservations as a part of the instrument of ratification is not bound further than it agrees to be bound. And if a reservation, as a part of the ratification, makes a material addition to, or a substantial change in, the proposed treaty, other parties will not be bound unless they assent. It should be added that where a treaty is made on the part of a number of nations, they may acquiesce in a partial ratification on the part of one or more.

EXPLAINS "INTERPRETATION."

But where there is simply a statement of the interpretation placed by the ratifying state upon ambiguous clauses in the treaty, whether or not the statement is called a reservation, the case is really not one of amendment, and acquiescence of the other parties to the treaty may readily be inferred unless express objection is made after notice has been received of the ratification with the interpretative statement forming a part of it.

Statements to safeguard our interests, which clarify ambiguous clauses in the covenant by setting forth our interpretation of them, and especially when the interpretation is one which is urged by the advocates of the covenant to induce support, can meet with no reasonable objection. It is not to be supposed that such interpretations will be opposed by other parties to the treaty, and they will tend to avoid disputes in the future. Nor should we assume that a reservation would lead to the failure of the treaty or compel a resumption of the Peace Conference, when the reservation leaves unimpaired the main provisions of the covenant looking to the peaceful settlement of disputes and the organization of conferences, and simply seeks to avoid any apparent assumption of an obligation in our part to join in a war at some indefinite time in the future for a cause the merits of which cannot now be foreseen, as it is evident that in such case we must inevitably await the future action of Congress in accordance with what may then be the demand of the conscience of the nation. In contemplating this experimental, albeit hopeful, enterprise, our security and good faith are primary considerations. Those, either here or abroad, who would oppose such reasonable interpretations or reservations on our part would take a heavy responsibility.

The question is then what, specifically, should the reservations be:

RIGHT OF WITHDRAWAL.

(1.) With respect to the right of withdrawal (Article I). It is reasonable to provide that a member withdrawing from the League should not be released from a debt or liability previously incurred. But it should not be possible that, through a claim of the non-performance of an obligation, a member desiring to withdraw should be kept in the League, perhaps indefinitely. I understand that different interpretations have been put upon the clause in question, and I think that there should be a clarifying statement as a part of the ratification.

(2.) The clause relating to domestic matters, such as immigration or tariff laws, is ambiguous (Article XV), as it provides for a finding by the Council whether the question is one solely within the domestic jurisdiction. There should be a clear statement of our understanding that such matters, where no international engagement has been made with respect thereto, are not submitted for the consideration or action of the League or any of its agencies.

ENDORSES ROOT'S VIEWS.

(3.) It is urged by the advocates of the Covenant that Article XXI recognizes and preserves the Monroe Doctrine. But the descriptive phrase employed in the Article is inaccurate, and the meaning of the Article is far from clear. There should be an interpretative statement which will remove all doubt that the traditional policy of the United States as to purely American questions is still maintained. I fully endorse Mr. Root's proposed statement of reservation and understanding upon this point, but in the view that an alternative form of statement may be helpful, I submit one below.

(4.) I agree with Mr. Root that it would be desirable to eliminate Article X, with its guaranty to "preserve against external aggression the territorial integrity" of all members of the League. My views as to this Article were stated in the enclosed address before The Union League Club (March 26, 1919) and I need not repeat them at length. I still think that Article X is a trouble-breeder and not a peace-maker.

OBJECTS TO ARTICLE TEN.

If we are entering upon a new world order of democracies, the inevitable consequences should be recognized. Democracies cannot promise war after the manner of monarchs. It is idle to attempt to commit free peoples to the making of war in an unknown contingency when such a war may be found to be clearly opposed to the dictates of justice. The limitation with respect to "external aggression" is important, but does not meet the difficulty. As the most earnest supporters of the Article admit, it may be invoked against a Power which has performed all its obligations under the other provisions of the Covenant and be the victor "in a war illegal" under Articles XII, XIII and XV."

While the importance of Article X is strongly emphasized by its supporters, it is said at the same time that the fulfillment of the engagement would be only according to the plan advised by the Council of the League, and as this must be a plan upon which the members of the Council unanimously agree we could veto any proposal calling for an intervention in what we deemed to be an unsuitable case. Again, it is freely recognized that war can only be declared by Congress.

"ILLUSORY ENGAGEMENT."

Article X is objectionable because it is an illusory engagement. Whether we shall go to war to preserve the territorial integrity of another state is a situation not now disclosed or described so that the merits of the case may be judged, will depend upon the action of Congress, and that action will be taken according to the conviction of our people as to our duty in the light of the demands of justice as they appear when the exigency arises. The general guaranty of Article X cannot be relied upon to produce action contrary to its judgment. We should not enter into a guaranty which would expose us to the charge of bad faith, or of having defaulted in our obligation, notwithstanding that Congress in refusing to make war had acted in accordance with its conception of duty in the circumstances disclosed.

NEED FOR LIMITATIONS.

Of course, a limitation of the operation of Article X to a period of years would be preferable to the indefinite obligation proposed. But, in my judgment it would be better that, if Article X is not eliminated, a reservation and interpretative statement should be adopted which would adequately recognize the limitations I have mentioned. Further, it is possible that such a reservation and interpretative statement, while sufficient for our protection, would make acquiescence easier than if the elimination of the article were required. I append the form of such a statement for your consideration.

The resolution embodying the reservations and interpretations thus suggested might be in some such form as the following:

The Senate of the United States of America advises and consents to the ratification of said treaty with the following reservations and understandings as to its interpretation and effect to be made a part of the instrument of ratification:

WITHDRAWAL POWER.

First: That whenever two years' notice of withdrawal from the League of Nations shall have been given, as provided in Article I of the covenant, the power giving the notice shall cease to be a member of the league or subject to the obligations of the covenant of the league, at the time specified in the notice, notwithstanding any claim, charge or finding of the nonfulfillment of any international obligation or of any obligation under said covenant; provided, however, that such withdrawal shall not release the power from any debt or liability theretofore incurred.

DOMESTIC AFFAIR.

Second: That questions relating to immigration, or the imposition of duties on imports where such questions do not arise out of any international engagement, are questions of domestic policy, and these and any other questions which according to international law are solely within the domestic jurisdiction are not to be submitted for the consideration or action of the League of Nations or of any of its agencies.

MONROE DOCTRINE.

Third: That the meaning of Article XXI of the covenant of the League of Nations is that the United States of America does not relinquish its traditional attitude toward purely American questions, and is not required by said covenant to submit its policies regarding questions which it deems to be purely American questions to the League of Nations or any of its agencies, and that the United States of America may oppose and prevent any acquisition by any non-American power by conquest, purchase or in any other manner of any territory, possession or control in the Western Hemisphere.

MILITARY EXPEDITIONS.

Fourth: That the meaning of Article X of the covenant of the League of Nations is that the members of the league are not under any obligation to act in pursuance of said article except as they may decide to act upon the advice of the council of the league. The United States of America assumes no obligation under said article to undertake any military expedition, or to employ its armed forces on land or sea, unless such action is authorized by the Congress of the United States of America, which has exclusive authority to declare war or to determine for the United States of America whether there is any obligation on its part under said article and the means or action by which any such obligation shall be fulfilled.

With high regard, I am
Very sincerely yours,
CHARLES E. HUGHES.

Prices to Make Merchandise Fairly Fly

—The swift sailing merchandising yacht has taken a further reef in the sales, so that the second lap of the great annual race will prove even faster than the first.

—Prices that were low have dropped so much lower and new lots have come forward at such surprising prices that I should see in my departments the most active selling since the season began.

—I cannot begin to describe the individual garments in these many price lots. I can only, in a general way, convey to you the full importance of the offering.

—No word picture that I can bring up before you will impress you as much as the merchandise itself.

—I want you by all means to see the merchandise that I am offering—I want you to note the prices, the materials and styles.

—I have been to the markets, I have made many purchases. I have gone into my own stock and taken other lines; altogether I have here a price grouping that any woman who needs a garment can well appreciate and of which she can well afford to take advantage.

You'll Wonder How it is Possible That I Can Sell Such Queen Quality Shoes at $5.85

—And sometimes I wonder myself why I should offer Queen Quality shoes at such a price when the market is going upwards so rapidly that I shall pay a great deal more to duplicate these shoes I am offering.
—However, this is the Department Managers' Sale. Volume is the object and I am out to win in my class.
—Many new lines are to be added for the second week—not branded that the choice may be wider.
—I want to impress upon you the diversity of the styles as well as their correctness and the extreme lowness of the price.
—It is a well-known fact that the fall styles will not differ essentially from the present fashion.
—Can you resist, then, purchasing smart oxfords and pumps, of the most desired styles in patent leather, brown kid or calfskin; also black kid or calfskin oxfords? White buck and reignskin.
—If you will take my advice you will buy several pairs while the opportunity presents itself.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIRS—
WARTS AND MOLES.

Pulling a few stiff hairs from the face may start a serious growth. Let me demonstrate free of charge how pulling, cutting, using wax depilatories and the so-called hair removers promote growth of hair on the face. My electric machine is the only known method of killing superfluous hair, fuzz warts and moles, without destroying the surrounding tissue. This machine destroys 300 hairs an hour. I have had 19 years' experience and devote all my time to the work. A binding guarantee that any hairs or moles I treat will never return. Many L. A. satisfied customers will testify to my skill as an expert. Open all day Saturday.

MRS. F. A. SCOTT,
Suite 407 Rumiller Bldg.
Over Bootery.

SUPERFLUOUS HAIR—
HUMILIATING AND UNSIGHTLY.

There is only one method known today of permanently removing superfluous hair, and that is Electrolysis (electric needle.) This process in the hands of a reliable and expert operator insures absolute satisfaction. I stand back of my work, and guarantee any hair treated by me will be permanently destroyed, leaving no scars.

LEARN THE ART OF SINGING—
SAVE THIS ADV.
SPECIAL SUMMER CLASS IN VOICE CULTURE.

Voice culture is an asset that cannot be overestimated from a health standpoint alone. The deep breathing required makes red blood, quiets the nerves, and gives correct poise to the body.

It requires only a little intelligent study, time and money to equip you to take your place as a singer.

By learning to use your breath correctly you will be greatly gratified at the interest your audience will take in your singing; your voice will be heard farther; the tones will be sweeter, and you will not fatigue, but will enjoy the singing as much as your friends.

It is our object to master all of the elements that are necessary for a singing artist to know, including diction, phrasing, and interpretation. Only the best music is used. Not a song is learned that could not be used at a dignified concert.

I am giving a special rate in voice culture and singing for the summer. Daily lessons may be secured at reasonable tuition where home practice is inconvenient. Voices tried free of charge, and will tell you frankly if it is worth your time and money to study.

I am especially interested in young people's voices, and give a special rate to high-school students or public school teachers.

We have monthly recitals for the benefit of the students, also a sight singing class, to which students are admitted free. Come and talk it over. You will not regret it, and it may mean much to you.

FOR SALE—

CHANDLER SIX

TOURINGS
CHUMMY ROADSTERS.

You do not dare to purchase a CHANDLER until you have investigated the REBUILT, REFINISHED, FULLY GUARANTEED ones that we are offering at a range of prices from $800 to $1550 on TERMS. You cannot respect yourself as a wise purchaser unless you at least learn about these values, and what CHANDLER SERVICE and CHANDLER GUARANTEE will mean to you for the next year to come. Our business has been the marketing of CHANDLERS practically since they were first placed on the market. We know most of the Chandler owners and we know quite a bit about the manner in which they have taken care of their cars. We will not accept a used CHANDLER in exchange on a new one if it has been abused. We do not have to. We cannot secure all the new CHANDLERS that there is a demand for, so you may rest assured that we are particular about the used cars we accept in exchange. If you do not believe this, try us out with some car that is not up to standard and see how quickly we refuse it. We are not independent, but we are careful of our reputation, and we do not want to be forced to offer a poor used car for sale.

Closed from noon Saturday to Monday morning.

$175 AND UP.

It is quite possible to secure an automobile from us at as low a figure as $175 on Terms. There is good service in these cars. They are far too good to wreck them. If they were not, we would not offer them to you. COME IN. Look them over. ADDRESS BELOW.

NOTICE—A USED CAR IS NOT A USED UP CAR IF PURCHASED FROM EARL V. ARMSTRONG, INC. At least three-quarters of the mileage built into the car is still there. Buy and drive this bargain mileage—it's worth many times what you pay for it.
We believe in the used cars we offer for sale, we believe in the people we sell them to—therefore we offer an exceptional guarantee to every purchaser of a car from this company that is sold in excess of $500. We are proud of our used car stock. We take pleasure in offering them at prices that will please you. We will sell you a NEW car later on if you purchase a used car from us now.

TEAMSTERS MAY TIE UP HARBOR.

General Strike on San Francisco Bay Threatened.

Street Car Service Resumed on Lines in Chicago.

Tacoma Shipyard Lays Off Men for Retrenchment.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—A strike of 20,000 teamsters and other crafts in the Water Front Workers' Federation will be called next Friday unless the teamsters are granted a $1 a day increase over their present wage by that time, John A. O'Connell, secretary of the San Francisco Labor Council, announced here today.

The threatened strike will include the stevedores, sailors, marine firemen and cooks, pile drivers, hoisting engineers and ship clerks, O'Connell said.

The teamsters have called a meeting for Thursday to hear the final answer of the employers, if any is submitted. In the event none is received they will go out the next morning, according to O'Connell.

The teamsters receive a wage ranging from $3 to $5.50 a day. An increase of $1 for all classifications in the union is demanded.

The strike, if called, will paralyze the horse and motor transportation of the entire city, and will hold up practically all shipping activity here, O'Connell said.

STREET CAR STRIKE ENDS.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Street car service was resumed today after a four-day strike of surface and elevated car men. Resumption of traffic soon followed announcement of acceptance of a wage schedule of 65 cents an hour for surface and 67 cents for elevated men.

Hearings were begun today by the State Public Utilities Commission to determine what raise in fares will be necessary to pay the 17 cents an hour increase in wages. It is said a 7-cent fare on surface lines and an 8-cent fare on elevated roads will be granted. In addition a 1-cent charge for transfers may be authorized.

WASHINGTON STRIKERS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

TACOMA (Wash.) Aug. 2. — A thousand men were let out at the Todd shipyard here last evening, bringing the total thrown out of work since the strike of blacksmiths began a week ago to about 3000. The yard management announced that the men were released following introduction of a policy of retrenchment.

BELLINGHAM (Wash.) Aug. 2.—Shingle weavers employed at the plant of the Whatcom Falls Mill Company, said to be the largest cedar-cutting plant in the world, struck this morning. A disagreement between the foreman and two of the shingle packers is said to have led to the walkout.

EVERETT (Wash.) Aug. 2.—Following a flat monthly increase of $25 granted the city firemen several days ago, the City Commissioners yesterday granted a $25 increase to virtually all city employees.

FINANCE MINISTER OF CANADA RESIGNS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

OTTAWA (Ont.) Aug. 2.—The resignation of Sir Thomas White, Minister of Finance in the Dominion Cabinet, was announced today. He will be succeeded by Sir Henry Drayton, who has been chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners.

There have been previous reports that Sir Thomas, who handled successfully the difficult task of financing the government during the war, soon would retire to enter business.

The resignation of T. A. Creerar as Minister of Agriculture also was announced today. His place will be taken by Dr. Simon Fraser Tolmie.

SAYS UNREST IS DUE TO COST OF LIVING.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 2. — Gov. Lowden of Illinois, in a statement issued today, declared that there can be no lasting relief from the prevailing industrial unrest until the high-cost-of-living problem has been solved. The question, he said, must be solved by the Federal government without delay if national disaster is to be averted.

He urged the producer, business man and worker to co-operate in obtaining relief from profiteering even if it means financial loss to every individual.

"If a too reduddant currency be the cause, the Federal reserve banks must in some way restrict further issue of money," said Gov. Lowden. "If the unprecedented demand abroad be the cause of the increase in prices of the necessities of life, the government must find some way to limit exports of these commodities. Chicago is tranquil today. Whether it is a truce we enter upon or permanent peace depend upon the solution of this problem."

REQUISITION OF OIL BY NAVY QUESTIONED.

CALIFORNIA OPERATORS SAY IT HAS CAUSED THEM LOSS OF $500,000.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—A statement prepared here tonight by attorneys representing California oil interests questions the constitutional right of the government to continue the requisition of oil at a fixed price as a war measure, asserting that the difference between the market price of oil and the price paid by the Navy Department has created an aggregate loss to the oil operators of approximately one-half million dollars.

According to the representatives of the oil companies the companies recently received a mandatory order to the effect that the requirement of the Navy Department would be requisitioned by the Secretary of the Navy under existing laws. These laws, the statement said, were embodied in war-time legislation. The new order, it was charged, was to cover the period extending from July, 1919, to January, 1920, and reduced the price of oil from $1.47 to 86 cents a barrel.

The statement points out that the War Department and the railroad administration have been paying the market price for oil and that the marketing companies are paying $1.23 a barrel for oil at the wells.

The statement also incorporated an accusation that an oil company situated at Martinez in Contra Costa county northeast of here recently refused to abide by the new order issued by the War Department but later delivered oil to representatives of the navy after, it was charged, the oil company had been given a designated space of time in which to make the delivery of its product.

UNIVERSITIES FACE DEARTH OF TEACHERS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—The high cost of living will cause a dearth of teachers in the universities of the country next fall unless salaries are materially raised, according to a warning issued today by Prof. George D. Strayer of Columbia University, president of the National Education Association. The war has emphasized the situation, Prof. Strayer said, by opening up a tremendously-increased field for college-trained men who have been heavily drawn upon for various government posts. Many of these men have realized the possibilities that are open to them in other directions than teaching and will not return to the colleges, he declared.

A supplementary statement issued by Prof. Hartley B. Alexander, professor of philosophy in the University of Nebraska and an instructor in the Columbia summer school, declared that the State universities of the West are awake to the seriousness of the situation and are everywhere increasing the salaries of the faculties to a point high enough to offset the increase in the cost of living.

FEW COURT CASES WITH PROHIBITION.

WILL INTRODUCE ARMY BILL NOW.

Congress Abandons Plan to Wait for Pershing.

Measure to be Looked on as Subject to Change.

Moderate Universal Military Training a Provision.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

WASHINGTON, Aug. 2.—The War Department bill, providing for a moderate system of universal military training as the settled military policy of the nation, will be laid before Congress without further delay. Probably it will be in the hands of Senator Wadsworth and Representative Kahn, heads of the two military committees, early next week.

Previous plans for extended conferences with Gen. Pershing and other overseas officers before presenting the bill have been abandoned. For that reason, however, it is understood, the committee chairmen will be informed that while the project included in the proposed measure represents the best judgment of the War Department at this time, it is to be looked upon as tentative in some respects and subject to possible modification in the light of the experience and judgment of these officers when their testimony shall be available.

Details of the department's bill have not been made public. There are indications, however, that it differs essentially in some ways from the Kahn-Chamberlain universal training bill already before the committees.

In previous discussions of the subject dating back to the preparedness hearings before the United States entered the war, most army officers who testified held that training should be given in the 19th year.

Secretary Baker expressed the same views and it is thought probable the War Department plan will be found to call for the training of youths of 19 instead of 18, as provided in the Kahn-Chamberlain measure.

Another point on which the department's judgment is awaited with interest is the amount of training to be required. Throughout the extended study of the subject in which various branches of the General Staff have been engaged ever since hostilities ceased, this has been a difficult problem.

The Kahn-Chamberlain bill would provide for six months training. There is some reason to believe, however, that the War Department would be satisfied, all things considered, with less than that; probably with half as much time devoted to intensive instruction.

The necessary result of limiting the training period to less than six months, some officers have said, would be to compel abandonment of all projects for vocational or other educational work. All that could be done would be to concentrate on purely military instruction of a primary nature as the time would not permit more than incidental physical development.

MUST KICK IN BEER BE LEGALLY PROVED?

STATUS OF BEVERAGE UNDER PROHIBITION ACT TO BE ARGUED TOMORROW.

Whether the government has to allege and prove that beer is an intoxicant or whether it is sufficient to allege that it is beer, is the crux of the argument on the demurrer to the complaint filed against Joseph Baumgartner, president of the Bakersfield Brewing Company, to be argued before United States District Judge Bledsoe tomorrow.

This is the first time the definition of the war-time prohibition act has been challenged in the local Federal court, and the argument is likely to go into every phase of the liquor question. Theodore A. Bell of San Francisco, accredited legal representative of the liquor interests on the Pacific Coast, will appear in behalf of the demurrer that has been interposed. He will be assisted by E. J. Emmons of Bakersfield. Assistant United States District Attorney Lawson will present the side of the government.

In a number of United States District Courts the question of liquor prohibition, in one phase or another, has been argued and decided and there has been a vast difference of opinion on the points raised.

While it is understood that current litigation and testing of the issues will only give the liquor men a possible lease of life until the constitutional amendment goes into effect January 26, 1920, it is believed the liquor men will seek to raise some issue that may be utilized later on in Congressional legislation that must be enacted to enforce the constitutional amendment. That object would be more than secured if by national enactment it could be possible to manufacture and sell beer containing not to exceed 2.75 per cent. alcohol.

The judgment of Judge Bledsoe on the demurrer will form the basis of further appeal, no matter which side wins.

IS ENGLISH SOBRIETY TEST FOR JAPANESE?

JAWBREAKER STUMPS ACCUSED DRIVER, BUT COURT WAITS FOR BETTER PROOF.

When Police Surgeon Zorb testified yesterday in Justice Summerfield's court that he had applied the oral intoxication test, that of saying "Methodist Episcopal," to S. Takayama, accused of driving an automobile while intoxicated, the court expressed a doubt if the Japanese could pronounce the words when sober. The judge would have made such a test in court, but the surgeon continued to say he had given numerous other tests when the man was taken to the Receiving Hospital and was convinced that he was intoxicated. He was arrested at Main street and Slauson avenue.

The court held the man to answer, the Japanese being the second person in this county to be arrested since the charge was made a felony offense by an amended law. Bail was fixed at $500 and was furnished.

A few seconds before the team crashed into the street car, the Chinaman's wagon was hit by an automobile driven by Harry Dean of 1269 East Forty-seventh place, near Micheltorena street, on Sunset boulevard. BRITISH IMPORT BAN MAY BE CONTINUED.

DROP IN STERLING EXCHANGE CAUSES HOLD BACK OF AMERICAN ORDERS.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The American Chamber of Commerce review for July says that British import restrictions are likely to be continued after September 1 when the government promised they would be revised. The government's trade policy is expected to be announced before Parliament meets August 15. Premier Lloyd George says the policy cannot be made legislative until Parliament reconvenes late in October and he considers the present import restrictions should be continued until then.

The American chamber anticipates that restrictions affecting many lines of American goods will be modified. It has obtained concessions for the import of 5000 additional motor vehicles from America.

The drop in sterling exchange, it is asserted, is causing British importers to hold back American orders, and wherever possible, to buy in countries where the value of the pound is higher than in the United States.

Meanwhile the government, in consultation with banking and trade interests, is preparing to re-establish British export trade by providing sterling credits for the countries not in a position to pay at present by exports for essential imports, says the review.

The official shipping report shows that there are 2,500,000 tons of shipping under construction, practically every yard being packed with orders with favorable labor conditions. This tonnage should take the water within twelve months, but this prospect is unlikely. Virtually all the new construction is cargo tonnage.

The government has subscribed for 1,700,000 shares of the 5,000,000, and appointed two directors for the British dyestuffs corporation formed by arrangement with the Board of Trade to promote the manufacture of synthetic dyestuffs and colors.

The compulsory scheme of standard clothing will be revived, the review goes on, to check high prices following the removal of the wool control. Food control will be continued throughout the winter, the government to supervise the purchasing, distribution and prices. More plentiful supplies than last winter are expected, but prices will be just as high.

PADEREWSKI SEES TREATY AS BLESSING.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WARSAW, Friday, Aug. 1.—During the sitting of the Polish diet when the German peace treaty was ratified, Premier Paderewski made an important speech in which he said he rejoiced that Poland's freedom had been recognized by Germany and was solemnly confirmed by the Allied and Associated powers "although precious Polish blood probably would still flow for territories not yet returned to our patrimony."

Premier Paderewski in summing up the treaty said it deprived Poland of very few square kilometers of territory, but granted much from a national point of view. The changes made in the preliminary draft treaty, he added, deprived Poland of 95,000 Germans but restored 60,000 Poles. He strongly condemned pessimism.

BAKERSFIELD, Aug. 2.—Fires that occur in the great oil storage reservoirs on the "tank farms" of the Kern River oil fields near here will be smothered by a new system of fire control adopted by one of the largest operating companies in California.

TWO CAPTURED AFTER CHASE ACROSS ROOFS.

FREIGHT TRAIN BARRING WAY IS UNDOING OF FLEEING ROBBERY SUSPECTS.

Said by the police to be the two Mexicans who have committed several robberies in the Chinatown district within the last month, Jose Lopez, 19 years old and Ralph Gabiers, 18, were taken into custody late yesterday afternoon by Patrolman Newstetter, after an exciting chase over roofs and fences, that ended when the men were cornered at Main and Alameda streets by a freight train of the Southern Pacific.

According to Officer Newstetter, he was attracted by the blowing of police whistles at Apablaza and Alameda streets. When he arrived there he saw the Mexicans running away. Darting into a tenement-house, they attempted to elude Mr. Newstetter by climbing over the roofs, down fire escapes and through bedrooms.

When they again appeared on the street Mr. Newstetter observed them and renewed the pursuit. When Alameda and Main streets were reached, a freight train pulled in front of the fleeing men, enabling the pursuing officer to arrest them.

At Central Police Station they were booked on suspicion of robbery.

SILK THROUGH BARS.

Thieves Relieve Shirt Makers of Valuable Materials.

Mystery surrounds the burglary yesterday of approximately $2000 worth of silk shirts and bolts of silk from the warehouse of the P. A. Newmark Company, at 398 South Los Angeles street. Investigation by the police failed to show the means whereby the thieves gained entrance to the building. Marks of an auto truck showed that it had been backed up to a barred window and the loot passed from the store through the steel bars.

MOTHERS :: WORKING :: WOMEN'S :: BABES.

Parent of Six Gives Dozen Tots Month's Outing at the Beach.

Mrs. E. B. Mobley and Some of Her Little Guests.

NOT content with raising a large family of her own, Mrs. E. B. Mobley of 623 Crocker street is "carrying on" by assisting other mothers to raise theirs. Just at present she has gathered together some ten children, all of them too young to attend school and whose mothers are busy, salary-earning women. These children Mrs. Mobley has taken to Redondo Beach for a months' outing.

A large tent, a half dozen cots and a larger couch, camp chairs and table and a stove were taken to the motorists' camping ground there by express and, while the place was meant only for automobile campers, the idea of taking kiddies there for a vacation made such an impression on the beach city fathers that permission was granted Mrs. Mobley by the Redondo Improvement Company to set up her household goods for a month or as long as she liked. Cheerful campers assisted in the work and shortly all were installed.

Mrs. Mobley does not consider her efforts at all commendatory but to an onlooker, the care of nearly a dozen babies is no small task. This godmother raised six children of her own. They are now grown and married, with children of their own. Coming west from Washington, D. C., where she lived for many years, Mrs. Mobley missed the care of loved ones and hunted around for something to do. As she said, "I always feel for mothers with the care of little chillren, and when they are busy besides, I am more than glad to lend a helping hand wherever I find a need. I am by no means wealthy myself, but feel we are here to do what we can."

The kiddies play on the sand and in the water and life is one long sweet song.

Mrs. Mobley has several other children in mind whom she says she will try to take to the beach before her month is up. So more than a dozen children will have the benefits of a stay at the shore and several tired mothers will rejoice to know their kiddies are looked after with loving care.

FIRST VESSEL OF FLEET AT SAN DIEGO.

DESTROYER PHILIP BRINGS WORD OF NEW CHANGES IN BIG ARMADA'S MAKE-UP.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

SAN DIEGO, Aug. 2.—The destroyer Philip, first vessel of the new Pacific Fleet to reach an American port on the Pacific Coast from the Atlantic, arrived here this afternoon to bring mail from the fleet and take mail back to it. Lieutenant-Commander E. W. Strother, the Philip's commander, expects to join the flagship New Mexico on August 5, two days before the fleet is due at this port.

The Philip brought word of more changes in the make-up of the fleet under Admiral Rodman that has passed through the Panama Canal and is now on its way up the West Coast. According to this latest information, Admiral Rodman will bring thirty-six vessels here. They are the following:

Superdreadnaughts—New Mexico, Arkansas, Mississippi, New York, Texas and Wyoming.

Battleships—Georgia, New Jersey and Nebraska.

Scout cruiser—Birmingham.

Destroyers—Breese, Gamble, Ludlow, Lamberton, Walker, Boggs, Buchanan, Crosby, Dent, Elliott, Montgomery, Philip, Palmer, Radford, Ramsey, Thatcher, Waters, Ward, Woolsey, Wickes, Yarnall, Tarbell and Rathburn.

Colliers—Vestal, Cuyama and Vulcan.

In addition, the cruisers Chicago and Cleveland, the destroyers Hart, Chauncey and Reisel and the training ship Iris are due to meet the fleet at this port. The tenders Aroostook and Melville are expected here on August 8, the day after the main fleet is due at San Diego.

The Philip brought word that Rear-Admiral William R. Shoemaker is on the battleship Georgia and Rear-Admiral Robert Coontz is on the dreadnaught Wyoming, while Capt. Arthur Crenshaw, commanding the destroyers, is on the scout cruiser Birmingham.

The Philip left the fleet at Acapulco Wednesday afternoon, steaming ahead at a fast rate. Commander Strother said the plan was to have all vessels composing the Pacific fleet rendezvous, if possible, off the Coronado Islands, eighteen miles south of this port, at 5 a.m., August 7.

Up to the time the Philip left the fleet, the vessels in Admiral Rodman's command had experienced fine weather.

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 2.—Announcement that Maj.-Gen. Hunter Liggett, newly named head of the Western Department of the Army, would be active in the preparations for the reception of the Pacific fleet here, was made today by the general fleet reception committee. General Liggett is scheduled to arrive Wednesday.

San Francisco Japanese are planning a welcome to the fleet, the War Camp Community Service announced. A tea house will be maintained to serve tea free to navy men while the fleet is here.

The Pioneer Women's Association, Young Men's Institute, Knights of Columbus, Young Men's Christian Association and many other organizations are preparing to welcome the fleet.

Plans for the reception to be given the fleet by the national convention of the Spanish war veterans are complete. The convention will be held during "fleet week" here.

TO FORM ALUMNI OF CAMP TAYOR FACOTS.

An effort is being made to form a branch here of the alumni of the Field Artillery Central Officers' Training School, of Camp Taylor, Ky., or the "Facots," as they are known in army circles. The purpose of the association is to promote sociability and patriotism among the members. Frank M Bering, attorney, 1039 Merchants' National Bank Building, a former lieutenant instructor in that school, has been commissioned to help organize a branch here and will be glad to hear from all graduates of the school.

You Can Make It By a Wise Investment

Texas oil fields continue to be the wonder of the world. Hundreds of thousands of barrels of oil are produced daily.

The Texas Crescent Oil Company owns clear title to 80 golden acres, which are positively on the same structure as and almost corners with the Magnolia's famous Piper Lease in the Electra extension of the Burkburnett field. The big companies are developing this extension rapidly. They make the least noise but usually get the most oil. The Texas Company brought in a well southwest of us last week. The Gulf Production Company has made a location just west of us. Southeast of us the Magnolia on its Piper Lease, brings in a well about every two weeks. There are about 27 producing wells from four separate sands on this lease now, from the 1900-foot sand. Gushers estimated at 1800-3000 barrels have been brought in already. The recent developments of the large companies have proven this territory. We are in the trend of the field and only five-eighths of a mile from production. We are capitalized for $85,000.00 on 80 acres, par value $10.00 a share. Burk Waggoner was capitalized for $60,000.00 on 60 acres and paid its stockholders 33 for 1. We expect to do the same.

The Most Costly Thing in the World

IGNORANCE is the cause of more business crimes and failure of more fond hopes than can ever be charged to malicious intent or dishonesty. Dishonesty in itself is an expression of ignorance, but reference here is made to absolutely honest intentions, which do not come through successfully. Oil, when properly handled, is purely a business proposition and no one ever thinks of classing as gamblers such organizations as Standard Oil, Magnolia Petroleum Co., Sinclair Co., or any other of a considerable list that might be given.

THE PULLMAN OIL & REFINING COMPANY is organized on a business basis and intends to make the present opportunity, as offered in the proven fields of North Central Texas, the foundation on which shall be built a permanent established company, engaged in the PRODUCTION, REFINING and DISTRIBUTION of crude oil and its by-products. The men behind the company are efficient, honest and know their business. The head of every department has made a success of the particular line which he handles and most of these men have come from the older companies; and all of them are here for the reason that they believe in this organization and are willing to stake their future on the success of its operations.

Ample cash resources are the assurance of this company that the hazards of chance will be eliminated. The production end of the oil business is mighty spectacular and the always present chance that the dark horse may win has led to the organization of many small drilling companies who stake their all on the results of a single piece of property and the drilling of one or two wells. It too often happens that even the property on which they drill is not in proven territory, but under any conditions the best that can be said is that it is a gamble. We are not offering a gambling proposition and in no way recognize chance, except to avoid it.

Our immediate production program calls for the drilling of ten wells in proven gusher territory. We believe that one acre surrounded by big wells is better than a whole township of "Wild Cat" land. We are willing to speculate in futures, but for our immediate drilling operations we demand locations that are as near to a sure shot as can be pre-determined. Our No. 1 F. M. Daniel Well is within a few days of completion and the probability that it will be a gusher is best predicted by reference to its location, which is on the Desdemona Townsite.

The Desdemona field is a gusher field and our No. 1 Well is within 1500 feet of the following wells: C. I. Terrell, 4,000 barrels; Union Oil & Refining Co.'s No. 3, 4,000 barrels; Echols, 7,000 barrels; and the Warren Wagner for 8,000 barrels. We have three locations in this field with a total of 57 acres. Our No. 2, F. M. Daniel Well is now drilling, which gives us two drilling wells, and our program calls for eight more at the reasonable earliest possible moment. We believe that you will agree that such a program is an assurance of quantity production with the reasonable possibility of a tremendous total. A combined production of ten thousand barrels would give us a property with a cash sales value as high as $20,000,000 and a dividend earning capacity of many times that figure.

Statistics show that at least 75 per cent. of the money made out of oil is made through refining and distribution, as contrasted with production. We are completing our plans for the erection of a refinery with an initial capacity of 3,000 barrels a day, but built on the unit system, providing for additional capacity as desired. Pipe lines will be laid from this refinery to our production and large storage facilities will be provided by the erection of immense tank farms. Too much emphasis can not be placed either on the sound business principles backing the inception of the above plans or on the tremendous earnings that will result through their operation.

A three thousand barrel refinery, will be built and properly managed will earn daily profits of at least $5,000; a yearly total of over $1,500,000, or more than the entire amount of our proposed outstanding capital stock of $1,250,000. The tank farms and pipe lines which we will build and operate will of themselves not only assure us a steady supply of oil for the refinery at the lowest possible cost of transportation, but will enable us to make enormous profits through the handling of the production of less fortunate neighbors who have neither the foresight or financial resources to assure themselves of a market for such production. This company intends to get its share of the difference between crude oil at the well for $2.25 a barrel and gasoline and oil at the curb for 30 cents and a dollar a gallon. The crude oil in the field in which we are operating runs fifty per cent gasoline, so you can see that a barrel of crude contains some 20 gallons of gas, as well as other products, to a total retail value of $10.00 to $14.00 a barrel. As a business proposition we are out to get our share of this profit.

This is a live, going organization with some two thousand stockholders and outstanding stock in excess of 250,000 shares. We are in the midst of active operations, with choice holdings in the Desdemona and Duke-Knowles fields and with an organization of experienced men. No company now selling stock can honestly hold out the prospects of larger or quicker profits and only a few are established on as firm and substantial a basis. The time for action is now limited and you will have to determine at once that you want to participate in an organization that is destined to take its place as one of the larger independent Texas Oil companies, engaged in the production, refining and distribution of crude oil and its by-products.

You may refer to any bank or business house in El Paso as to the responsibility of this company and its officers.

Tremendous profits are within the reach of the company and you can get your part of these profits, in proportion to the amount that you invest, providing that you have the decision to act at once. Our first two drilling wells may produce a fortune in themselves. The present issue is being sold over a very wide territory and every indication is that stock will soon be off the market. Do not let the opportunity of today become the regret of tomorrow. Present offering at par value of $1.00 per share. Check, draft or money orders accepted.

Capitalization $2,500,000. Par value $1.00, fully paid, non-assessable.

SITUATION GETS GRAVE IN RUSSIA

British Press Fears Such Disaster as Gallipoli.

Charges Government Officers are Heavy Investors.

Paris Objects to the United States Feeding Reds.

BY HENRY HYDE.

[BY CABLE—EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

LONDON, Aug. 2.—The Russian situation becomes constantly graver. Yesterday the Express printed a sensational article headed "The Russian Gamble," declaring that the position of British troops in the Archangel sector is very serious and "that any morning we may wake up to another disaster such as those brought about by the previous ill-advised military adventures at Antwerp and Gallipoli."

The paper blames Winston Churchill by saying his predilection for mad military adventures already has cost the country very dear. There is a hint that more has already happened than is allowed to leak out.

The demand that British troops be entirely withdrawn from Russia grows constantly louder on the part of the labor unions. It is one of the chief political demands of the triple alliance of labor to enforce which it is now taking a vote of its members to decide whether the nation's coal mines, railroads and transport services shall be tied up by a general strike.

HOLD RUSSIAN SECURITIES.

The Daily News yesterday repeated its charges that five members of the British government are considerable investors in the securities of Russian mining companies and other development corporations. The official record shows Austen Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer holds 3000 shares of one mining company; Walter Long, First Lord of the Admiralty, 3500 shares in the Anglo-Russian Trust; Sir Auckland Geddes, 300, and Sir Eric Geddes, 440 shares in another corporation.

It is pointed out that the stock of the Geddes brothers was bought this year and that most of Walter Long's holdings were purchased the last day of 1918.

"What is their answer to these allegations?" asked the News. "It is not the effect the shares will have on their policy which will interest the public. It is the effect their policy will have on their shares."

The News also quotes the statement that $8,000,000,000 of British money is invested in Russia.

It is known French investors hold many millions of bonds issued by the government of the former Czar.

OBJECT TO FEEDING REDS.

The evening papers printed a message from Paris that what is left of the Peace Council is indignant at the determination of the United States to lift the blockade of Russia and to let in food for the population whether they are Bolshevists or otherwise.

Meanwhile the United States Food Commission is sending a large fleet of army trucks into Russia to distribute food from ports through the interior of the country.

Meanwhile Arthur Henderson and most of the other leaders of the British labor party are doing their best to make clear that the Bolshevik government is harder on workingmen than on any other class.

But the propaganda bureau which so constantly floods the press with wild tales of Bolshevist atrocities is actually doing more harm than good to the anti-Bolshevist cause.

The most recent tale widely printed in the London papers was that 150 children sick with typhus in one Petrograd hospital were such a bother to the Bolshevists that they calmly chloroformed the lot and threw the bodies out the back window.

The true story of the Bolshevist terror is bad enough but circulation of such silly tales as that only makes people doubt the truth.

TOOK WINE TO CAFE AND IS ARRESTED.

WILL TEST RIGHT TO BRING ONE'S OWN BEVERAGE TO A RESTAURANT.

Another test case of the Gandier ordinance will be tried before Police Judge Richardson tomorrow afternoon at 2 o'clock, when R. W. Schmoldt, a retired grocer living at 1171 South Normandie avenue, will appear before him on charges of bringing intoxicants for personal consumption into a public eating place. Mr. Schmoldt, in company with his wife, Miss W. Clark, and Fred Widenar were last night dining in Roque's cafe at 367 Aliso street, when Detectives Barnett and Lamb of the Metropolitan Squad entered, and seeing a bottle of wine on Mr. Schmoldt's table, placed him under arrest for violation of section 4, new series of the Gandier ordinance. Schmoldt was brought to Central Station and later released on bonds of $250.

The arrest of Schmoldt is the first of its kind to be made, it having been generally understood that the public were entitled to bring their alcoholic liquids to public eating places, but, according to the police, this is a violation which, upon conviction carries a penalty of a fine of $500 or the alternative of 180 days in jail.

What action the decision of Superior Judge Weller, who, yesterday held that the Gandier ordinance was inoperative, will have on this case is not known, and the City Prosecutor's office refused last night to make any statement regarding it.

FAIL TO BREAK WILL.

Efforts to break the will of Mrs. Mary Spear, who died in Long Beach, January 19, last, leaving an estate valued at $40,500, when Judge Shenk yesterday instructed a jury to bring in a verdict upholding the validity of the will. Rosetta Spear, a daughter, and Pearl G. Easterday, a grand-daughter, are the principal beneficiaries under the will. Mrs. Alberta Burns, a daughter, of Illinois, and other relatives, filed contest to the will.

Prof. Clarence Rainwater.

NOTED SOCIOLOGIST ON TEACHING STAFF.

UNIVERSITY GETS SERVICES OF CHICAGO EXPERT; TO WIDEN WORK HERE.

As a part of the greater university plan, to render increasing service to Los Angeles and surrounding territory, the University of Southern California has engaged Prof. Clarence Rainwater, instructor in sociology at the University of Chicago, to become assistant professor of sociology at the local university. Plans are under way for the establishment of a school of social work upon a graduate basis, which the addition of Prof. Rainwater to the corps of sociology teachers will make possible.

Prof. Rainwater has studied under famous sociologists and has been a member of the faculty of the University of Chicago, of the Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy and of the Chicago Teachers' College. He has completed four years of graduate work at the University of Chicago and will return in 1920 to receive the degree of doctor of philosophy.

In addition to his college work, Prof. Rainwater has had seven years of experience in social work in Chicago, dealing with problems of recreation, poverty, delinquency and immigration, and has gained an extensive reputation in lecturing on social welfare problems.

The sociology department of the University of Southern California is widely known, having been built up by Dr. E. S. Bogardus, director. Dr. Bogardus has recently issued a new volume on Americanization, which is expected to be largely used as a textbook.

POLICE WAR SQUAD IS FORMALLY ABOLISHED.

CENTRAL STATION OFFICES TO BE REARRANGED AT ONCE, CHIEF HOME SAYS.

Chief of Police Home yesterday officially abolished the war squad which has been operating since the opening of hostilities. He also made a number of other minor changes in the Police Department and announced that a rearrangement of all offices in the Central police station will be made within a week.

The first change in office arrangement will be effective tomorrow when the Deputy City Prosecutor's office will be moved from the first floor of the old police station to the office now held by Captain of Central Division Murray, in the new half of the police station. Capt. Murray will move into the offices vacated by the prosecutor.

All war squad records will be turned into the identification bureau and Sergt. E. M. Slaughter, now commanding the squad, will report to Captain of Detectives Moffitt for detail. Patrolman Lloyd, also of the squad, will report to the Chief of Police all missing persons.

Another change going into effect tomorrow will be relief of Patrolman Sweeney from counter work in the chief's office to drive the chief's automobile. Patrolman Ryan, now driving the chief's car, will report to Capt. Murray for duty. Patrolman Lyon, the department statistician, will continue his duties and also take charge of the counter in the outer office of the chief.

Many offices which now are being operated separately will be joined, according to Chief Home, and efforts will be made to so place the different offices that no trouble will be experienced by anyone in finding the various departments.

CHILDREN'S OUTING.

Long Beach Association to be Host to Youngsters.

The Long Beach Amusement Association is planing to give a picnic to about 100 children of the Maud B. Booth Home for Boys and Girls, Fifth street and Boyle avenue, Tuesday on the Pike at Long Beach. They intend to provide all the "eats" and everything else that will go to make the picnic a success, and the management of the Pantages Theater at Long Beach has donated 100 tickets to the show. The only thing not provided is transportation to and from the beach, and owners of automobiles are to be given the chance to do a good turn by lending their machines.

The party is to leave about 8:30 a.m. and return at 5.

Y.M.C.A. EDUCATIONAL SUPERVISOR RESIGNS.

The resignation of J. A. Gillaspie as educational director from the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. was announced yesterday by W. H. Wallace, executive secretary of the Central branch on South Hope street. It was stated that no successor had as yet been selected.

Director Gillaspie had been connected with the educational work of the institution eight years and had been head of his department for the past two years. He was also instructor in the high and grammar school departments. Following a month's vacation, Mr. Gillaspie will engage in business, it is stated.

TEXAS! OIL!! MONEY!!!

YOU know that our wonderful Texas oil fields are making a tremendous lot of money for a whole lot of people. Scores and scores of millionaires have already been made here. Thousands have been made independent for life. Never before in the world's history has so much money been made in so short a time by so many people.

HOW ABOUT YOU?

Are YOU getting YOUR share of this great, new wealth? Have YOU profited from these unsurpassed opportunities? Have YOU had the courage to back your judgment and invest in oil? Or, have you been among the doubting ones who hesitate to risk their money in oil? Whether you have already made money in oil or whether you have held off, fearing to take the chance, mark this statement—NOW IS THE TIME TO INVEST HERE!

DRILLING IN RANGER FIELD

We have many valuable properties in these Texas fields. We have more than 20,000 acres carefully and well-selected leases in these fields. We have leases in the famous RANGER FIELD, and also in the famous DESDEMONA FIELD. We have leases in many of the other promising Texas fields.

Our first well in the Ranger field is now drilling below 1900 feet. This well is drilled on our great Sue lease—a lease surrounded by many great and enormous gushers. Near us is the NORWOOD GUSHER, the PERKINS GUSHER, the ROPER GUSHER, the CONNELLEE GUSHER, the HARRIS GUSHER and many other famous wells. We believe the well we are now drilling on this Sue Lease is certain to come in an enormous Gusher.

We are also drilling below 1500 feet on our big Wilm Lease—this is a great property of 412 acres, and the indications are very favorable for the bringing in of a big well on this property. You know that it is hard to overestimate the tremendous value of this big lease when the well we are now drilling here comes in a big producer.

WE ENTER THE BURKBURNETT NORTHWEST EXTENSION

FOUR WONDERFUL OIL PROPERTIES

We have just secured, at an enormous cost, four tremendously valuable and remarkably well-located Properties in this field. All four of these Properties were selected with the utmost care. Mr. Hay, Manager of our Lease Department, spent several weeks in the Burkburnett Field, carefully examining, inspecting and checking various properties for us there.

He finally selected the four properties which we have just purchased. These properties are located among and surrounded by the BIGGEST GUSHERS in the fields. These four properties are probably worth today a half million dollars—we believe they will soon be worth SEVERAL MILLION DOLLARS!

OUR PROPERTY NO. 1

We have 5 acres in Block 89. This 5-acre lease adjoins the west line of Block 89. It lays in the center — IN THE VERY HEART—of a mile circle which takes in practically ALL the FAMOUS GUSHERS in this most remarkable field. It is surrounded by a veritable forest of Gushers, drilling wells, enormous oil tanks and derricks. On every side derricks are going up over night and actual drilling starts just as fast as the drilling machinery can be rushed in and started to work.

2500 Barrel Well Near Us!
3000 Barrel Well Close to Us!
5000 to 7000 Barrel Gushers Crowd Around Us!

Nearly all of the big Gushers in this field are within a mile of our properties, while many of them are only a few hundred feet distant. Our Lease is sandwiched in between these remarkable and famous Gushers—the United, the Golden Cycle, Thrift No. 2, Thrift No. 3, King Eight, Texas Chief, Burk-Waggoner, and the Gray Gander. The Willow Bloom Gusher has just come in directly across the road from our property, with a reported production of 2500 barrels.

The great TEXAS CHIEF GUSHER is located only a short distance northwest of our property. This well came in with a reported production of 7000 barrels and with the oil spouting 40 feet above the top of the derrick. A short distance south of us is the UNITED GUSHER which recently came in with a reported production of 3000 barrels daily.

LEASES BRING TREMENDOUS PRICES

We have refused an offer of $40,000.00 per acre for this 5-acre lease. The Sinclair Company last week purchased a lease immediately adjoining our property on the east, for which they paid $400,000.00.

The Livingston Company announce the purchase of a 10-acre lease in the field for $110,000.00. The Munger-Verschoyle interests announced on Monday the sale of a 5-acre lease near us for $550,000.00. Many more such sales could be reported.

A few hundred feet west of us the great GRAY GANDER GUSHER has just come in with a reported production of 3000 barrels daily. It is reported that the 5-acre tract on which this Gray Gander Gusher is located has just been sold for $800,000.00. This gives you some idea—some conception—of the ENORMOUS VALUE of our 5-acre lease.

Our lease is 251 feet wide and 866 feet long. This gives us ample room to drill from 5 to 7 wells thereon. We confidently believe—we feel absolutely certain—that every well drilled on this great property will come in at from 2500 barrels to 3000 barrels daily production.

ENORMOUS PROFITS FROM THIS PROPERTY

Wait a minute—get out your pencil—let's do a little figuring—what will our daily earnings be when we have completed five big 3000 barrel producers on this tract? Bear in mind that this oil is worth $2.50 per barrel. Also, what will this one property be worth? Now that you have figured for yourself, the enormous possible earnings and the tremendous value of this lease—you understand WHY we have advised you to immediately purchase all the stock you can afford while you can get it at our SPECIAL OPENING PRICE of 5 cents per share. You are now able to see WHY this stock is certain to soon advance tremendously in value.

FIRST WELL ALREADY STARTED

We have already started development operations on this lease. Our derrick is completed, we have purchased one 250-barrel tank and two large 1600-barrel tanks; we have laid 3500 feet of pipe line and we are arranging to move in our drilling machinery immediately. The actual drilling of our first well will be under way before this advertisement is published, and we should complete it in less than thirty days.

OUR PROPERTY NO. 2

We own 10 acres in Block 45 of the Northwest Burkburnett Extension. This property is located approximately, 950 feet west of Masons' Big Three well—400 feet south of the Majestic well—550 feet southwest of the Texas Girl well—800 feet west of the Forty-four Oil Company well—700 feet north of the Cashin Oil Company well—450 feet northwest of the Record Oil Conpany well—950 feet northeast of the Clover Leaf Oil Company well—and many other wells which are rapidly starting.

We believe the value of this 10 acres will more than double in the next few weeks. It has already greatly increased in value since we acquired it. You will notice that this property, too, is surrounded with wells—it is a proven property and we feel sure of getting a good producer in every well we drill here. There are locations for 10 wells on this splendid property. You can hardly overestimate the value of this splendid 10-acre lease when it is developed.

OUR PROPERTIES NO. 3 AND 4

We own 20 acres in Section 29 and 60 acres in Section 16. These two properties are across the river in Tillman county, Oklahoma, and are right in line with the big Burk-Waggoner and the Texas-Chief Gushers. The big companies and the men who have made the Burkburnett and the Northwest Burkburnett Pools famous have secured leases surrounding our 20-acre and 60-acre leases and are now spending enormous sums of money there in drilling operations. Several wells are now drilling around these properties. Vast development operations are now under way here and it is expected that there will soon be as much activity here as there is now around our 5-acre lease in Block 89.

BIG POOL EXTENDS ACROSS THE RIVER

Many experienced oil men and trained geologists agree that this great Northwest Burkburnett Pool undoubtedly crosses the Red River into Tillman County, Oklahoma, just as the oil fields cross the Cimarron River in Oklahoma, with many big wells drilled in the bed of the river. You will remember that the Red River is the dividing line, with Texas on the south side of the river and Oklahoma on the north side. Indeed, several wells are now drilling in the Red River and it is a most interesting sight to see this drilling work carried on in the center of the river itself.

The big Texas-Chief Gusher is located only a few hundred feet south of the river and there seems to be no doubt that the same structure on which this Texas-Chief Gusher was drilled, extends across the river and into Tillman County, Oklahoma.

We are going to rush the development of our 5-acre tract in Block 89 with all possible speed. As soon as we complete the development of this tract, we will promptly start drilling operations on our 10-acre tract in Block 45. By that time we believe our properties No. 3 and No. 4 will be surrounded with big producing wells and we will then proceed with the development of those properties.

MORE THAN 50 PRODUCING WELLS

The Invader Company of Oklahoma was organized in Muskogee, Oklahoma, about two years ago. It began business with a paid-up capital of $60,000 on one property with four producing wells. The growth of this company has been phenomenal. It now has a capital of $2,000,000 and has more than 50 producing wells.

PAID 32 CASH DIVIDENDS

The Invader Company of Oklahoma, though only two years old, has already paid to its stockholders 32 cash dividends out of the Company's earnings. Besides paying these dividends, the Company has grown rapidly and today stands on a solid foundation—a young GIANT towering far above many of the older companies.

INVADER OIL AND REFINING COMPANY OF TEXAS

This Company was recently organized by the same men who are at the head of and have made such a tremendous success of the Invader Company of Oklahoma. The success of this new Company is therefore assured. Our capital is only $300,000. We own more than 20.000 acres of carefully selected leases in the Texas fields. One Million Dollars was recently refused for a half interest in one small lease near us. We operate our own drilling machinery, tools, motor trucks, etc.; we have our own field forces—WE ARE ALREADY DRILLING THREE WELLS HERE NOW—We are working day and night. We will drill nine more wells just as fast as possible—this is a real oil Company.

Summer-Spoiled Skin Removed by Absorption

As undue summer exposure usually leaves an undesirable surface of tan, redness or roughness, often freckles, too, the sensible thing to do is to remove such surface. There's nothing better for this than ordinary mercolized wax, which actually absorbs an unwholesome complexion. The thin layer of surface skin is itself absorbed, gently, gradually, so there's no inconvenience, no detention indoors. Spread the wax lightly over the entire face at bedtime and take it off in the morning with warm water. If you will get one ounce of mercolized wax at the drug store, use it for a week or so, you may expect marked improvement daily. When the underlying skin is wholly in view your complexion will be a marvel of spotless purity and beautiful whiteness.

SYMPHONY WILL PROCEED ALONE.

Orchestra Directors Act on Failure of Merger.

Tandler will be Retained in Conductor's Place.

Resolutions Censure Head of Philharmonic Body.

Following information received by the directors of the Los Angeles Symphony Association from W. A. Clark, Jr., founder of the Philharmonic Symphony, that he refuses to consider a merger of the two orchestral organizations, the directors of the Los Angeles Symphony Association adopted the following resolution at a meeting yesterday:

"Whereas, Mr. Clark has refused to consider a merger and has given no reason for his refusal, and

"Whereas, the Los Angeles Symphony Association took all the initiative in attempting to bring about a merger between the two organizations, because of the belief that such a merger might possibly be the best thing for Los Angeles, and

"Whereas, Adolph Tandler, leader of the Los Angeles Symphony Orchestra, volunteered to resign if Mr. Clark would then consider a merger and that Mr. Clark stated he would consider it,

"And, inasmuch as the proposed plan for a merger was rejected without reason being given, the Los Angeles Symphony Association, which, for twenty-two years has stood for the best orchestral music and the best music interests of the city, announces that it will continue with its plans for a full symphony season this year and for all the future."

"The Los Angeles Symphony Association was ready to make sweeping sacrifices. In meetings with representatives of Mr. Clark, this organization accepted every stipulation urged by the Clark people, and urged none of its own, except that the name Los Angeles Symphony Association be retained.

"It was willing to sink its personnel and to yield every point to the other side, even to giving Mr. Clark the chairmanship of the Executive Committee, in order that he might be in direct touch with money expenditures.

"This last concession was made at the request of Mr. Behymer, Mr. Clark's personal representative.

"Mrs. Albert Sherman Hoyt, the president, offered to resign and give the place of honor to Mr. Clark.

"The Los Angeles Symphony directors were willing to resign with the exception of five, to equal five from the other side.

"Following Mr. Tandler's magnanimous offer to sacrifice his own interests for a merger, Mr. Clark stated that he would consider a merger and that he was prepared to be reasonable about it.

"His action in refusing it without giving any reason is the equivalent of his telling us to cease operations and make way for him. By his own actions he stands a self-accused interloper in the development of musical Los Angeles.

"Mr. Clark first stated that there is room for but one symphony orchestra in Los Angeles and then proceeds to start a second one himself.

"Be it resolved, that the Los Angeles Symphony Association does not propose to cease operations and make way for Mr. Clark. Instead, it will give this city such a season of symphony music that all other similar organizations will be a superfluity here. Mr. Tandler will not be permitted to resign and the Los Angeles Symphony Association, with Tandler as its conductor, will proceed along its own individual lines, confident of the loyal support which it has received from this community for twenty-two years."

The following directors were present and voted unanimously in favor of the resolution: Joseph J. Husser, Edward Kuster, J. T. Fitzgerald, Godfrey Holterhoff, Jr., Mrs. Irving Ingraham, Charles Wakefield Cadman, Mrs. F. E. Cruikshank, Mrs. Robert L. Gifford, Mrs. Howard Huntington, John G. Mott, Mrs. Dean Mason, Mrs. W. D. Murphy, Mrs. Rea Smith and Mrs. Oscar Trippet.

Wagner Well, Desdemona

OUR NEXT WINNER

Do You Want In With Us?

When we announced that June 20th was the last day to buy CONSOLIDATED OIL INVESTMENT COMPANY stock at 15 cents a share, we had no idea that orders would come in so fast, but by June 15th we were oversold by over $10,000. This Company now is earning over 10% a month on its total Capitalization, and a very small percentage of the Royalties this Company owns have been drilled, and it is estimated the earnings will be increased to 25% a month by wells that will be brought in during the next 90 days. The stock sold in Los Angeles on July 18th at 25 cents a share and practically none to be had at that price. We expect to see this stock sell soon at 50 cents a share.

We Know How to Pick the Winners.

Mr. E. S. Aldrich, the Manager of the Aldrich Investment Company, selected the $400,000 worth of Royalties which were purchased by the CONSOLIDATED OIL INVESTMENT COMPANY, and the Ranger Oil Company, and it is a record to feel proud of, as so far every Royalty has proved a winner. On the Royalties we selected were brought in such famous wells as the Pleasant Grove Church, flowing 6000 barrels a day, the Turner on the Albers flowing 5000 barrels a day, the Harrison wells producing over 8000 barrels a day, and last the great Wagner well at Desdemona which came in last week reported flowing over 15,000 barrels a day. Remember, every one of these were purchased by us before the first well was brought in and are now worth from 5 to 10 times what they were purchased for. The Pleasant Grove well interest which cost us about $10,000 is now giving our Companies about $1000 a day, and our interest in the Wagner which cost us about the same amount is now earning about $1200 a day to those who were lucky enough to go in with us. And remember this is from one well only, and it is expected the second well on each of these leases will greatly increase present earnings.

Your Chance to Win Big.

On July 23rd we purchased one-sixteenth interest of all the oil on the RUSHING tract at Desdemona, in the famous Duke Field, and we are syndicating this into 400 units and offering them to our clients at $100 per unit. There is no expense to you in drilling this well, as it is being drilled by the same experienced drillers who are drilling the Pleasant Grove Church well, and deed is made direct to you and the pipe line company pays you once a month for your portion of production.

Proven Territory.

The RUSHING tract is located about 1500 feet north of the famous Wagner well and within 800 feet of the Humble Well on the ELLISON Lease which was reported having come in July 22nd flowing at the rate of over 20,000 barrels a day. A short distance to the west is the big Echols well which came in at 10,000 barrels a day, and directly north is the Ranger Rock Island Well which came in last week one of the largest wells in the field. We do not think it possible to fail to get a well here that will produce less than 5000 barrels a day, and we feel that we have an excellent chance for a 15,000 or 20,000 barrel well, as the production seems to be the greatest north of the Wagner. This well is now down about 1000 feet and should be completed within 20 days. A well producing 10,000 barrels a day will pay a return on the investment of was declared to be paid August 15th to all stockholders of record August 1st. Get your name on the books for dividend No. 2—Get s returns.

$15,000.00 Daily Earning Capacity

The present daily earning capacity of THE BRADLEY COMPANY is in excess of $15,000.00 from the present producing wells in Burkburnett. THE BRADLEY COMPANY has, through direct ownership of leases, operating contracts, royalty interests, or through substantial stock ownership, sufficient revenue to have a daily net income, conservatively estimated, in excess of $30,000.00 immediately upon the opening of better marketing facilities through the construction of pipe-lines and tank farms now building.

ONE-FOURTH UNDIVIDED ROYALTY INTERESTS — ENTIRE BLOCK 74 BURKBURNETT, 160 ACRES — SECOND LARGEST PRODUCING BLOCK IN BURKBURNETT FIELD

The magnitude of the BRADLEY earnings from this royalty is almost beyond conception, the latest report from the field showing 57 wells either producing, on the sand, drilling, or location made—all on this royalty, 160 acres. Eleven wells were producing before the production outgrew the marketing facilities, which temporarily caused a shut-down of the same; of these the Pickens, Robbins & Hunt was reported in at 3,000 barrels; Harrison No. 1 reported 5,000 barrels; Livingston No. 1, 4,000 barrels; Long Taylor & Thomas, 3,000 barrels; Sure-Pop, 1,500 barrels; not including the BRADLEY No. 1, on its own lease of 10 acres, with a capacity in excess of 4,000 barrels; or the well on the adjoining lease operating on a fifty-fifty basis by the BRADLEY COMPANY, with one 3,500-barrel well, and Nos. 2 and 3 on the sand, ready t drill in immediately upon the opening of marketing facilities. A conservative estimate of the 57 wells for a long term of months would be an average of 2,000 barrels each. The majority of new wells in this block are running far in excess of this capacity. This would mean 114,000 barrels of oil a day produced on the royalty, of which THE BRADLEY COMPANY owns a one-fourth undivided interest. All of these wells apparently are positive in obtaining production, and all should be producing within the next 60 days. At the prevailing price of oil in this field, $2.25 a barrel, this means $256,500.00 a day. The one-fourth royalty interest owned by THE BRADLEY COMPANY would be one-thirty-second of this entire amount, or $8,015.00 a day.

ESTIMATED EARNING 60 DAYS $30,000 DAILY, $9,000,000 ANNUALLY

A conservative estimate of Bradley No. 1 is 4,000 barrels, producing—Bradley Nos. 2 and 3, which are on the sand preparatory to drilling in immediately upon completion of pipe lines to market the product—together with the wells on the adjoining operating contract, consisting of one producing 3,500 barrels, with two others ready to drill in immediately upon pipe-line relief—and The Bradley Company's stock interests in an adjoining lease with one 3,500-barrel well producing, and No. 2 ready to drill in—a conservative estimate of THE BRADLEY COMPANY'S proportion of the actual number of barrels of oil would be in excess of 10,000 daily; and at the prevailing market price of $2.25 a barrel would be $22,500.00 daily income from actual production from the wells now producing, on the sand or drilling; this added to the ROYALTY earnings, as above stated, or $8,015.00, would mean a daily income in excess of $30,000.00 a day, conservatively estimated, from the results of positive drilling and operations, and should be reached in considerably less than 60 days from this date.

A MILLION A MONTH INCOME—HUMBLE PROPERTIES

With the income from the 20 producing wells on the Humble Lease, and the Oil Operators' Building, which is considered the best realty investment in the city of Fort Worth, with the development of other leases to follow, it is plain to see that the earning possibilities of THE BRADLEY COMPANY should reach $1,000,000.00 a month in a reasonably short time. No possible income source is overlooked by their fully experienced management that knows the oil business, with a knowledge derived from real and actual experience of running drills, advancing successfully to oil operators.

TANK FARM — TWENTY 55,000-BARREL TANKS

Three Million Dollars Worth of Oil Stored—Your Positive Assurance

The over-production reached in the Northwest Extension of Burkburnett necessitating the shutting down of the drilling wells and curtailing the sale of production of those on the pipe-lines is a wonderful example of the enormous earning possibilities of a tank farm. This opportunity was immediately seized by THE BRADLEY COMPANY. A representative was rushed to New York City to contract the steel, and at the present time twenty 55,000-barrel tanks have been contracted for—seven are shipped, and a large force of men are building the foundations on the 120 acres purchased in Block 90, Burkburnett, upon which this TANK FARM will be erected at the rate of one tank a week. With hundreds of wells producing, and hundreds of others drilling in with gusher production, it is a human impossibility to operate pipe-lines in such a manner as to not cause occasional shut-downs of the producing wells, maybe one or two days a week. The wells of the companies not owning tanks will be forced to shut down awaiting the clearing up of a pipe-line situation to again market oil. On such days THE BRADLEY COMPANY wells can be turned into its tank farm, gaining the advantage of excess production, and the storing of this actual amount of oil that otherwise would not be produced. It will take but a few months under these conditions to fill the 20 55,000-barrel tanks, giving The Bradley Company a storage supply of 1,000,000 barrels, which can be held indefinitely and sold at a bonus price, after the Burkburnett field has resumed the normal conditions in a year or 18 months from now. This means an insurance of dollars to an investment in BRADLEY stock of not less than $3,000,000.00, and is sufficient in itself to justify an investment in this stock at the price it is now selling for.

CASING-HEAD GAS PLANT ANOTHER BIG MONEY-MAKE

In addition to the Tank Farm, another opport presents itself—the construction of a Casing-head plant. The construction of this Plant is being rushed early finish.

Tests made of the new gas escaping and going waste from The Bradley Company wells indicate th will yield four and one-half gallons high-grade gas for every 1,000 cubic feet of gas. The best showing the Ranger field is one and one-half gallons to the 1 cubic feet of gas. The successful operation of Casing-h gas plants in the oil fields of Oklahoma, Kansas and C fornia shows that an immense source of revenue ca derived that will pay hundreds of per cent. in profi the original investment from the gas that is otherw an entire waste.

It is the present plan to have the BRADLEY C ING-HEAD GASOLINE PLANT in operation early August. This plant should add a daily revenue of f $2,000.00 to $3,000.00 a day.

Arrangements are now being made with M. K. & Railroad to build a siding for the side-tracking of ta cars within a short distance of the BRADLEY 120-a TANK FARM, upon which the Gasoline Plant will erected. Loading racks will be constructed, and w the rapid development of The Bradley Company it i most a surety that a REFINERY will be constructed in t near future.

VALUE OF LEASES INCREASE $2,000,000 IN LAST SIXTY DAY

The valuation of THE BRADLEY COMPANY royalty interests, and assets has increased not less th $2,000,000.00 in the last sixty days. A cash offer $400,000.00 was made for the undivided one-fourth terest in the royalty in Block 74, Burkburnett some ago. Since this offer was made the royalty has been ther enhanced in value by numerous wells coming in, an increasing of the drilling activity. With 57 wells ducing this royalty interest will be figured in millions.

The latest Texas sensation, which is now calling attention of all oil operators, is the Desdemona field, wh the Duke Well originally opened a pool that is rapidly ing extended by the developing of from 5,000 to 10,000 rel gushers. Some of the largest operating companies Texas are now actively drilling in this field. The Br Company has two leases—one of 20 acres, and one of a total of 30 acres, very well located in the trend of new production north and west of the town of Desdem —but a short distance from the big gusher producers, in practically proven territory at this time. The valu these leases has been doubled many times since their inal purchase by the expanding and development in Desdemona Field.

HOLDINGS

In Block 74 Burkburnett, the center of the North Extension, second largest producing block in the en Burkburnett Field, THE BRADLEY COMPANY owns fourth of the entire royalty—57 wells producing, drill or locations made. Ten acres, one well, capacity barrels No. 2 on the sand, No. 3 drilling; 7.16 inte United Oil adjoining lease, United No. 1, 4,000 bar capacity, No. 2 drilling in, No. 3 on the sand; 30 acre Wonder Desdemona field; 65 acres Humble, 20 pro ing wells now operating; 50 acres Ranger; 20 acres Park; 5,260 other valuable oil acres in Eastland, Hamilton and Bell Counties.

Proposed Building with Four Additional Stories; Albert C. Martin, Architect.

FACT AND COMMENT.

Substantial evidence of the fact that the great building movement predicted for Los Angeles as its measure of after-war prosperity will soon be in full swing, is found in the decision of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, the Central Business Properties, Inc., the Los Angeles Railway Company, the Southern California Iron and Steel Company and a host of lesser enterprises to launch immediate building operations—all of them on a major scale and all involving the expenditure of millions of dollars. These operations have been "in the air" for some time, but now they are to become early realities, and through them will flow powerfully stimulated business currents and activities that will act quickly to overcome the feeling in certain quarters that building in large volume must necessarily await the reduction of material costs.

The building plans announced by these progressive companies, which may be accepted as a practical reminder of the supreme confidence that the builders have in the business outlook on the Pacific Coast, supplement those projects already under way by the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company of California and the California Hotel Company—not overlooking private residences, apartment-houses, flats and bungalows and store buildings that are going up in all sections of the city. With these in the local outlook are the new administration building for the University of Southern California, estimated to cost $500,000, the proposed $2,000,000 hotel for Santa Monica, a new suburban club for the Wilshire district, and several new motion-picture studios.

The volume of new building, already contracted for and seriously intended, is indeed impressive. In round figures it exceeds $15,650,000—not a meager showing for a city that, like other American communities, was held back for an exasperating period because of the restraints of war.

Signs of Revival.

It is evident from this brief summary—which does not pretend to touch more than the outstanding features of a situation which is undeniably more promising than we have known here in nearly five years—that high building costs, and they are high enough to satisfy most anybody's ideas of profits, are not proving a serious immediate deterrent to constructive enterprise. Those men who are planning ahead and who are not easily stampeded by surface conditions which do not relate to the country's intrinsic stability, are today obviously giving more thought to this section's actual building needs than they are to the doubtful prospect of lower material and labor costs later on.

This spirit, of course, is infectious—and wherever it is uppermost a dim lamp of progress is not likely to remain long hidden from the outside. While it is generally conceded that Los Angeles will probably not reach the peak of its building activities for at least another year, many builders and realtors say that the example of those who have already put their construction wheels in motion will, within the next few months, be no less than "electrical" on the inertia of those disposed to scent disaster and hang back. They predict that it will be the old story of "the sheep finding their leader." Now that leadership is not lacking, they will want to join the procession. The same thought, they contend, holds good with regard to the buying of property and the opening up of new subdivision fields. We are, as they view the situation, in for a long upward curve.

New Industry.

It was inevitable from the day that the Goodyear enterprise fixed its eyes on Los Angeles as the logical field for a great factory that other large rubber companies would follow. This is merely responding to a law which guides "big business." The field in which one operates successfully is usually inviting to another, the reason being economic—good business, so to speak.

Lately has persisted the report that either one or all of three large rubber manufacturers are investigating Los Angeles as the city with which to ally their industrial plans, and these reports are based on the fact that three companies—the United States Rubber Company, the Goodrich and Firestone—have, through agents, examined sites in the local industrial field. These investigations are expected to take tangible shape before long in the form of definite announcements as to actual plans; and while it is not well to bank too highly on mere report, unsupported by official statements, it is not to be denied that the trend of industrial development in Southern California promises greater things than the present day can foresee.

A Practical Ideal.

F. A. Seiberling, president of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, now engaged in erecting its mammoth Los Angeles plant, has employed Hunt & Burns, local architects, to prepare plans for the development of the 160-acre site at Ascot Park, which is to be transformed into a home and recreation center for the Goodyear employees. In addition to an athletic field, clubhouse, swimming pool and such other appurtenances that will make for the health and contentment of the several thousand Goodyear employees, the scheme contemplates an ample allotment for homes. Eight hundred of these homes will be erected from plans prepared by the local architects, who have also been commissioned as consulting architects on the company's factory buildings.

This home-building plan is a form of practical idealism, as Mr. Seiberling understands that term. It is entirely separated from the company's expectations of profit-making, except as profits accrue from the presence in an industry of contented, self-respecting, home-owning workmen. In the early days of the Goodyear plant at Akron, Mr. Seiberling realized that a serious, if not disastrous blunder would be committed if the home needs of the workers were ignored, and that no such blunder was permitted was entirely due to his own foresight.

These homes are to be constructed and financed by the Goodyear company and then sold to its workmen on the deferred payment plan, the terms being arranged in accordance with a man's ability to pay. They will be sold at cost plus a 6 per cent. charge to cover actual architectural and engineering charges which the company must meet. Only a powerfully financed, ably managed organization could successfully undertake such a plan, although the initiative of the Goodyear Company in this field is likely to encourage other industrial companies to adopt it as a measure of their own protective enterprise. Big employers have come to realize that home-owning workmen make better ones.

NEW BUILDINGS TO FILL OFFICE NEED.

FINE STRUCTURE PLANNED FOR RAILWAY CO. AND CENTRAL PROPERTIES, INC.

Construction of new office buildings by the Central Business Properties, Inc., at the southwest corner of Sixth and Olive streets, announcement of which was made recently in The Times, and the Los Angeles Railway Company will, it was pointed out yesterday by real estate men, afford office accommodations which this city has for some time been in urgent need.

The railway company's building to be erected at the northeast corner of Broadway and Eleventh street will be a Class "A" reinforced concrete structure, with a frontage of 176 feet on Broadway and 65 feet on Eleventh street. It will be the largest and most imposing structure in that vicinity, with an interior finish of white oak and an exterior of glazed tile, to cost $400,000.

The construction will start, according to President W. E. Dunn, as soon as the city completes the opening of South Broadway from Tenth street to Pico. The Los Angeles Railway Company and the Huntington Land and Improvement Company, now in the Pacific Electric Building, will occupy the upper four or five floors of the new building, and the lower floors will be rented to tenants.

"The Los Angeles Railway Company," said President Dunn, "has felt the need for many months of having its own building, our present quarters being overcrowded. But on account of the war and the suspension of building operations we decided to defer our plans until a more favorable time. We feel that the time is now ripe to go ahead."

To arrange for its proposed building, the Central Business Properties, Inc., has taken a ninty-nine-year lease on the Rosana Forthman property at the southwest corner of Sixth and Olive streets, 58x80 feet, the property adjoining this with a frontage of fifty-five feet on Olive, and has purchased from C. J. Fox and Mrs. Ben Truman 110 feet adjoining on Sixth street, according to President Lee A. Phillips, who was represented in the transaction by Metcalf and Ryan. This gives the company a building site 223x130 feet. It will soon be improved with a Class "A" office building from plans prepared by W. J. Dodd, architect, and William Richards, engineer.

NEW DEPARTMENT.

The J. B. Althouse Company has opened an exchange department in connection with its general real estate business, under the management of H. G. Hildebrandt.

DELTA LANDS SELL TO LOCAL BUYERS.

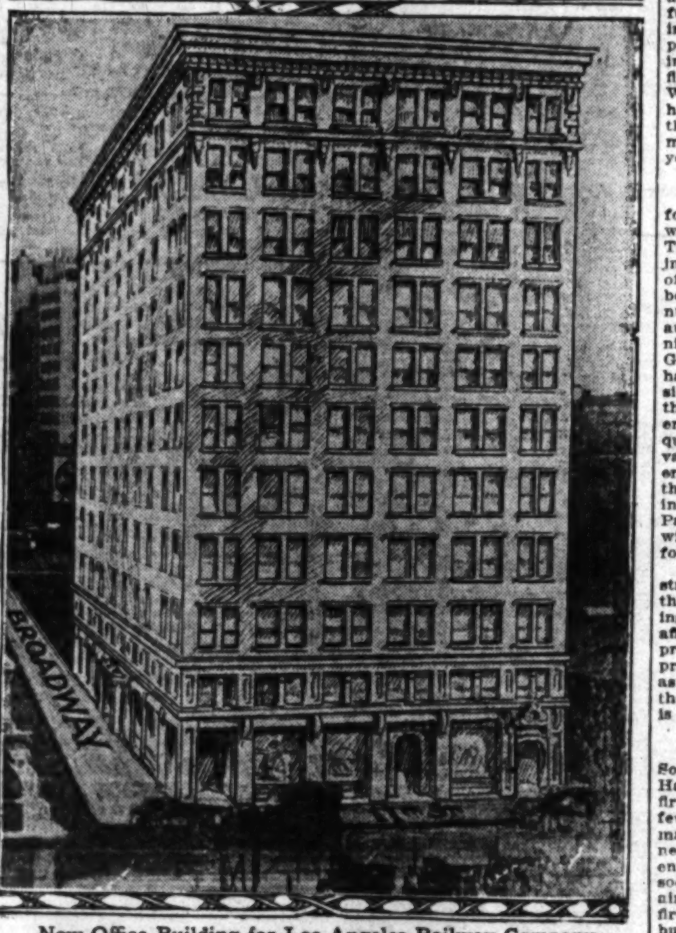
COMPANY'S POLICY IS TO DISPOSE OF PROPERTY TO AMERICAN OWNERS.

Arthur C. Parson, sales manager for the California Delta Farms, Inc., reports the sales of $2,490,662 worth of the company's farm lands in the fertile delta section of the San Joaquin Valley near Stockton since the disposition of the land began three months ago. The original tract contained 40,000 acres, practically all of which has been under cultivation in general crops. Much of the land has been under lease to Japanese, though the company's new policy is to dispose of the land to white farmers in tracts of from 80 acres up.

Lee A. Phillips, president and organizer of the California Delta Farms, Inc., one of the largest general agricultural organizations in the country, said yesterday that the tendency of the times was toward placing the ownership of California lands in the hands of American farmers, and that the company would adhere to that policy.

"The sale of these big delta tracts," said Mr. Phillips, "foreshadows greater agricultural development and production in California than we have ever known. We have frequently been asked why we are disposing of land which has been so profitable to the company. Simply because we believe that tracts so large should be in many active hands rather than a few. We took over these lands, reclaimed them when nobody else would touch them, proved that they are immensely productive, and now we are willing to let others try their hand."

William Lacy, head of the Lacy Manufacturing Co., has just purchased 600 acres from the company.



New Office Building for Los Angeles Railway Company, At Broadway and Eleventh street.

FOUR GREAT BUILDINGS FOR BUSINESS DISTRICT.

New Projects by Pacific Mutual, Hamburger's, Los Angeles Railway and Central Properties, Inc.

Formal plans for the erection of four new buildings in the business section of Los Angeles to cost approximately $5,000,000 were announced yesterday. One of these structures is for the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company, on the property adjoining that company's present building and extending to the corner of Sixth street and Grand avenue. According to President George I. Cochran, it will cost $2,500,000, and will be among the finest office buildings on the Pacific Coast. Another is for the Central Business Properties, Inc., of which Lee A. Phillips is president, at the southwest corner of Sixth and Olive streets. It is estimated that this will cost approximately $1,500,000.

The third of these projects will be the addition of four stories to the present department store of A. Hamburger and Sons, at the corner of Eighth street and Broadway. This addition will give that store a ten-story building comparable with the finest department stores in the West. The fourth structure is a new office building to be erected by the Los Angeles Railway Company at the northeast corner of Broadway and Eleventh street. It will cost $400,000.

NOTABLE BUILDINGS.

All four structures will be of brick and reinforced concrete construction, class A, of modern design, and will make notable additions to the city's business skyline. They are to be built to accommodate the growing business needs of the respective companies, and because the heads of these enterprises feel, they say, that the time for construction work on a large scale has arrived. Plans for both the Pacific Mutual company's building and that for the Central Business Properties, Inc., were prepared by W. J. Dodd, architect, and William Richards, engineer. Albert C. Martin, who designed and supervised the construction of the Hamburger building, has prepared plans for the four-story addition, while the engineering department of the Los Angeles Railway Company designed the structure for that corporation.

The transfer of property for the Pacific Mutual and the Central Business Properties, Inc., was handled through Metcalf & Ryan, while R. A. Rowan & Co., and Robert Marsh & Co. handled the property transfers connected with the opening of upper Broadway, including the site for the new Los Angeles Railway Company's building. Six properties are included in the Pacific Mutual building plans. They represent a total purchase price of $600,000. The sellers were Alice Henderson, Dr. E. W. Minney, Mrs. Gittie Finch, J. S. Atterbury, Edith R. Chambers and the Mercantile Fire-Proof Building Company.

BIG PLANS AHEAD.

In explaining the scope of the Pacific Mutual company's plans, President Cochran said:

"The management of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Company has for some time realized that the company would have to have very much greater office space for the accommodation of its business. Four years ago we enlarged our building. It was, therefore, determined that any plans for the future must be made with a view to caring for continued expansion and that a building sufficient in size should be provided to care for the needs of the company for all time to come, using such space in the proposed new building as may be required and arranging the leases of space so that they may be terminated from time to time to meet any additional requirements of the company itself.

"To this end the company has acquired all the frontage on Sixth street between Grand avenue and Olive street, with a frontage of 240 feet on Grand and Olive. We propose to erect on the westerly 218 feet of the Sixth-street frontage, with a depth of 170 feet on Grand avenue, a thoroughly first-class, full-height, steel-frame office building, and propose to connect the present building with the new building up to and including the sixth floor. Architect W. J. Dodd and William Richards, engineer, will have charge of the construction of the building, and work will be commenced about October 1 of this year.

FOR THE PUBLIC.

"The building will be built in the form of a letter 'H', and all offices will be outside offices of liberal size. The private parkway seventy feet in width, as now exists to the north of the Pacific Mutual Building, will be extended through to Grand avenue, making a parking space for automobiles seventy feet wide running through from Olive street to Grand avenue. The building will have a finished facade on four sides, and it will be the purpose of the company to afford every modern convenience to those occupying quarters in the building. Six elevators will accommodate the general public, and two elevators in the easterly portion of the building will be for the exclusive use of Pacific Mutual employees. There will be about 350 offices available for tenants.

"The city is now widening Sixth street five feet on either side, and the Pacific Mutual will set its building back an additional five feet to afford additional sidewalk. The present parking to the west of the present building will be maintained as a garden. The estimated cost of the building we propose to construct is $2,500,000."

FIRM IS GROWING.

The decision of A. Hamburger & Sons, to build, is, according to D. A. Hamburger, the direct result of the firm's great expansion in the past few years and the realization of the management that more space was needed to provide for department enlargements and welfare plans associated with the store's progressive aims. It is the intention of the firm, Mr. Hamburger says, to start building operations as soon as steel and other materials can be arranged for. Meantime several important pre-building arrangements will be made in the store. The dry goods, linens, linings and cotton goods departments will be moved on August 20 to the south side of the main Broadway entrance, the ladies' and children's shoes will be placed on the second floor, as will also the ladies' knit garments. This will confine all the dry goods departments to the Broadway front of the store.

The development of the Hamburger store from a small enterprise into a business of great proportions illustrates the remarkable expansion of Los Angeles within a comparatively few years. In October, 1881, the firm of A. Hamburger & Sons started business on Main street near Requina in a storeroom 20x40 feet, which contained less than $10,000 worth of merchandise. Later the business was enlarged to include a basement, and then it became imperative to obtain larger quarters. Failing to find a Main-street store, the firm arranged with Mrs. Caroline Bumiller to build the Bumiller Block on Spring street, between Temple and Franklin streets.

THEN LARGEST STORE.

It was in 1884 that the firm opened in their new building, a store 46x100 feet, then the largest in the city, dealing in retail merchandise. Later Lewis Phillips purchased the old County Jail property adjoining the Bumiller Block and constructed the Phillips Block, 120x100 feet. Hamburger's took the adjacent sixty feet frontage and later, outgrowing their floor space, occupied the basement, ground floor and three upper floors of the Phillips Building. Some time later Mr. Phillips constructed a building for them on property leased from the Ponet estate on the north side of New High street, which gave them a frontage of 186 feet.

In view of the development of South Broadway and the shifting of the city's retail district, the firm decided upon its precent site at the southwest corner of Eighth and Broadway as the location best suited to its growing needs. In August, 1908, the move was made to the new building which has a frontage of 295 feet on Broadway, 320 feet on Eighth street and 174 feet on Hill street.

IMPORTANT CHANGES.

The improvements contemplated will result in numerous important changes in the Hamburger store. On Hill and Eighth streets, running along Hill street 150 feet and on Eighth street the same distance, will be located the new men's and boys' clothing, furnishings, hat and shoe departments. This department will have the largest ground floor area of any similar store in this city, according to Mr. Hamburger.

It is proposed to remove the present roof from the building and raise it four stories. In this space will be placed new departments. The tenth floor will be given over to departments for the care, comfort and education of employees. There will be a spacious hall suitable for dancing and dramatic entertainments. There will also be a cafe for employees where they may obtain food at actual cost, a hospital with a physician and trained nurses in attendance, reclining and reading rooms, a dentist who will care for the teeth of employees, gymnasium and baths for men employees, a department for the development of science and art, and a lawyer to give legal counsel to employees.

For years the Hamburger store has been interested in welfare and recreational plans for employees. Every Tuesday evening they enjoy a dance and entertainment on the roof of the big White Store. These affairs will be continued in larger quarters on the tenth floor of the new building.

DAILY THE OPPORTUNITY FOR A REAL ADVANTAGEOUS PURCHASE OF A HOME BECOMES MORE EXCEPTIONAL. THE PRICE OF LUMBER, LABOR AND MATERIALS CONTINUES TO MOUNT. THE EARLY WINTER INFLUX AND RETURN FROM SUMMER PLACES WILL MAKE INTELLIGENT SELECTION A BURDEN BY SEPTEMBER. WE, THEREFORE, URGE THE ADVISABILITY OF BUYING NOW. EACH OF THE PROPERTIES LISTED BELOW REPRESENTS MORE THAN THE PRICE ASKED AND EACH FROM ANY STANDPOINT IS AN EXCEPTIONAL BARGAIN.

THIS BEAUTIFUL HOME IN THE WILSHIRE DISTRICT IS WORTHY OF YOUR SERIOUS CONSIDERATION. THE CONSTRUCTION IS BEYOND COMPARISON. THE LOCATION IS ALL THAT COULD BE DESIRED.

In the selection of a HOME one naturally desires every point carefully considered, from some other angle than that of profit to the builder; hence we offer this establishment as one practically flawless to the most discriminating and exacting. It combines all the individual features that one expects to find in a house commanding such consideration. The various hardwoods used throughout are exquisitely finished, the fixtures are hand wrought and of distinctive design. The main rooms are spacious in size and balanced in elegance. The bathrooms are Pompeiian in their luxuriousness, and the entire result is a striking illustration of what indifference to construction expense and artistic judgment can accomplish. Its appeal to the practical mind will be in such facts as location value, positively the finest; the one or two vacant parcels in this vicinity being held at $10,000 each; again, the fact that heavy cable is worked throughout the cement foundation to insure permanency; also all walls being finished with noncrackable treatment; the roof is of tui tiling. These and innumerable additional features make this a property quite out of the ordinary and distinctly one of the better sort.

The arrangement of the sleeping quarters is very exceptional. This property will have a distinctive appeal to people who are accustomed to and demand an atmosphere of individuality and refinement. Shown by appointment only.

The lot is 50x160, nicely improved; good garage. A pleasure to show this. Phone for appointment.

$3000.

And now we are down tot he price we used to sell 'em at. A 4-room house, with large garage, built on the inside of a corner lot. The unimproved corner is 50x100 and would sell at a good price. This is a splendid opportunity for the home seeker with limited means. Have a look at it, anyway. We will be glad to show you.

Would you enjoy a mountain home for your holiday and week-end vacation as I do a beach home?

If you would, here is your golden opportunity to secure the supreme location in all of Laurel Canyon, affording one unobstructed view of all Los Angeles, including the beaches, with a four-room completely furnished home, for $1100, and the best of all is you can drive to it in your car.

Let us show you how to beat the renting proposition. You are paying your landlord $40 per month and in 8 years you will have invested in his house $3840, which is a good thing for HIM. Now today you can buy a 6-room home with 3 bedrooms on a large lot in a neighborhood of refined homes in beautiful West Hollywood for $3650, where property is increasing in value every day, pay as first payment $500 and the same rent money of $40 per month for 6½ years and you will have invested the same amount in a HOME ABSOLUTELY YOUR OWN and not only that you can if you desire sell at any time and realize a nice profit on the natural increase in value.

For your own benefit do not delay or neglect to take advantage of this home opportunity

OIL SHORTAGE IS INCREASING—

No better investment can be made now than test holes in new territory. The country needs all the oil you can find, and you have a safe and sure market.

But don't resort to old-fashioned methods of drilling, with large and expensive machinery; never forget the cost of a hole increases in the approximate proportion to the "square of its diameter."

So drill smaller diameter holes with the latest and most efficient portable machines ever built for territories from 800 to 2500 feet deep. Write us for particulars and circular.

WE ARE BACK AGAIN AT THE OLD STAND after a vacation, and are able to submit some very attractive propositions that have come into our office during the holiday. Our two weeks' of vacation gave us just a taste of what it must be like to live in this beautiful country without something to do. Where is the man or woman that cannot enjoy the beauties of nature many, many times more, knowing that he or she has a good business to return to? To those who are not so fortunately situated, let us suggest that they come in and see us. We know one thing certain, they will not regret having a talk with us, and will find us able and willing to make suggestions very helpful to them in a business way. It makes no difference who you are, or what business you have been in, or what position you have held, or how much money you have. We certainly can be of assistance to you if you want to locate here in business. We are happy and prosperous. Let us help you to become the same.

In writing me, state age, farming experience, from whom you have rented, amount of live-stock, implements you own and financial condition, size and age of family. As these farms are different sizes, state about how many acres under irrigation you can handle. Also state when your services will be available. If unable to find someone with this amount who can act for themselves, will talk to ten with $200 each, or twenty with $100 each. I need action. "BROWSING-ROOM" DONATED STANFORD.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Aug. 2.—Appreciation of the long service of Timothy Hopkins, prominent railroad man and philanthropist, for Stanford University is to be perpetuated by the establishment of a "browsing-room" in the new $700,000 library that was completed here last week.

Hopkins is the only surviving member of the original board of trustees that was appointed by Senator Leland Stanford in 1885. He served as president of the board from 1908-1914, and has ably discharged the trust placed in him by Stanford's founders. His residence is in Menlo Park, Cal.

The "browsing-room" is intended to offer pure entertainment to students and other members of the college community who want to dip into good books without any thought of themes, note-taking, or class work. It is spacious and well lighted and is comfortably furnished with settees and chairs of leather and quarter-sawed oak.

The room contained 1000 volumes when it was opened today, each bearing the label "Timothy Hopkins's Room." The shelves of the "browsing-room" will contain 3000 volumes and the capacity number will be rapidly installed. All selections for the room are based on their value as "good books" of varied interest. Novels, dramas, poetry, books of adventure and travel are included.

Since Stanford University was founded, Timothy Hopkins has been one of the most generous donors to the library. He has also shown marked interest in other departments of the university, and has also endowed the Hopkins Marine Station near Pacific Grove, the Stanford laboratory for the study of sea life which is named in his honor.

ALL RIGHT, SAYS HERRM EXCHANGE OF PLAYERS

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CINCINNATI, Aug. 1.—Commenting on the exchange of players in which the New York Nationals retained title to the two players despite the minor league rule against taking major league players on options, Chairman Herrmann said:

"I am inclined to think that the New York club was perfectly within its rights when they made the deal. They had some of the players out on optional agreements with minor league clubs, but so have the Reds. The committee of the minor leagues when in conference with the majors ruled that no optional agreements should be made with the minors but as long as the club owners are willing to take this responsibility on their shoulders no one has any kick coming."

PRIZES AWARDED AT BIG KENNEL SHOW.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SANTA BARBARA, Aug. 2.—The trophy for the best wire-haired fox terrier was awarded to Vimy Ridge, entered by H. M. Robertson of Pasadena. This dog is just over from Canada, where he beat everything. Sabine Sentence, owned by Irving C. Akerman of San Francisco, also received trophy for best opposite sex. This breed produced some of smartest little dogs of show.

F. L. Babcock of San Francisco won first honors in bull terrier competition with his entry Flying Snow. White Heather shown by Charles H. Christie ran the winner close second. Toll Bar Jack, owned by Joseph Ryans of Los Angeles, carried off trophy for best bull dog.

Cup for best opposite sex went to White Princess, belonging to Mrs. W. H. Taylor of Santa Anita. Mr. and Mrs. B. W. Thompson of Los Angeles registered the principal wins in contests for French bull dogs.

SPORTING FANS FAVOR TENNIS.

Racket Game Gives Everybody Chance to Play.

All-Year-Round Climate Admits Continuous Practice.

Many Tournaments for Parks and Playgrounds.

BY WOODHUGH B. LEAVITT.

Like no other sport in all Southern California, tennis is taking a hold of the young men and women, and also the older folks, too, and it is being proved every day in the multitude of matches and tournaments scheduled for every week-end.

Many entries were had in the Southern California championship play, just brought to a successful ending yesterday. Despite all of the practice and excitement gotten by the entrants, many are playing right along in other tournaments. A tennis enthusiast never gets enough of the sport, and in Los Angeles he can be forever playing the game.

REQUIREMENTS.

It is not required that you be an expert in order to get a great deal of sport and pleasure, as well as health and exercise from the racket game. All that is needed is simply time and an inclination to get out of doors, and enough pep to keep at the game. To become a tennis player of more than mediocre ability one must keep practicing forever and a day, and then there is no guarantee you will develop into a marvel. In all events you can produce a healthy exhileration and eventually from a frail creature of indoor life you can become a tanned, active personage.

PLENTY OF CHANCES.

Even though you do work in an office all week, an all-wise Congress has fixed it so that you can get sufficient daylight to play for an hour or two each evening. Buy yourself a racket for from $2 to as much as you want, and get out on a court. The tennis courts of the city are legion, all of the worthwhile parks have several, the Y.M.C.A. has them out in the wilds of Boyle Heights, and soon there will be ten or a dozen in active operation at the newly-planned Tennis Club. Membership in that organization may be obtained at the minimum price of $25, insuring a fine place to practice within a fifteen minutes' ride from the center of town.

To illustrate the chances for tennis play take the case of the newly-formed Inter-park Tennis League. It was formed just recently, under the managerial blue eyes of Frank Smith, a snappy young tennis promoter, located at present with the Tufts-Lyon Arms Company. Each of the parks and playgrounds of the city have teams, different members being selected from time to time from the many tennis exponents forever knocking the balls around the courts.

A tournament was started at the Echo Park playgrounds about a month ago, and today will see the last of it. Men's singles and doubles, as well as women's singles and doubles, were played. Today mixed doubles will be played for the last round of play. Two good tennis players, Bob Allen and Allen Hardeman, ran away with the men's doubles, and gained possession of a silver cup trophy apiece, donated by the Tufts-Lyon Company. As soon as the Echo Park tournament is through the various park teams will engage in dual combats, until one of the teams is triumphant over the rest of them.

PLAY SCHEDULED.

Next Sunday, for an opener, the Exposition Park team, captained by Frank Smith, will take on the Echo Park team, Bob Fisher being the head of that team. Smith promises to make a good showing against his rivals, putting up a team composed of Clarence Venz, "Red" O'Mara, Russell Turner, C. S. Kirchmaier, Ed (Shorty) Silke, and Frank Smith. With this team it is proposed to beat the entire bunch. What the others have to say, remains to be seen.

With such plans being forwarded right along, anyone at all who wishes to get in and play tennis may affiliate with some team or other in this great and wonderful tennis city. Get out the old racket, restring it, or buy a new one, and a half-dozen balls, and a pair of rubber heeled shoes, of one kind or another and step out and see what you will surely get out of the game. It's a great game and is hard to beat for excitement, excercise and real heartrending joy.

MARIE CURTIS IS FIRST IN SWIM.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

DETROIT (Mich.) Aug. 2.—One new world's record and two new State marks were set up in the Central A. A. U. and Michigan State championship outdoors swimming meet today by Marie Curtis, Detroit. She lowered the 50-yard backstroke record held, by Dorothy Burns, of Los Angeles, from 41 1-5s. to 38 2-5s. and also took the State title in the 100-yard and 50-yard free style evtnts with new State marks of 1m. 18 2-5s. and 32 2-5s. respectively.

In the C. A. A. U. events Perry McGillivray, Illinois A. C., handily won the championship in the 220-yard and 50-yard free style over his teammates, D. L. Jones and A. S. Seingel. His time was 2m. 37s. and 24s. respectively.

SONS OF "IDLE RICH" TAKE UP HARVESTING.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—To prove that the sons of the "idle rich" can also do real work, four sons of wealthy Evanston families—Robert Birkin, William J. Chapman, Austin Pickard and Guhl Davis—today left their automobiles, valets and social engagements.

To Palm Beach? Hot Springs? French Lick? Nay, to Grand Forks, N. D. Polo-Tennis? No. Harvest work. The boys took only enough money to get them to the harvest fields.

"We're going to show critics that the rich are not always 'idle rich,'" one of the boys told a reporter before they left. "We're going after the hardest work we can find."

LOST HIS DOG; RINGS FIRE BELL.

[LOCAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDONDO BEACH, Aug. 2.—One anxious dog owner plus an enthusiastic telephone girl brought out the fire department and several of the police force today when the big bell in the fire tower was tolled lustily about 9 o'clock this morning.

According to reports received when the excitement subsided and the residents had returned to their homes after vainly searching the skyline for smoke, everything went peacefully until the bell above the City Hall began to send out an S.O.S. encore. It rang too slow for fire and too fast for a police call, so to make sure both departments answered only to find that a resident up the Strand had lost one Collie dog called "Cupid."

TO HALT HOTEL SALE BY HOLDER OF NOTE.

QUESTION OF CLAIM BEING SECURED—MORATORIUM ACT WAS INVOKED.

Seeking to halt an impending sale of the Hotel Balboa on West Seventh street, together with other property, all valued at over $135,000, suit was filed yesterday by Frank P. Flint against Mrs. Madeline F. Wills, Peter F. Carter, Louise E. M. Brainerd, excutrix of the estate of Edward R. Brainerd, Jr., and others concerned in the sale. Mr. Brainerd, Jr., recently died while in the United States service.

The complaint sets forth that Mrs. Brainerd gave Mrs. Wills a note for $124,000 in March, 1917, the note being secured by a trust deed to the hotel property. The hotel at the time, it is alleged, was subject to various mortgages. In 1918, it is alleged, the note was declared in default by Mrs. Wills, who asked that the property be sold. On the ground that Mr. Brainerd, Jr., who held an interest in the property, was in the military service and protected by the Moratorium Act, suit was filed to prevent the sale. A second suit followed, in which Mrs. Wills claimed that her note was not subject to the trust deed, but was unsecured. The note, it was said, was later assigned to Mr. Carter, who, it was said, was planning to start a sale after the death of Mr. Brainerd, Jr.

Mr. Flint asks that the trust deed be cancelled and the sale enjoined, alleging that Mrs. Wills claimed in her first suit that her note was unsecured and is so bound.

TO DEVELOP RANCH.

La Habra Property Acquired by Hart to be Subdivided.

Edwin G. Hart reports the purchase from W. J. Hole of Ranch La Habre, a tract of 4,000 acres twenty miles from Los Angeles. The property will be subdivided and handled through La Habra Heights Company, of which the officers are Edwin G. Hart, president and general manager; and Percy M. Allen, secretary.

The company intends, Mr. Hart says, to install a water system, a water right having been purchased from the Whittier Water Company. He says that the property will not be offered in subdivided form except in wholesale parcels for another thirty days. Surveying and construction crews are now putting the property in order. Mr. Hart, who says the high character of the land makes it particularly desirable for avocados, lemons, citron and products requiring a warm winter climate, reports the land deal as involving approximately $450,000.

W. TILDEN IS A TENNIS WONDER

Astounds Gallery at Seabright with Great Shots.

He and Richards of New York Take the Doubles.

Play Most Brilliant Ever Seen on the Courts.

BY FRED HAWTHORNE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

SEABRIGHT (N. J.) Aug. 2.—William T. Tilden, II, of Philadelphia, and Vincent Richards of New York, his 16-year-old partner, the present national doubles champions, won the first legs on the twin Seabright doubles challenge cup this afternoon by defeating Walter Merrill Hall and Leonard Beekman of New York by a score of 6-3, 6-4, 6-4 in the final round of the Seabright Lawn Tennis and Cricket Club's annual invitation tournament.

Never since they won the national title at Longwood last August, have Tilden and Richards played so brilliantly as a team as they did this afternoon. Tilden overshone them all from the first point to the last. His work was literally amazing at times and the gallery was continually gasping in surprise as the tall Philadelphian kept driving off shots that, with all propriety, should not be humanly possible of return.

STIRS GALLERY.

Richards was erratic in the first set but when the second was half finished the tow-headed youth started a session of close volleying that stirred the great gallery to new heights of enthusiasm. The boy grew more certain and deadly in execution as the match progressed and toward the end he proved himself a worthy partner for the sensational Tilden.

Hall was the more effective on his side of the net, being more reliable than Beekman in the crisis, but this is not to say that the latter was the weak link in the chain for his game considering the kind of opposition he was up against, was very good.

A POACHER.

Tilden was guilty of poaching on his partner's territory many times, but he was almost invariably making the winning shots when he did encroach and who shall find fault with a man who takes chances, daring chances and wins.

One of the remarkable features about Tilden's playing was the unusually small total of errors he made in the three sets. When we consider that he was continually going after the most difficult placement shots, Richards's balls as well as his own, it is almost unbelieveable that his total of errors was twenty-four, made up of seventeen outs and seven nets.

GREAT RECORD.

On the credit side of the sheet the Philadelphian has a total of twenty-three placement aces and five aces of service. The other players could not compare very closely with this record, Richards having a total of seventeen placement aces, Beekman fifteen and Hall eight, and the errors figured up considerably more than those of Tilden.

Before the players went out on the court it was expected that Hall and Beekman, because of their great victory over Alexander and Voshell, in the semifinal round on Thursday, would at least take one set from the national champions today. But Tilden and Richards were going at such a fast clip that Hall and his partner were never able to even start what might have proved a winning rally, for the champions were right on their toes from the start.

First set:
Tilden and Richards	4 1 4 5 4 4 6 0 4—32	6
Beekman and Hall	0 4 0 7 1 2 4 4 2—24	3
Second set:
Tilden and Richards	2 6 2 4 0 5 0 8 4 4—35	6
Beekman and Hall	4 4 4 2 4 3 4 6 2 0—33	4
Third set:
Tilden and Richards	5 4 8 5 1 5 7—35	6
Beekman and Hall	3 2 6 3 4 3 5—26	4

BIG RIFLE MATCHES TOMORROW.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

CALDWELL (N. J.) Aug. 2.—Col. G. Sevier, General Staff, drove over to the Caldwell, New Jersey, Navy rifle range not long ago, to complete the arrangements with Col. Harllee for the biggest exhibition of war material this country has ever seen, August 4 to 30. When this is installed, it will be worth the trip across the country, even though there were no matches scheduled.

Seven hundred feet of railway siding at Mountain View, the nearest railway line, will be crowded with the giant railway mount guns, with their attendant cars, repair shops, ammunition stores, etc., with other material too heavy to be moved off the rails. Seven buildings 100 feet long, being rushed to completion at the range, will house the smaller and perishable portion of the great government display.

The open space near the buildings, which are near the thousand-yard firing point, will be crowded with the big guns of the west front, from the little 37 mm. anti-machine gun cannon which is carried forward by its crew, and is said to shoot like a Springfield, clear up to the giant 240 mm. howitzers. The French 75, the 155 mm. which ran second to the 75 in point of numbers on the front, the 8-inch howitzer, and the 240 mm. will be part of this collection.

SEND RIFLES.

The Ordance Department is sending down from the very complete museum at the Springfield Armory the collection of military rifles from the fuses of the days of the Revolution to the latest experiment in the self-loading rifle of the present day, and the rifleman will have the opportunity to trace out the development that led to his pet brown 1903 Springfield model.

In addition to this will be the exhibit of rifles of different nations, captured German and Austrian arms, odd ammunition such as the tracer, incendiary, armor piercer and spotlight bullets, with the various stages of their manufacture, and most everything pertaining to the subject of small arms that has developed in the war.

They will show the Stokes and other trench mortars, the shells with the charge of powder in the shotgun case attached to the Stokes rifle grenades with their tromblons. By direction of Lieut.-Col. Whelen, sample groups made at 1000 yards from machine rest will be exhibited, photographed actual size.

TO SHOW FILMS.

The other army departments, the Engineers, the Signal Corps, the Medical Corps and the Quartermaster will all exhibit the latest devices for war, much of which was confidential and was not discussed in print during hostilities. For one item the engineers will put on more than 5000 feet of movie film showing the work of the engineers in the field.

Four tanks are being sent to Caldwell, two of the large type, presumably Mark 8, and two of the Renault or Baby type, and these will put on daily exhibitions of their climbing abilities, and will fire their guns while traveling. Across the road, the aviation exhibit will show their interesting machinery and do stunts.

There will be actual firing of the Stokes mortars and rifle grenades and demonstrations of the work of the sniper school from Camp Benning. Several million pounds of ammunition is piled up near the aviation camp, so the aviation gentlemen evidently intend to demonstrate aerial machine gun work.

TO BE FIRST.

This is the first, and doubtless the largest exhibition of war material this country will ever see, as it costs from ten to thirty thousand dollars merely to gather it together and transport it, and with the limit of these figures, much had to be left out.

There will be little spare time to hang heavily on the rifleman's hands at the Caldwell range, between the evening entertainments by the various bands stationed at the camp, visiting bands and orchestras, movies, vaudeville, community singing, and the chance to roam through this great war display in the seven navy buildings being rushed to completion. The match of 1919 will be the match of matches, and it is doubtful if ever so great a show—or as crude a rifle range—will be seen again in this country. Once more the courage, and the imagination and the energy of Col. Harllee have won in spite of the doubt of most of those associated with him, who realized the size of the task.

GIVE FLEET BOYS SPORTS PROGRAM.

De Witt Van Court, chairman of the Fleet Entertainment Committee announced yesterday a grand sports entertainment for the boys of the fleet, some 40,000 in number, on the three days of August 10, 11 and 12, at Exposition Park.

On Sunday a big luncheon for the sailors will be given them by the volunteer ladies of the Y.M.C.A. and the ladies of the Knights of Columbus, over by the swimming pool. Directly afterwards the moving picture cowboys of all the studios will put on a grand rodeo and stunt programme.

Monday and Tuesday twelve big boxing events will be staged in front of the band stand. Six of the fighters will be local boys and six will be from the fleet. Refereeing the bouts will be such well-known former pugilists as Jim Jeffries, Kid McCoy, Billy Papke, Abe Atell, Jack Root, Joe Rivers and Ad Wolgast.

A moving picture stunt event will then be run off including Fatty Arbuckle, Charley Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Dustin Farnum and several others. It is planned to make the three days one of the biggest successes ever seen.

HOLLYWOOD CONCERT FOR MEMORIAL PARK.

WILL BROACH BONDING PLAN FOR PROPERTY—MEMBERSHIP DRIVE RIVALRY.

Gregory's Band in concert is to be one of the big drawing cards at a free entertainment tomorrow night at the bandstand near the Women's Club House in Hollywood, the entertainment being provided by the Hollywood Memorial Park and Playground Association for the purpose of creating greater interest in the Hollywood park and playground plan. Among other entertaining features will be moving pictures of the big parks, big trees, and other scenic mountain views. These particular pictures have so far been shown at but few places before going East to advertise the wonders of the Golden State.

Announcement of Hollywood's definite park plans will be made at the meeting. A campaign is being arranged to secure a membership of 1000 for the association which, by a majority of votes, will fix upon one plan of several, to be submitted to carry the bonds for the approved park scheme, as that plan for financing it is generally accepted, the issue to be forty-year bonds and the obligation of the property within this territory without constituting a direct lien upon particular places, such as would obtain were it financed by special assessment plan.

The Membership Committee, of which Judge Harlan G. Palmer is chairman, is comprised of Messrs. George L. Eastman, George H. Schneider and A. H. Palmer. The drive begins tomorrow and one feature is the contest between a division of women "majored" by Mrs. Rollin B. Lane, and one of the men with George L. Eastman, major, and loving cups are to be awarded to teams and to individual workers securing most memberships.

WIDOW GIVES MITE AS SON'S MEMORIAL.

WOMAN WHO GOT FIRST GOLD STAR FLAG WANTS FLEET WELL WELCOMED.

One of the real heart-throbs in the campaign being waged here to raise money for the entertainment of the Pacific fleet was felt yesterday at the headquarters for the drive.

It occurred when Mrs. May Crane, the first woman in Los Angeles to lose her son in navy action in foreign seas after the United States became involved in the war, appeared to make a contribution.

Explaining that she could not give much, the little mother, who was robbed of her only living relative in the death of the son, sought W. D. Woolwine and H. H. Cotton, head of the Finance Committee to make her offering.

"It is given as a memorial for my boy," Mrs. Crane said. "He would have been so happy if he could have been here today, ready to welcome the fleet—or perhaps even being one of its members. I give this little contribution in his name."

The son, Daniel Crane, was killed in the disaster of the Chauncey in foreign waters on November 19, 1917.

He was barely 19 when he enlisted. Following his death Mrs. Crane was presented with the first gold service flag made in Los Angeles.

Mrs. Crane at present is a member of the Patriotic Mothers of Sons in Service and has devoted herself to army and navy boys since her son's death. She will be one of the foremost women of Los Angeles to be on hand to "mother" the men of the visiting fleet.

TWO MILLION POUNDS OF FOODSTUFFS SPOIL.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Two million pounds of foodstuffs shipped to Chicago in 1918 were spoiled and had to be condemned and destroyed because of delay on railroads or improper handling by the producer, shipper, commission men or retailers, according to Health Commissioner Robertson.

It included 612,068 pounds of meat, 63,233 pounds of poultry, 148,969 pounds of fish, 85,000 pounds of fruit, 240,556 pounds of vegetables, 102,272 pounds of canned figs, 369,912 pounds of canned fruit, 527,943 pounds of canned vegetables and 19,572 pounds of eggs.

Dr. Robertson believes this enormous and unnecessary waste of food is an important factor in the high cost of living.

LILLIAN T. IS FIRST IN STAKE.

Finishes in Front of a Big Field in 2:03 Pace.

Leo Carries Off Honors in Trot, Taking Three Heats.

Tommy Direct Successful in Exciting Battle.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

COLUMBUS (O.) Aug. 2.—It took thirteen heats in the final day's card of the mid-summer Grand Circuit meeting to decide the three-race programme, the 2:03 pace alone being finished per schedule when Lillian T. paced ahead of a big field of fast performers in every mile.

The 2:16-trot was won by Leo, with Alacer B, the challenger. She won the second heat in a close finish, Leo taking the other three. Anna Maloney was distanced the first mile.

The 2:14-trot, was a long drawn affair, Tommy Direct winning after a six-heat battle. When Luana slipped through and beat Ramco the second mile, one of the longest prices of the meeting was paid. A $5 ticket to win was worth $361 as only two were out. Luana also paid $91.75 to place this heat.

Un was first choice to win the 2:03 pace. He was in poor form, however, and at the end of the second heat was drawn on account of lameness. Lillian T., in winning the first heat in 2:02¾, paced the second fastest mile of the meeting and lowered her own record of several years' standing a half second. Peter Nash won second money and Baron Chan, third.

KATYDIDS TOO MUCH FOR CHICAGO POLICE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 2. — Two South Chicago policemen this morning ran into a situation a little worse than race riots, so they say. Trouble started in the Commercial - avenue subway, where several street car passengers were "reported bitten." Telephone calls poured into police headquarters.

A "sound of many waters" greeted the ears of Policemen Collins and McCormick, sent to investigate. Walls of the subway were covered with green, voracious, stinging things, which bit them on the nose and ears.

"Send the fire department down," they telephoned. "We can't do a thing. It's katydids. There's a million of them here."

Battalion Chief Driscoll sent the hosemen down to dislodge the swarming insects.

Where did they come from? Firemen, policemen, passengers chimed in, "We wish we knew."

GIVES DETAILS OF FARM BRUTALITIES.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CAMP DEVENS (Mass.) Aug. 2.—Additional details regarding "Hard-Boiled" Smith and Farm No. 2 in Paris, as well as at St. Anne's, Paris, and Military Prison No. 1, at Gievres, and the story of how Smith treated prisoners at St. Sulpice, were covered in detail by extracts from the diary of Private Joseph P. Burns of Chicago, featuring today's testimony given by returned prisoners before an investigating commission here. Private Burns kept a full diary in secret. This he smuggled back to this country by means of men who were leaving for home and when he is released he will be able to make a complete report of what he saw.

Far more than yesterday's stories of flogging, gagging with soap, while forced to stand torture until insensible or driven to suicide were today's facts as taken from Burns's notes. The witness repeated numerous cases of beatings, bayoneting always followed by the drawing of the naked and shackled body over cinder beds.

FRENCH PREPARE TO GUARD BRIDGEHEAD.

[BY CABLE AND ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

COBLENZ, July 31.—French troops who are to take over the bridgehead area on the east bank of the Rhine held by the First Division are making preparations to occupy the semi-circular zone as soon as it is vacated by the Americans.

The American forces which are to remain on the Rhine include the Eighth Infantry, headquarters troops, a Medical Corps, a hospital unit, a company of military police, a company of engineers, a battalion of the Sixth Artillery, a salvage company and several smaller detachments.

Gen. Pershing is expected in Coblenz Friday on his last inspection of the Rhine area before returning to the United States.

It is reported that Marshal Foch also is expected in Coblenz shortly.

Recommendations to be made by Marshal Foch and Gen. Pershing probably will form the basis upon which the supreme council will make the allotment of territory to remain in command of the Americans in Germany as long as they are on the Rhine.

COPPER

The increased demand for copper metal has resulted in a steady advance in the price of this commodity. It is now reported that the heavy foreign and domestic requirement has resulted in a rapid decrease in the large stores of copper on hand at the signing of the armistice. The clarifying of the copper situation apparently places copper securities in an attractive position. We have prepared an interesting analysis of the copper situation which will be sent free upon request.

DAILY TRADE TALK.

Review of Week; Citizens' Trust Invades Wilshire; Bank Mergers.

BY CHAPIN HALL.

The week was the most remarkable one in the history of Los Angeles when considered from a seasonal standpoint, and compared with average conditions in business, trade and finance as they have formerly existed during the dog days.

It was notable for the establishment of new records in volume transactions; for liberal financing an active market, sharp upward trend to building operations, heavy retail trading, great bank clearings and the undercurrent of confidence which pervades every branch of trade.

The only element of unrest injected into the situation came, as it has come in the past, from the excessive high level upon which food and commodity prices are based and from the growing conviction that there is profiteering afoot.

The public is much encouraged at the promise of early action and probable relief at the hands of Congress, and as soon as there is a reasonable probability of a declining average, the reaction resulting from such probability will prove a tremendous stimulation to almost every line of business.

Price Movement.

During the week there was an advance in the retail price of butter of an average of 3 cents per pound and in eggs of from 3 to 5 cents per dozen. Fruits and vegetables and some cuts of meat showed slight declines, and some staple groceries gave evidence of weakness and the possibility of price shaving, although there was little actual accomplishment during the week along this line.

Some of the retail dealers view with ill concealed anxiety the purchase by the city of several carloads of bacon, sugar and other supplies which will be offered to the public this week at cost plus handling charge. Retailers who have been charging and getting 75 cents per pound for bacon do not enthuse over the coming sale of this commodity around 40 cents—perhaps even less than that.

The best that can be said about the price situation is that it has grown no worse during the week, except in the instances mentioned, and there is a good probability that a somewhat lower level will soon be, if not attained, at least brought nearer.

The threatened radical increase in the cost of shoes will be given the early attention of Federal investigators, and it may be that such corrective measures will be undertaken that the wearing of leather foot covering will still be possible. There are continued threats of advancing clothing prices, and higher levels on other commodities, but none of these have materialized and some of them may be averted if the profiteer hunters are successful.

The labor situation is well in hand, and except in sporadic instances, there is no trouble. Labor is fully employed, but wage scales are still tending upward to meet the existent living conditions. Several large local concerns have recently made liberal horizontal increases and others are in contemplation.

With the Bankers.

The month ended with the establishment of an absolutely unique record in bank clearings, the best previous month having been overtopped by more than $30,000,000. Although considered the quietest business calendar division in the year August is starting out like another record-breaker, the clearings yesterday totalling $9,224,898.78 a gain of more than $4,000,000 over the corresponding day a year ago. This condition is caused by the large volume of business being handled on a cash basis at high prices, and heavy transactions in stocks, bonds, other investments and in real estate.

The banking situation in this city is one of unusual interest at the present time. The increase in business since the first of the year has been so remarkable that many of the financial institutions are feeling the necessity for speedily expanding their resources to meet the requirements.

Branch Banks.

In this consideration they are turning more and more to the development of branch banks and there is a very well defined movement under way through which a number of new branches will be in operation within a few weeks. There is a feeling among local bankers that the day of centralization is approaching, and that instead of a

PRODUCE MARKET IS WHIRL OF ACTIVITY.

FARMERS FLOOD THE FLOOR, BUT PRICES HOLD AND MAKE ADVANCE.

The local produce market was a whirl of activity yesterday, and all lines of commodities moved readily on an advancing market. The market opened under pressure of the wholesalers, but prices steadied considerably after the farmers sold most of their offerings. The farmers, as usual, were out in numbers and flooded the floor of the exchange with all varieties of fruits and vegetables. This created a selling pressure, and prices on most all stock moved rapidly at a very low level. During the latter part of the session prices made good advances, despite the poor quality of a large percentage of the arrivals.

Cantaloupes continued to feature, owing to the heavy arrivals and the poor quality of the offerings. There was a good demand at the opening, but in view of the heavy arrivals from local producing sections prices made sharp declines at the close. There was a large quantity of left-over stock placed on the floor by wholesalers, but in view of the new stock this was passed up and had to be sold to the peddlers.

Watermelons were also in poor condition, but prices held up and the majority of the transactions were made at from 1¼ to 2 cents per pound. Large lots of holdovers were in evidence throughout the whole session, and retail dealers favored this stock during the early part of the call, but nearing the close there was a large quantity of good offerings placed on the floor and the old stock had to be passed to the peddlers.

The peach arrivals were quite heavy, and there was a good demand for this stock at the present price of from 4 to 6 cents per pound, although much of the offerings was in very poor condition.

There were a few apricots in evidence, but they were snapped up quickly by the local shippers before the retail dealers knew they had been placed on the floor. This stock moved as high as $3.50 per 30-pound lug box.

Pears were also in good demand, despite the fact that most of the stock was in poor shape and in some cases unfit for consumption. Dealers predict a sharp advance in the pear market this month, as the arrivals are falling off swiftly.

Plums were also in good demand, but there were very few transactions made, as there was very little good stock placed on the floor, the shippers having bought most of it at the producing points.

The vegetable market was less active, as is usual on Saturday morning, and prices made fractional advances owing to the scarcity. Potatoes featured the list and made a sharp advance at the opening and registered another during the last hour's trading. Most of the arrivals were from Stockton and were in excellent shape, and were in good demand throughout the whole session.

Other fruits and vegetables were in good demand and closed steady.

BOTTOM DROPS OUT OF COTTON BULL MARKET

LABOR UNREST AND HIGH LIVING COSTS ARE THE CHIEF INFLUENCES.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—An overnight view of conditions evidently impressed cotton traders that outside considerations, such as the labor unrest and the government action against high living costs were more important than yesterday's very bullish crop report, for buying orders at the opening of the cotton market were notably scarce in contrast to the thousands of bales wanted at the maximum limits last night.

First prices were only 5@15 points net higher and after selling at 35.50 for October and 35.35 for December a violent reaction occurred which carried the list down almost 100 points on October to 34.52 cents, while December dropped to 34.78 cents, or a decline of 67 points from the early high level. The decline was marked by heavy selling for southern account, Liverpool selling and local pressure from traders who had bought cotton only at big advance.

Except for occasional small rallies the market continued heavy throughout the balance of the forenoon, making new low prices with October off to 34.27 cents and December to 34.50 cents, closing at the bottom and 58 to 70 points under the previous night.

AMERICAN BANKERS TO RELIEVE EUROPE.

FRANCE AND BELGIUM RECEIVE HELP AND GERMANY ALSO IS TO GET AID.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

NEW YORK, Aug. 2.—Call money at 15 to 20 per cent., mainly as a result of heavy August loan withdrawals and the injection of new domestic elements, contributed to this week's irregular stock market.

There were numerous neutralizing developments, notably the quarterly financial statement of the United States Steel Corporation, which fully met general expectations, and continuance of the broad inquiry for coppers.

Interrupted only by the money flurry, pools resumed their activities in some of the higher-priced specialties, particularly tobacco, leather and paper shares, other so-called peace industrials trailing in their wake.

Most of the leading railway systems reported substantial gains in net income for June but trading in transportations was again limited to the cheaper issues traversing western and southwestern oil and agricultural sections.

In the foreign exchange market sterling retained the better part of its recent recovery, but the Paris rate again moved in favor of this center.

As indicated by the Morgan purchase of $50,000,000 French treasury bills, the plans of American bankers to rehabilitate the impoverished European countries are gradually assuming definite proportions.

It is understood that a large credit to Belgium is in progress of consummation and international bankers freely confess that they are receptive of overtures from the new German republic for financial assistance.

GENERAL BEARISHNESS DEPRESSES ALL GRAIN.

AGITATION AGAINST HIGH COST OF FOODS BIG FACTOR IN DECLINE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—General bearishness, with an indisposition on the part of most traders to liquidate their long holdings of grains and provisions, owing to the agitation against the high cost of foods and the efforts to lower prices, had depressing influence on values. It checked new buying and material declines were made. The only support came from profit-taking by shorts, which made a rally, but September closed with a net loss of 4¼ cents after a break of 8¼ cents. December lost 1⅜ cents and May 2⅛ cents. Oats lost 1⅜ cents to 2⅜ cents, September leading.

A breaking of the drought in the corn belt was largely responsible for the decline in corn and closing trades, as compared with a week ago, caused losses of 10¼@11¼ cents. The entire grain and provision list declined in sympathy with corn and on general liquidation, oats losing 5¼@6⅝ cents.

A wave of liquidation swept over the corn market early and found support very limited. Prices dropped 8¼@8½ cents to a new low on the present movement, showing 17@19⅝ cents under the high of Tuesday, December leading.

Country longs generally went out of their holdings on the way down with September showing the most weakness. The most effective buying was against weekly bids and by shorts. At no time were values as high as the previous day's close and the undertone at the last was easy, final trades being within 1½ cents of the bottom on December at $1.54⅝, while September was $1.85@1.85½.

As a result of the bad break during the week export demand developed and there were fair sales made here during the day, although quantities were not given. It is the first export business in corn for some time.

SECURITY OF PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST
and
ATTRACTIVE INTEREST RETURN

A real guarantee of security of principal and interest is found in the control of all utilities by the Railroad Commission. This body not only regulates all rates, but must sanction before issuance all stocks and bonds. Such sanction is only granted after a most thorough investigation by Commission experts. Expenditure of every dollar so obtained must be accounted for.

Good interest return is guaranteed by a 10-year record of uninterrupted dividends and the proven conservative management of the Company. This latter is evidenced by the fact that in this 10-year period more than 70% of net earnings, or in excess of $34,000,000, have been reinvested in the property.

These all-important features of an investment, together with high marketability, are to be found in the Pacific Gas & Electric Company First Preferred 6% Cumulative Stock.

SIX AND THREE QUARTERS PER CENT. (6¾%) is the return on this stock at $89 per share.

TAX EXEMPT IN CALIFORNIA—NORMAL FEDERAL INCOME TAX PAID BY COMPANY

The bonds are secured by a first mortgage on 10,023.65 acres of land situated in Fresno County, about 30 miles west of Fresno, the county seat. The town of San Joaquin, through which passes the Southern Pacific Railway, is situated in about the center of the property. This land has been appraised by John C. Moore, who appraises for the Federal Farm Land Bank of Berkeley, the West Coast Life Insurance Company of San Francisco, and other large institutions, as having a value of $1,607,625. This appraisal represents a value of approximately $160.00 per acre, whereas in the event the entire authorized issue of $600,000 was outstanding, the debt would be less than $60 an acre, subject to the tax lien of Reclamation District No. 1606.

Sale contracts aggregating $186,142.75 have been, and additional sale contracts being completed approximating $90,000, will be deposited with the Trustee for the benefit of the bondholders. The townsite of San Joaquin is included in the security offered. The town has stores, hotel, bank building, lumber yards, Standard Oil storage station and a Southern Pacific depot and residences. Attention is called to the fact that this is an operative enterprise, not entirely dependent on land sales for payment of the mortgage. However, the property is being subdivided, and more than 1000 acres have already been sold under contracts. The sale contract provides that the purchaser must live on the property, which insures the continuous improvement of the property and advancing values.

In the event of property sales the Trust Deed provides that 60% of the present appraised value of such property shall be deposited with the Trustee, until the sum of $250,000 is paid into the sinking fund, or an equivalent amount of these bonds is surrendered for cancellation, and 55% thereafter. This operation immediately increases the property equity over the balance of the mortgage remaining.

The topography of the land is level in its general contour, sloping two feet to the mile in a northwesterly direction. After a careful examination of the soil, all of which consists of dark sediment with a high percentage of organic matter, the appraiser states that the property has a very large earning power, due to its adaptability for the growing of high value crops, such as alfalfa, wheat, barley, corn, beans, vegetables and deciduous fruits, etc. It is particularly adaptable to dairying. The appraiser further states that the soil is very similar to the exceptionally fertile soils of the Delta region.

The engineering firm of Quinton, Code & Hill, of Los Angeles, California, following an exhaustive investigation, declare the source of water supply sufficient, and with the improvements which are now being made, the irrigation facilities will be adequate.

INVEST

Invest:—To employ for some profitable use; convert into some other form of wealth, usually of a more or less permanent nature as in the purchase of property or in loans secured by mortgage, etc. —Century Dictionary.

After you have accumulated money by saving, it is profitable to invest it wisely in order that you may receive a maximum income. In this connection, however, let us caution you not to confuse speculating with investing—the former is hazardous, the latter is usually safe.

When you buy our GUARANTEED FIRST MORTGAGE CERTIFICATES, you are not speculating. You are rather investing in a safe, sure and prime security that does not fluctuate in value and returns to you the highest amount of income (consistent with safety) that the world knows anything about.

Our literature explains more in detail the advantages of buying GUARANTEED MORTGAGE CERTIFICATES. Why not get a copy and post yourself.

Bonds and the High Cost of Living

FIVE years ago a few thousand dollars invested in bonds provided a modest living for the investor. Today, with prices of everything doubled, the same income from bonds spells genteel poverty. With the purchasing power of the dollar practically cut in half, the investor must look for a higher return on his principal—always, of course, considering SAFETY first.

This requirement is met in our offering of $200,000

First Mortgage Convertible
7%
Serial Gold Bonds of the Liberty Long Staple Cotton Co.

Note, first, that the guaranteed interest is 7%. Second, that a bonus of 20% Common Stock is given free to every bond purchaser. A dividend of 6% on the common stock is a practical certainty. This equals a return of 8 2-10% on the investment. Get full information on this without delay.

FINANCIAL AND TRADE REVIEW.

multiplicity of small and indifferently strong banks the Canadian system offers larger opportunities; i.e., a few very strong parent institutions operating branches wherever geographically or financially desirable.

Security-Guaranty Merger?

The most interesting banking news that has been made public in a long time was the rumored merger, reported exclusively in The Times, of the Security Trust and Savings Bank and the Guaranty Trust and Savings Bank. For reasons which will at once be apparent, the heads of these two great institutions declined to confirm the rumor. It is an Herculean task to harmonize and reduce to a common divisor interests as great as are involved in a deal of this magnitude, and no one knows better than a banker that the slip betwixt cup and lip is always to be considered. Just the same keep your I told you so sign handy.

If this merger should be brought about it would mean the establishment of one of the strongest financial institutions in the West with total resources approximating $90,000,000, and with a branch bank programme of no mean proportions. Naturally enough in the consideration of such a merger questions of leadership and executive division of authority are to be considered, but it is the opinion of bankers whose interests do not lie with either of the interested concerns that many of these have already been ironed out, and that if the rumor should turn out to be well founded, the present head of the Security Trust and Savings Bank and the Security National Bank, Mr. Joseph F. Sartori, is very likely to be the one to sit at the head of the director's table.

Speaking of branch banks, another bit of exclusive information was printed in The Times during the week to the effect that the Security Trust and Savings Bank is about to establish a branch in the heart of the retail district on West Seventh street. By special request of the parties at interest the exact location was withheld pending the completion of final details. The new bank, however, which will be perfectly equipped and contain many especial features with particular reference to the comfort of the women customers is to occupy the Lee Phillips Building on the northwest corner of Seventh street and Grand avenue. The reported price paid for the site is $545,000 and forms the first step in the extension plan embraced by the Security's recent increase of capital stock. The approval of the State banking superintendent has already been secured, and the work of remodeling the building which is at present occupied by an automobile agency will go forward as soon as possible.

Citizens' Wilshire Branch.

Ground was broken at 8:30 yesterday morning for another branch bank; the first, by the way, to invade the sacred Wilshire precincts. The building which is to be an attractive story and a half concrete structure with tile facing, located on the west side of Western avenue, between Second and Third streets, will be occupied by the first branch of the Citizens' Trust and Savings Bank, and the turning of the initial spadeful of dirt by President Monnette marked a decided step forward in the new banking policy which, in the opinion of many, will revolutionize local conditions within the next five years. The new bank will have a frontage of eighty-five feet on Western avenue and the contractor promises its completion within seventy-five days. The Citizens' Trust and Savings Bank came into existence in May, 1911, when it took over the old Broadway Bank and Trust Company. Its deposits then were less than $2,000,000. Now they are more than $7,500,000. The bank, which is owned by the Citizens' National is planning to make early application for membership in the Federal reserve system, and it is the intention to establish several other branch banks, real estate negotiations now being under way for desirable locations.

Building Impetus.

The feature of the week on the local stock exchange, at least the feature which held the greatest interest for the public at large, was the strength and steady advancement of Los Angeles Investment. This is largely due to the improved building conditions. Construction is reviving in response to an almost unparalleled demand for new dwellings and buildings of various kinds, an expansion that is almost sure to continue in view of the shortage of housing facilities and the high rentals being charged and paid. A recent canvass conducted under government auspices showed that business men, economists, and industrial experts were practically unanimous in expressing the belief that no violent drop in prices is to be expected, and that existing needs could be best met by making necessary purchases around the present price level. No less an authority than the Manufacturers' Record says, in a recent issue:

"With a full appreciation of the responsibility of advising people in the question of investing money in building operations, we have no hesitation in saying that anyone who contemplates building work of any kind, whether it be dwellings or stores or hotels or factories or highways, within the next few years need not expect to secure any lower cost than at present, though there may be occasional temporary fluctuations in price."

The Goodyear building operations; the proposed Class A office building at Sixth and Olive; several theater projects; the California Hotel; the proposed building of a $1,500,000 plant for the California Iron and Steel Company, the extension of the highway system; the building of several thousand dwelling houses and important construction work at the University of Southern California are only a few of the items which tend to bear out the determination of builders to proceed with their plans.

Pacific Cotton Mills.

The offering tomorrow by a local syndicate of the $2,000,000 7 per cent. cumulative stock issue of the Pacific Cotton Mills Company will be an interesting achievement, the successful accomplishment of which is already a foregone conclusion. This is a subsidiary company of the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company and the dividends, until such time as the cotton mills are producing, are guaranteed by the parent company. A heavy oversubscription is anticipated. The stock will be called on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange early in the week.

The Stock Market.

The fact that the New York exchange was closed yesterday may have had some effect upon the local market which, with a few notable exceptions, was comparatively inactive. The chief exception was the flurry in Richmond Copper, a stock which has been showing progressive strength for several days. It opened yesterday at 37½ cents but almost immediately became involved in a maze of buying orders and commenced to advance steadily until at the close 43 cents was the ruling price with indications that if the adjournment hour had not interfered it would have gone considerably higher than that. The activity was occasioned by the reported news from the mine, which is a Northern Idaho property, and the only copper stock quoted on the local exchange, that a rich vein of 30 per cent. ore had been encountered on the new 500-foot level. Just what the discovery will amount to, is of course, problematical, but in any event it was sufficient to account for a very lively trading movement, about 25,000 shares going under the hammer during the hour to which the Saturday market is limited. So far as volume is concerned Richmond ran a close race with Big Jim Consolidated, an Oatman stock which has been a heavy trader all the week, with downward tendencies. Yesterday it opened at 12 1-4 cents and on a turnover of 27,000 shares advanced to a close of 13 cents bid at 13 1-4. Other mining issues were quiescent with little price change.

Union Oil was stronger and although the trading was in small blocks the price advanced from an opening of $158 to a strong close at $159.50. United Oil was fairly active within a price range from 67 1-4 to 66 3-4 cents.

Industrials were comparatively inactive. Los Angeles Investment having gone through a profit taking movement sold back to 94 cents for 600 shares. Delta Farms was at $60.37½; Goodyear, preferred, $101.50; Union Sugar, $48.50; California Packing, common, $72.50. Bonds were steady and volume light.

A reorganization movement is under way in the Adams Mining Company by which it is proposed to make the stock assessable and to raise funds for development work.

July business on the Los Angeles Stock Exchange involved trading in 1,583,065 shares valued at $4,676,990.21. Oils provided the leaders, 774,160 shares; value $3,118,509.62. Mining stocks were next in volume with 714,018 shares but representing only $247,701.38 while industrial listings moved 90,525 shares and attained a monetary valuation of $486,136.41. Bonds, in a class by themselves were active throughout the month, 4202 shares appearing in the summary; value $781,017.80. The remaining business was in bank stock, 160 shares valued at $43,625 being traded in.

INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITY

A high-class, well established California commercial concern, with a large and rapidly increasing business throughout the entire State, doing the largest business of its kind on the Pacific Coast with headquarters in Los Angeles and a large branch in San Francisco, has authorized me to offer for subscription the unsold portion of 1000 shares of its capital stock at

$100 a Share or Par in Lots of $500 Upward

No objection to one party taking the unsold portion of $100,000.00.

The company is now earning approximately 17% net, of which 7% will be set aside for the payment of regular semi-annual dividends.

The management is in the hands of men of unquestioned integrity, who thoroughly understand their business, and while conservative are progressive and energetic.

The officers of the company court the most rigid investigation on the part of anyone seeking a clean, safe 7% investment, with excellent possibilities of an increase in value.

This stock has my recommendation for investment.

GLASS SEES NO DEBT INCREASE.

Secretary's Revenue Estimate is $6,500,000,000.

Note Issue to Await Favorable Market Condition.

Public Debt Next June Figured at $26,516,506,160.

[BY A STAFF CORRESPONDENT.]

WASHINGTON, July 27.—Carter Glass, Secretary of the Treasury, in a letter to the banks and trust companies of the United States, states that he anticipates that the revenues of the government in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1920, will amount to at least $6,500,000,000, and that he has no reason to believe that the expenditures of the government will exceed that amount.

The Secretary points out that this means no net increase in the public debt for the year, beyond the amount of the deferred installments of the Victory Liberty Loan, and that the programme for the next five months, which, of course, include the period of the heaviest expenditures during the fiscal year, 1920, contemplates a net increase in the amount of certificates of indebtedness outstanding not exceeding $500,000,000.

It is evident, the Secretary argues, that the inference drawn by some newspapers that an early issue of notes is a certainty, was erroneous.

The Treasury does not regard it as necessary to issue notes until market conditions are favorable for such issue upon terms advantageous to the government.

RELIES ON CERTIFICATES.

The Secretary says that the Treasury expects to be able to meet its further temporary requirements by the sale of treasury certificates of indebtedness, bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. or less, and also to fund as many of these as it may be desirable to fund by the issue of short-term notes, at moderate amounts, at convenient intervals, when market conditions are favorable, and upon terms advantageous to the government.

Secretary Glass at the outset of his letter to the banking institutions lists the anticipated revenue for the coming fiscal year as follows:

Internal revenue	$4,940,000,000
Customs	200,000,000
Sale of public lands	3,000,000
Miscellaneous	300,000,000
Total ordinary receipts	5,503,000,000
Victory Liberty Loan installments	1,032,000,000
Total	$6,535,000,000

"In the absence of a budget system or of any treasury control of governmental expenditure," the Secretary, "it is even more difficult to foretell the expenditures than the receipts of the government. Current expenditures, which reached the maximum of $2,060,000,000 in December, 1918, fell in June to $809,000,000, and, after deducting the amount of the certificates of indebtedness of the director-general of railroads paid during the present month of July, should show a still further decrease in this month.

WON'T EXCEED RECEIPTS.

"Allowing for all the elements of uncertainty above referred to, I have no present reason to believe that the expenditures of the government during the fiscal year 1920, will exceed the amount of its receipts as above indicated, excluding transactions in the principal of the public debt other than the Victory Loan. If these expectations prove to be correct, the gross public debt of the United States, which on June 30, 1919 amounted to $25,484,506,160.05 should be increased during the fiscal year 1920 by not more than the amount of the deferred installments of the Victory Liberty Loan payable in the fiscal year 1920, $1,032,000,000, making a total public debt June 30, 1920, when presumably the whole cost of the war will have been financed, of $26,516,506,160.05.

"The realization of these sanguine expectations is contingent upon the practice of most rigid economy by the government and the continuance of ample revenues from taxation.

"The heaviest period of expenditure during the current fiscal year will probably fall in the summer months of July, August, and September, because of the heavy disbursements of the Railroad Administration heretofore held back for lack of an appropriation, the heavy payments in settlement of army contracts and on account of demobilization, and the maturities of certificates issued in anticipation of the Victory Loan. The amount of certificates outstanding in anticipation of the Victory Liberty Loan at any one time (excluding certificates redeemed, tax certificates, etc.) which, on May 5 had reached the peak at $5,797,296,500, had up to July 22 been reduced by $4,402,519,000, leaving outstanding $1,394,777,500. During the next few months, therefore, the actual cash requirements of the treasury cannot be expected to show a heavy further decrease, and on the other hand, the proceeds of the deferred installments of the income and profits taxes for the year 1919, and the deferred installments on Victory Loan subscriptions will not have been fully received until nearly the end of the calendar year 1919.

EXPENDITURES DECREASE.

"Three months have passed since the last offering of treasury certificates other than those issued in anticipation of taxes. This interval has been made possible by the rapid decrease in the current expenditures of the government, the very large early payments on the Victory Loan, and the ready sale of tax certificates. Beginning early in June, these have been issued up to July 22 to the aggregate amount of $1,875,437,500, but in amounts less than the income and profits tax receipts due at their respective maturities. Having borrowed as much as it is, in the treasury's judgment, proper to borrow in anticipation of the income and profits tax installments payable September 15 and December 15, and having already sold up to July 22 treasury certificates maturing March 15, 1920, to the amount of about $275,000,000 so that the limit of that issue also would soon be reached, the time has come when the issue of loan certificates should be resumed.

"The treasury has, accordingly, determined to issue loan certificates of five months' maturity, and, with a view to aiding the banking institutions of the country in the distribution of the certificates, will issue the certificates on the first and fifteenth of each month, beginning August 1, 1919, thus making the issue semi-monthly instead of bi-weekly as heretofore, and setting fixed dates in each month on which the issues will open. Treasury certificates which, at the beginning of our participation in the war, had little or no market outside of the banking institutions of the country, have come to be appreciated by a great and steadily increasing class of investors. Banking institutions, on the other hand, which at the outset were loath to sell certificates to their customers fearing loss of deposits, have come increasingly to realize the wisdom and advantage of buying and distributing the certificates. Those incorporated banks and trust companies (numbering some 9500) which have availed themselves of the privilege, open to all, of becoming depositaries of the proceeds of the certificates purchased, have found ample compensation in the resulting deposits.

CITRUS REVIEW.

The cleaning up of accumulations of Valencias on track in the various markets throughout the country has been followed by increasing activity in the demand. Prices in auction markets are generally higher than a week ago, especially in sizes 150s to 324s. Sizes 90s to 126s show a slightly easier feeling excepting in extra fancy grades.

Private sale markets also show improvement with an upward trend in prices. F.o.b. trade is becoming more active and shippers are booking an unusually large volume of orders for this season of the year. Quotations are on a basis of $4.50 to $4.75 per box f.o.b California, on good stock, desirable sizes.

The height of the shipping season on southern peaches and melons has passed and the trade are again pushing California Valencia sales.

LEMONS.

The market on sound California lemons continues in good shape but fruit showing decay meets with slow sale at low prices. Most of the stale stock on track has been cleaned up and generally higher prices are looked for during the next thirty days.

F.o.b. California quotations are on a basis of $5 to $6 per box on best grades.

Foreign lemons are selling at low prices. A sale of Maiori lemons in New York on Thursday showed a range of $1.75 to $6.25, averaging $3.70 per box.

L. Holton, the former paying a cash difference of $50,000. J. A. Burke and Harry R. de Venney were associated in the deal with Mr. Gardner.

A Very Favorable Situation

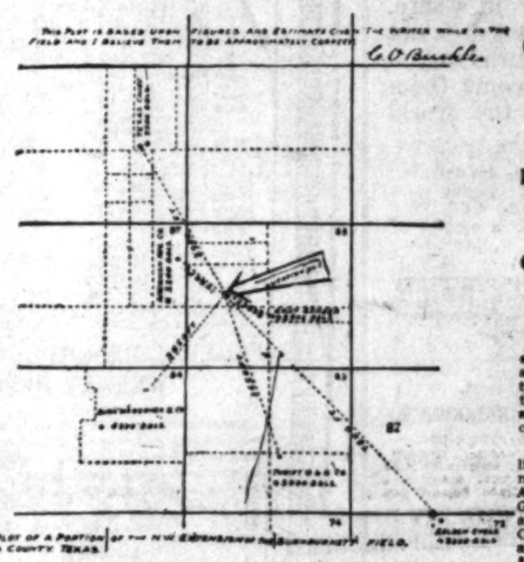
During the course of the next few days there will no doubt be some very interesting and possibly exciting news regarding a part of the new development of the Continental Oil & Refining Company, which is nearing completion.

We quote herewith telegraphic advice just received about Continental Oil & Refining Company, which reads in part as follows:

> "Would advise your pushing Continental offering strenuously, since price changes no doubt will occur upon coming-in of Burkburnett well, which is expected some time this week. Report on Stone lease Well No. 11 will be forwarded immediately on coming-in. Technical position Continental in our opinion improving daily."

We cannot over-emphasize the fact that this daily improvement, or development, will ultimately mean a great deal to Continental Stockholders. It must be taken into consideration that the company is already earning nearly $1,000,000 a year, based upon their present production, which is over 90% on the stock now outstanding. The bringing-in of additional wells and the benefit to be derived therefrom at this time needs no further comment.

In order to make more plain the present situation in Continental we display the following sketch, showing the location of their No. 1 well now drilling in the Burkburnett Field, Block 8, Texas, their approximate distance from other producing wells, several newspaper clippings, commenting on the surrounding wells in this vicinity and particularly about the Gray Gander Well, which happens to be about 900 feet distant from the Continental well.



WICHITA FALLS TIMES, JUNE 12.

GRAY GANDER HAS FLOW ESTIMATED AT 2,500 BARRELS

BLOCK 88 IS NOW MUCH IN THE LIMELIGHT RESULT OF DEVELOPMENT.

Quite a Number of New Locations Have Been Made in the Northwest Pool.

A flow estimated at 2,500 barrels was started in the Gray Gander well on Wednesday, according to reports from the contractor on the job, who was in town Wednesday night, the blow being started with mud and water still in the hole. Cleaning out will be accomplished today, it is stated.

This well first brought block 88 into the limelight, and still more interesting developments are indicated by the present activity. Acreage located about 600 feet away from the Gray Gander well sold the first of the week at the rate of $15,000 an acre, Fred L. McCoy and associates selling two and a half acres to J. E. Hare of Lexington, Ky., for $37,500. High prices prevail generally.

The Willo-Bloom well, reported from some sources last week as preparing to complete, is now nearing the sand depth according to authentic information. This location is north of the Gray Gander. The Burk 88, east of the Gray Gander, is drilling below 1,600 feet. Adams Brown, et al., No. 1, Elsea, block 8, is drilling below 600 feet and the Northwest Oil and Gas Co., No. 1, Elsea, is drilling below 500 feet. Smith, Mulligan, et al., No. 1, Elsea, same block, is drilling past 1,600 feet. A. C. Parker, No. 1, Elsea, is drilling around 1,400 feet, and Siegel and Martin, No. 1, Elsea, is 500 feet down.

In this block Cline, Clark, et al., have up rigs for the Nos. 1 and 2, and the Southwestern Petroleum Co. has up the derrick for its No. 1. Gray Gander, No. 2, Elsea, is a derrick.

WICHITA FALLS TIMES, JUNE 12.

ONE ACRE IN 88 SELLS FOR $20,000; SOME BIG DEALS

Several big acreage deals were reported in this block yesterday, the details of which, however, are not available at this time. One hundred and forty thousand dollars was paid for a block of 22 acres, and other deals totalling around $200,000 are also reported as practically closed. Acreage, in small blocks, is now selling from $7,000 up to $10,000 an acre, it is stated.

One acre, in the southeast corner of block 88, sold this morning for $20,000. Deals involving only one acre generally bring higher prices.

We look for some big things in Continental, and are very much pleased with the way in which our customers have responded to this offering, and take this opportunity to thank them for the confidence they have displayed in us, for it is our opinion that this investment will return a handsome profit in due course.

TWO MILLION DOLLAR MOTOR TRUCK PLANT TO BE BUILT HERE SOON

INE PLANT IS SOON TO GO UP.

Los Angeles County will Have Big Truck Factory.

Local Plant will be Moved to the Burbank Site.

Two Million Dollars is Total to be Expended.

Approximating a total expenditure of $2,000,000 work on the mammoth new factory buildings of the Moreland Motor Truck Company at Burbank, will begin at an early date. Burbank is located twenty miles out on the San Fernando boulevard, just beyond Glendale. It is the extensive plans of the company which will give to Los Angeles county the largest truck manufacturing plant in the West, and will be pushed to the utmost. It is anticipated that the new plant will be ready for occupancy on or before January 1, 1920.

Unit I, namely the foundry, has been in operation at Burbank for over a year. In this building there are already in operation iron and steel furnaces of large capacity as well as bronze, aluminum and brass of smaller size.

Added to this there will be four new and separate edifices, comprised of the administration building; Building II, which will house the machine shop, storeroom and assembly departments; Building III, taking care of the test department, body building and paint department; Building IV, in which will be located the forge shop, riveting, heat-treating and sand-blast departments.

An area of twenty-seven acres will be utilized by the new buildings and factory grounds. Because of the increasing popularity and large demand for Moreland distillate-burning equipment, the above buildings will be devoted exclusively to the production of trucks. Within a very short time another announcement will be made by this company as to its plans for producing and marketing a passenger car and tractor.

In designing the new buildings, Watt L. Moreland, general manager of the company, has spared no expense nor space in construction, his aim being to give to Los Angeles one of the best motor-vehicle manufacturing plants in the country. Special pains have been taken in providing all the possible comforts for the workmen, plenty of room, fresh air and continuous light being the predominant features of the new plant.

The administration building will have a 111-foot front, and will be approximately 100 feet deep. The first floor will be given over to the offices of the executives, and the general offices of the company. With the removal of the general offices to Burbank about the first of the year will come the establishment of a Los Angeles sales and service station for the sale and care of Moreland products in Greater Los Angeles. The location of this is not as yet determined, but it will undoubtedly be in the motor-car section of the city.

On the second floor of the administration building will be located the engineering department, also a large cafeteria, kitchen, club and assembly rooms. This building will be L-shaped, and will be constructed of concrete and brick, thus being absolutely fireproof. All buildings will have automatic sprinkler systems installed.

Buildings 2 and 3 will be 160x300 and 160x210, respectively. The outside walls will be of cement and brick, the roofs being of the sawtooth type, with all-steel sash, thus assuring permanency of construction and continuous light. The windows will be so large that they will practically cover 50 per cent. of the outside walls.

Following out the same efficiency principle, building 4, which will house the forge shop, riveting department, heat-treating and sand-blast departments, will be 80x210. It will be of the monitor type of construction, entirely of steel, and absolutely fireproof.

The new plant will be purely a home product, as all of the material used in the construction thereof, has been purchased here. This is in direct keeping with the Moreland policy—that of patronizing home industry. Every piece of material used in the buildings will be of home manufacture, even the steel being rolled here and the iron ore coming from this State.

Recently Mr. Moreland and Mr. Whatley, purchasing agent for the company, returned from an extensive trip East, the purpose of which was to buy the necessary machinery for the new factory. Equipment for the huge plant will be second to none, while it is more than probable that the majority of the machinery now in use in the local plant will also be utilized.

In order that the employees may have at their command every modern convenience, even in the form of exercise, sufficient ground has been set aside for the installation of a recreation center. There will be tennis courts and other forms of amusement for the workmen, which may be utilized at lunch times, after working hours, Saturdays and Sundays. The factory grounds will be beautified by trees, flowers and lawns.

There will be large locker rooms in each of the buildings, which will also be equipped with shower baths. In the clubrooms it is planned to have entertainments at regular periods, while efforts will also be made to bring the best public speakers and men of note before the men. In other words, the new Moreland factory will be nothing short of a miniature city.

According to present plans, the production of Moreland trucks will be tripled with the completion of the new factory. With the influx of export business from Latin-America, the Orient, Australia and New Zealand, and because of the big demand in the West for Moreland equipment, it has been necessary to produce just three times as many trucks as in the past.

With increased production will consequently come an increase in help. Just three times as many men will be employed in the new plant as are now engaged by this company. This factor augurs well for making Los Angeles, and particularly Southern California, a ranking motor vehicle manufacturing center of the country.

So great has been the success of Moreland trucks, because they are specially constructde for western hauling purposes, it is predicted that within a short time there will be more Morelands seen on the highways of California, and wherever stringent hauling conditions are found, in either desert or mountain districts, than any other two makes of trucks.

The erection of the new Moreland factory is but an initial move on the part of this company, as more extensive plans in the manufacture of motor vehicles have been formulated, which will be made known in the near future.

With the completion of the new buildings, the installation of costly machinery and office furniture, the provision of more and more work for the residents of Los Angeles and other near-by towns, the next year will see the Moreland company in its spacious new home—a motor vehicle factory second to none in the United States, and a veritable home for the employees, with all the comforts and conveniences obtainable in these strictly modern times.

NO TYPHOID UP IN BEAR VALLEY.

AUTOMOBILE CLUB INVESTIGATES AND FINDS THE RUMOR TO BE UNFOUNDED.

That there is no truth in numerous wild rumors being circulated throughout the State to the effect that a typhoid epidemic is raging in the Big Bear Valley country was the official announcement made yesterday by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California after an investigation of the facts.

In denying the report, the automobile club states that it has secured affirmation from the Board of Health of San Bernardino county, and from various visitors to the valley. Thirty or more telephone calls a day for the past ten days to club headquarters and branch offices saying that "so and so" had said that there was typhoid near Big Bear led to the investigation. So far as club officials are able to determine, there is no more healthful spot for a vacation than Southern California's Big Bear region.

REMODELED CARS QUITE VALUABLE.

There's a growing tendency among motorists to treat their cars with more consideration. They are learning that it is good business to keep their cars looking right and running properly. The car shortage too, has impressed them with the importance of keeping the old autos in good running condition.

"Cars are just like any other property," observed George R. Bentel, of the Bentel Shops. "If allowed to deteriorate they lose value. The tumble-down real estate is of small value. Yet someone comes along, buys it cheaply and then remodels it and brings it up to date. And the price shoots upward. Same way with a motor car."

PLAN WONDER BOULEVARD.

Would Build Road from Refugio Pass Clear up to the Matilija.

"Cabrillo boulevard," a road that will carry the motorist into the land enchanted, is being planned by the joint road boosters of Santa Barbara and Ventura counties. It may rival even the famed "Mile-High boulevard" along the "Rim of the World" overlooking San Bernardino valley.

It is proposed to build a motor road from Refugio Pass in this county along the summit of the mountains to the Matilija, developing a stretch of over sixty miles of road which will be unsurpassed for scenic attractions anywhere in the world, and every foot of which will have an added historical interest in connection with the early days of California.

The Refugio is a pass of many marvels, its towering rock castles looking into the sky on either side of the road, and suggesting a corner in Switzerland, while the deep dark canyons lacing into the heart of the mountains suggest untold worlds yet to be explored. On the summit the scenery is bewildering in its very immensity. On the one hand the ranges of mountains can be seen as far as the eye reaches, each catching the tints of the morning or evening and resembling a wonder city of painted castles and walls, plains of purple or gold, while, nearer, the wondrous Santa Ynez Valley spreads before one's view, with its thrifty farms and orchards, and through the broad valley the Santa Ynez winding like a ribbon of silver to the sea.

Ahead, if one is going east or west, there is one seemingly unending line of peaks and valleys, the general view ever changing, and on all sides one is feasted with the evidence of nature's mighty forces which, even still, are slowly mounding the wild scenery into new shapes and forms. There are sections passed between mighty boulders so immense that even a big eight or twelve-cylinder machine looks as nothing in size, but one gets an idea of the mighty forces that have been at work in long ages past preparing this wonderland for the eager and adventurous motorist of this twentieth century.

The ocean view is unparalleled, with its island setting, and its leaping whitecaps during the afternoons when a south wind is astir, and its curving shoreline, where the surf is continually breaking with sparkling white foam, the great sea rocks defying the attacks of the sea, the bays alive with seals, and at times this ocean view is enhanced by passing steamers and ships of war, while the scudding flying machines, traveling along the Coast, are easily seen from any part of the skyline highway.

The descent into Matilija is to be one of the most picturesque parts of the entire boulevard as the contrasting scenery is most remarkable, north and south forks of the Matilija and the Ventura River canyon winding down to the sea creating a series of panoramas nowhere surpassed.

The highway will have a branch road leading into Santa Barbara from both San Marcos Pass, northwest of the city of Santa Barbara, and another lalteral descending from the summit down Rincon Creek to the State highway at Carpinteria, where the trip can be resumed either to Santa Barbara or Los Angeles.

Boulevard committees in both Ventura and Santa Barbara counties have arranged for a general canvass of both counties for subscriptions to the road fund. The Ojai and Ventura road fans are promising large financial aid, and the Chambers of Commerce of both counties, besides the Boards of Supervisors, will help in a substantial way.

Forest Supervisor J. R. Hall offers the services of his rangers to brush out the highway through the reserve, and direct construction, and it is expected that within a very short time an active campaign to see the new motor boulevard through the completion will be launched.

The first plans for the highway were laid just before Europe went war mad, and foreseeing that the United States would be involved, the road boosters pigeon-holed their plans to await the end of the mad carnage overseas. Now that peace looms large the plans will be taken up where dropped and pushed to completion.

In connection with the general scheme is a plan to continue the mountain boulevard from the summit of the range above Rincon Creek or the Matilija through the Cuyama and thence on to San Joaquin Valley. This would give a shorter road into San Joaquin Valley and the Cuyama than any other road now discussed, and at least sixty-five miles nearer than the proposed Cuyama road proposed for the northern part of this county. The road would be practically all on a mountain ridge, easily graded and every foot as level as a floor.

But it is not purposed to build the boulevard in competition with any other proposed highway, but to make it a strictly scenic highway, and boost for all others as well, motorists realizing that such a thing as too many roads from the coast to San Joaquin Valley is an impossibility.

With the completion of the proposed boulevard California motorists will have opened to them a realm where wonders abound at every turn of the wheel, a road free of steep grades, and associated with Gen. Fremont and his daring band. Fremont followed a portion of the proposed road to cross the mountain range and get into Santa Barbara, when the Mexicans laid a trap for his soldiers in Gaviota Pass. Over the same road bands of Indians stole down upon the Santa Barbara mission, and over a portion the good padres fled carrying their treasure, which, it is said, lies buried to this very day among some of the brooding canyons on the northerly side of the range.

The boulevard will overlook San Miguel Island on which the daring Spanish explorer, Cabrillo, was laid to rest in a rocky grave. Cabrillo explored all these islands upon which the boulevard will look down, and though his grave many decades ago was washed into the sea that has claimed a goodly part of the island, it is believed that no more fitting memorial could be erected in his honor than that of the romantic boulevard that meets the sky and follows the course his adventurers probably took when their landing parties were scouting through this beautiful wilderness in the days of old.

WIND WINGS ARE A HIT IN EAST.

Mr. Miller of the M. & M. Manufacturing Company, has just returned from various cities in the North and East, and stated that all his branches and factory representatives who are handling the Simplex windshield wings are doing good business.

Mr. Miller, when in the East, closed a deal with a big Chicago concern for $50,000 worth of Simplex windshield wings.

PERFORMANCE IS VERY CONVINCING.

DEMONSTRATION OF ECONOMY MY NEW DEVICE MAKES THE SALES EASIER.

Mr. G. S. Patterson of the U. & J. Carburetor Sales Company says: "When we opened our sales branch and service station on June 1, the biggest problem which confronted us was the fact that in talking to prospects we found that they had been sold so many inferior articles, which did not substantiate the claims made by salesmen selling them, that they assumed the "Show me" attitude, and some were so skeptical they would not entertain the idea of purchasing until some one else had tried them out. However, the ice is gradually breaking now as we have shown more mileage and better performance.

"We have several Ford cars running on distillate with good success and easy starting, and have shown as high as thirty-two miles per gallon on straight-run tests. One purchaser has driven to San Francisco and back, and claims lots of power on hills and much more economy than with his old carburetor. Several owners have reported to us that they now go through Topango Canyon on high, while they were not able to do so before using the U. & J."

DRINK OF WATER IS EASY TO GET.

NEW DEVICE HOLDS CANTEEN ON THE RUNNING BOARD SO IT CAN BE TIPPED.

The heavy water barrel was a part of the necessary equipment of the prairie schooner of the pioneers, but a canteen of water suffices for the far swifter automobile that the modern traveler does his journeying in over mountains and deserts. It is a decidedly important part of the equipment for a long journey in the eyes of the experienced motorist, however; for delays may happen to the best of cars and a desert sun is just as uncompromisingly hot to a man in an automobile as it was to the man in a prairie schooner.

A new wrinkle in the matter of a carrying device for a canteen has recently appeared on the market, however, and was being displayed last week by the Western Auto Supply Agency at their Grand-avenue headquarters. It permits the canteen to be easily tipped, so that a drink of water may be poured into a cup without the necessity of unstrapping it from the holder, which is screwed tightly to the running board.

GREAT DEMAND FOR SMALL CORD TIRES.

"It is surprising to note," says manager N. Bershon, of the Bershon Tire Company, "that the demand for good cord tires is not confined to the sizes used on the larger and more expensive cars.

"Last week we announced the arrival of a shipment of the new six-ply 30x3½ Victor Cord tires, and we sold out the entire shipment within forty-eight hours. The public has learned that the cheapest is not necessarily the most economical, and that the extra cost of good cord tires, over that of fabric tires, is a paying investment in most cases."

EVENING GOWNS IN MOTOR TRUCK.

MOTION PICTURE ACTORS ARE TAKEN TO LOCATION ON HUSKY FREIGHT CARRIER.

It isn't very often that women in evening gowns are "taxied" around in a five-ton truck, but this unusual incident happened last week at the Lasky studio, where the play, "Everywoman," is being produced under the personal direction of Mr. George H. Melford, assisted by Dick Sheer.

The large cast that this play requires has caused a great deal of inconvenience in waiting for transportation facilities to carry the players to their locations. But Mr. Melford had a happy thought and utilized their big White truck to haul the players to their locations. With this truck used as a bus he was able to load the entire cast for one scene and take them quickly to their location.

INSIDE DOPE ON CLASSY FISHING.

LOCAL TIRE MAN RETURNS WITH FISH AND TELLS HOW TO CATCH THEM.

The information of just where to catch plenty of trout was brought back to Los Angeles last week by L. S. Utter. Not only did he bring back fish "tales," but also their bodies. The exact spot these wily mountain fish can be inveigled onto the hook is Bishop Creek, in Inyo county, which is exactly 310 miles from Los Angeles, by way of the Mint Canyon and Palmdale, through the Mojave Desert, past Owens Lake and on up through the mountains past Big Pine and into Bishop and from there into the valley.

Although Mr. Uutter and his party started early in the day, he suggested starting late in the afternoon and driving all night so as to avoid the terrible heat of the desert. His car was equipped with Miller Geared-to-the-road tires which helped him negotiate the worst roads without losing traction.

FORD STOCK TAKES JUMP.

Canadian Concern Sees a Wild Advance Coming.

Stockholders Think Hennery is to Buy Them Out.

All the Latest Gossip and the Automobile News.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

DETROIT (Mich.) Aug. 2.—Automobile and financial circles are agog over the sensational advance the past week of the stock of the Ford Motor Car Company of Canada. Last Monday the stock advanced 100 points within an hour, during which the wildest scene ever enacted in the Detroit exchange took place. The stock climbed daily until it reached 600 and then followed a decline until the close of the week, when it remained comparatively firm around 474 to 480.

One of the reasons advanced is that Henry Ford interests have been buying with a view to obtaining control. Before the recent advance had taken on momentum they were credited with holding about 30 per cent. of the stock. With the purchase of upwards of 6000 shares of the stock in the Ford Motor Car Company of Detroit, at a cost of nearly $100,000,000, including taxes, local gossip has it that the Ford interests are also anxious to control the company across the river. There is nothing definite, however, to explain the spectacular advance. It was one of the leading features in the local market for the past week, the sessions teeming with activity.

Another explanation is that the sharp gain is due to general conditions with the company's record of dividend payments an important contributing factor.

Ford Motor of Canada has made unusually rapid progress in the industrial world. Its shareholders are listed as living in all parts of the United States, numerous sections of Canada and in lands across the seas, and it has sent a steady stream of dividend payments into their pockets.

Incorporated under the laws of the province of Ontario, in 1904, with a capitalization of $125,000, the company was reincorporated under statutes of the Dominion of Canada, several years later, when the capital was increased to $1,000,000. In January it was raised to $10,000,000. Stock of the value of $7,000,000, par $100 per share, has been issued. The company was started on its upward swing in the business world by the touch of modern Midas practically from the time it was launched in the industrial world.

By some mysterious and inscrutable fate, several stockholders of the Ford Motor Company of Detroit sold their holdings to Henry Ford and James Couzens, in the early days of its history, and incidentally relinquished shares of stock in the Ford Motor Company of Canada. Had they retained these holdings, their combined wealth, including fabulous dividends that have been paid, would be nearly $50,000,000. It is related in the financial district that they sold their stock for not quite

MAKING USE OF AUTO TRAILERS

They've Come to Stay, so Why not Use Them.

A Seven-Ton Truck Can Haul Forty on Trailer.

Figuring Road Resistance is an Exact Science.

From the farmer who hitches a two-wheeled gig to the rear of his automobile and drives away with ten cans of milk to make the 3 o'clock train, to the contractor who hauls forty tons of crushed stone in trailers with one motor truck's power, business men everywhere are realizing that the principle of the trailer truck is sound.

The average well-built truck is able to haul behind it three or four times as much as it can carry. For instance, a three-ton truck loaded to capacity could hardly haul a single empty trailer up a 20 per cent. grade, but along a level stretch this same three-ton truck could haul possibly twenty-four or even thirty tons on its trailer.

E. Richard Just, distributor of Goodrich truck tires, advocates the universal adoption of trailers as a means of efficient and economic transportation. "The trailer has come to stay," says Mr. Just, "and its use and importance will multiply as the State and nation's roads improve."

An instance of the practical efficiency of the tractor power of motor trucks was recently demonstrated by Allen Brothers, local trucking contractors, who specialize in hauling boilers and heavy machinery. On a specially designed trailer they hauled a forty-ton marine engine cylinder from the heart of Los Angeles to the harbor, a distance of twenty-three miles. The carrying capacity of the truck itself was seven tons, while its tractor power was much in excess of that. This surplus power developed by the motor, which is usually wasted, made it possible to transport what ordinarily might be considered a good load for a freight car.

The motor truck operator can reduce his transportation requirements from two hundred to three hundred per cent. by availing himself of the latent power of his motor. As a general rule it is best not to overload either truck or trailer, both from a standpoint of injury to the truck as well as to the tires.

According to Mr. Just the result of experiments made by the Goodrich Rubber Company prove that various kinds of pavements and road surfaces show effects on the operation of the truck, and the following table gives the generally accepted road resistance in pounds on rubber-tired trucks and trailers:

	Road resistance in pounds per ton.
Asphalt	20
Wood block	24
Smooth brick	25-35
Poor brick	35-60
Hard dry clay or gravel	50
Soft macadam	75
Ordinary clay road	100
Country sand road	150
Sand three inches deep	275-300

In loading a truck it is well for the owner to compute by a simple mathematical process just what resistance will be offered. A 1 per cent. grade requires a 1 per cent. haul. A truck with a gross weight of ten tons driven up a grade of 6 per cent. will require a force of six-tenths of a ton, or 1200 pounds. For each per cent. of grade to be encountered a drawbar pull of 1 per cent of one ton, 2000 pounds, is required, or a drawbar pull of twenty pounds for each ton.

When road and grade resistance have been computed and added together, the result obtained shows the total resistance, as for example, a three-and-one-half-ton truck, weighing seven and one-half tons loaded, must climb a 4 per cent. grade over an ordinary clay road. Compute the results in this manner:

Road resistance, 100 pounds per ton, 7½ tons, 750 pounds. The 4 per cent. grade resistance at 150 pounds for each 1 per cent. is 600 pounds, which, added to the 750 pounds road resistance, gives a total of 1350 pounds. In other words, it requires 1400 pounds of drawbar pull to carry the trucks up the incline over a country clay road. On a level stretch of pavement the results would be nine-tenths less, or 150 pounds.

CRACKED CRANK CHAMBER.

When a big crack develops in the crank chamber, there is but one cure, which must be administered by a firm specializing in welding. If the crack is a small one, however, it can be repaired by riveting a thin metal plate over the whole area embraced by the crack. If the break is very small a hole can be drilled at each end of the crack to keep it from spreading and then the whole can be burred over with a hammer and chisel.

$100,000. This transaction took place, of course, while the Ford company of Detroit was struggling with complex business problems, and before it had really entered an era of wonderful business prosperity.

Plans of the Ford Motor Company call for an output of 1,000,000 cars during the fiscal year which began August 1. This large prospective output was the principal point determined at the convention, just closed, of all branch managers of the Ford Motor Company in the United States and Canada, called to discuss the company's policies for the future.

Laurence R. Wilder, president and general manager of the Amalgamated Machinery Company, Chicago, the organization with which the Doble-Detroit Steam Motors Company and General Engineering Company have just been consolidated, was in Detroit late this week with other officers of the Chicago company. Conferences were held with Morgan J. Hammors, president of the Doble company. Arrangements for the transfer of the Doble company to the huge plant of the Amalgamated Machinery Company were made, as manufacturing of steam cars is to be started quickly.

The largest industrial development announced locally in years is impending, according to well-authenticated reports in the financial district.

Property for the project has been purchased on the river front, extending from Zug Island to the Great Lakes Engineering Works and reaching back to the Detroit, Toledo and Ironton railroad tracks.

Dodge Bros. are said to be the purchasers. There are 278 acres in the piece and the price paid is around $7500 an acre, or $2,085,000 for the site.

Official confirmation of the project is lacking, but it is generally believed that blast furnaces and steel rolling mills will be established. The project is said to be planned on an immense scale and building and equipment such as are contemplated will require several years' work.

The proposed industry must necessarily compete with the furnaces of Henry Ford & Son, which are located in the same vicinity further up the River Rouge.

Sales of White motor trucks are holding up well. Production at the Cleveland plants has been averaging thirty-seven trucks a day for some time. Prices have just been advanced on its small and medium-sized trucks.

Some idea of where automobile cars go and how rapidly they go may be had from the business of the Fields Motor Car Company, of Portland, Or. This company has just contracted for 1304 Chevrolets to be sold by August 1, 1920.

The Stevens-Duryea Motor Car Company, which has been out of business for years, is said to be ready to announce its re-entrance into business. It was one of the first concerns in the United States to build automobiles.

Reo Motor Car Company has a new policy, the building of one model for 1920 and perhaps for all time, it is said. The company will concentrate on one model. It has been announced that this model, a Reo six, will be sold for $1650 in the open market. A line of closed car bodies will appear later with the only difference in the body construction.

Winton Company is about to launch a new model, a smaller six. The new car will be known as model 25 of 30-35 horse power, and will be in all, except size, a Winton car in equipment, finish and standards. The price of the new creation will range from $3600 to $4800, according to the body type of which there will be thirteen styles.

TRUCKS TO CARRY POISON.

The already wide economic range of the motor truck has been amplified in Southern California by the transportation of a deadly poisonous gas, which is successfully combating the destructive black scale and which the railroads refuse to transport because of the poisonous properties it contains, according to George Meier, one of the proprietors of the Azusa Transfer Company, engaged in this class of hauling.

The gas, which carries a large percentage of cyanide, was perfected last year after exhaustive experiments, and today it is one of the important industries of Azusa, in the center of the orange belt. The gas is confined in tanks, each weighing about 100 pounds and then transported to the orange groves where it is released under a canvas covering, which entirely envelopes the tree affected with the blight. After investigation, the railroads refused to handle this new invention because, it is stated that, if the gas should leak from the tanks, it would endanger the life of any one who entered the car. The manufacturers then fell back upon the truck to solve the problem of transportation and that it is doing it in an entirely satisfactory manner is proven by the excellent service maintained as far north as Bakersfield and as far south as San Diego.

From a small beginning the transfer company, which has the contract for transporting the gas, will soon have a fleet of five trucks almost constantly in operation, and in all probability this number will be augmented as the ramifications of the fumigating business increase.

To increase the efficiency of its long distance hauling, the Azusa Transfer Company, recently replaced the solid tires on its two-ton trucks with giant United States Nobby cord tires, according to J. B. Magee, general manager of the Southern California and Arizona branches of the United States Rubber Company.

"This company is operating over a wide range of territory and it is to its interest to cover as much ground as possible and at the same time hold down overhead and truck depreciation. The company was satisfied that giant pneumatics were the answer and I understand they are thoroughly convinced their decision was the correct one. The giant pneumatic is the solution of the long haul problem," declared Magee.

"On Nobby cord giant pneumatics, we cover just twice as much ground as we did on solids. We secure as high as fifteen to seventeen miles to the gallon of gas, where we formerly averaged around six and seven to the gallon. A two-ton truck now makes the round trip to San Diego and vicinity in about seventeen hours. With solids it required almost twice as long. The big tires are easier on the chassis and on the goods that are hauled. The initial cost is more but the saving effected and the increased earning capacity of the truck far outweigh that," said an official of the transfer company.

LOCAL LENS IS DECLARED LEGAL.

"The approval given the Glareless auto lens by the California State motor vehicle department confirms the approval already given by other States where the Glareless has been introduced that have anti-glare restrictions in their State motor laws," said M. I. Mewhart of the Glareless Auto Lens Company last week.

"The reason for this universal acceptance of the Glareless lens lies in the fact that it was scientifically developed to meet the requirements of the first eastern laws after which practically all other State requirements have been patterned. It is a Southern California product, for it is manufactured at our plant in Los Angeles. More than 50,000 sets are now in service, chiefly in California."

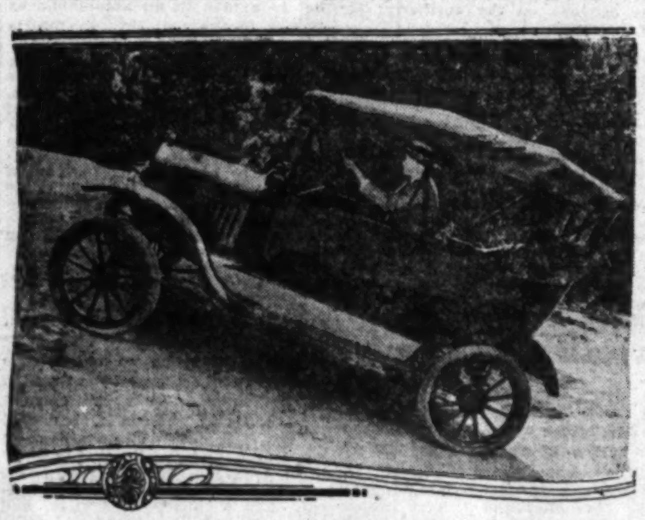
STARTER IS HANDY THING.

Much interest has been manifested in the Peerless starting system for Ford cars, which has been on the market in Los Angeles but a few months. Mr. Busch, the manager of the company, reports that the Ford owners who first purchased starters are now the company's best salesmen.

The Peerless starter, which was delayed in reaching Los Angeles through the inability of two large factories in Detroit, Mich., to supply the Eastern and Middle West demands, is unique in that it resembles one or two other starters which had been on the market at one time, and which were not successful.

Mr. Busch tells of a very peculiar incident that occurred while traveling over Cahuenga Pass a few days ago, when he came upon a lady traveling in a Ford touring car which she had stalled half way up the steep hill. She was sitting in the car holding on to the wheel for dear life with one foot on the brake and the other foot pushed hard on the low-speed pedal. The emergency brake would not hold the car so she was unable to get out and crank it.

Mr. Busch stopped by backing into the side of the hill and went to her assistance. After cranking the car for her he handed her one of his business cards and inasmuch as she seemed interested, he pulled his car out into the middle of the road and demonstrated how easy it was to crank his motor from the seat with a Peerless starter. Today this lady is using a Peerless starter on her own car and is one of the enthusiastic owner-salesmen for the company.



A Tough Place to Have Your Motor Die.

This party got stuck like this and couldn't leave the wheel to get out and crank because the handbrake wouldn't hold. Then a Peerless starter salesman came along and made a sale.

RADICAL CHANGE THING OF PAST.

FORTY-NINE IMPROVEMENTS IN A NEW MODEL ARE REALLY ONLY REFINEMENTS.

"People who expected to see vast changes and radical alterations in the 'after-the-war' cars produced by American makers must so far be decidedly disappointed. It is true that they can discover many changes and refinements in recent new models, but so far no sensational innovations have been announced, nor is it likely that there will be any introduced by the responsible builders of America," declares A. H. Wilson, sales manager of the Los Angeles branch of J. W. Leavitt & Co., Oldsmobile distributors.

"There are actually forty-nine changes in the new model Oldsmobile eight from the one which preceded it. The two most important changes have been the increasing of the depth of the frame to seven inches to secure added rigidity, and the development of a new rear spring suspension, a semi-elliptic type, exceptionally flat and of great length. It is doubtful if the casual observer of the new Oldsmobile would ever notice that the radiator capacity had been enlarged. This is another slight alteration that has been made, and perfect cooling has been achieved in the new car.

USED-CAR DEALERS WILL INCORPORATE.

Marking one of the most important steps yet taken by the Used Car Dealers' Association is the annoucement just made by M. A. Leach, the president, of the decision arrived at by the members to incorporate the association under the State laws. At a recent election of the new directors, officers who served the association for the first six months of its existence were re-elected. They are M. A. Leach, president; Spencer Kennelly, vice-president; N. C. Ifversen, treasurer, and F. B. Calvert, secretary.

COASTING DOWN GRADES SPORT.

A new motoring sport has been discovered, according to returning motorists from Forest Home. The new sport is that of "coasting" down the mountain grades, using an automobile instead of a sled. Records of from fourteen to eighteen miles an hour have been made by motorists, familiar with the Mill Creek road and who know how to take the turns and the grades so as to get the maximum of coasting without danger. At night the motorists start at Forest Home and coast to within two or three blocks of Orange street, the main thoroughfare of Redlands, a distance of sixteen miles. The machines with engines silent, appear ghostlike in their descent down the mountain grades. The old thrill of the bobsled is enjoyed without the company of Jack Frost.

TIRE FIRM BUILDS WORKMEN'S HOMES.

In common with hundreds of large manufacturing concerns throughout the country the Pennsylvania Rubber Company has, for the past two years, faced a serious shortage of housing facilities for its workmen. The remarkable growth of the makers of vacuum cup tires has brought a steadily increasing army of expert workmen to the town, with the result that houses were soon at a premium. Accordingly, they purchased approximately 120 acres, immediately south of the plant, upon which they are erecting modern homes. These homes are not of the type commonly known as "factory houses," but are modern, commodious residences of stucco and brick, and are sold to the workmen on such extremely liberal terms that they are being snapped up eagerly as soon as erected.

TON (D. C.) July 25.—military opinion, both here and the American Expeditionary abroad, favors a comprehen- Federal road-plan, is becoming apparent. Those high officials of the War Depart- have accumulated a complete of the highways sit- and are deeply interested in plan in Congress country-wide roads and includes con- of possible military needs.

BAKER'S SPEECH.

Preceding the departure from the south of the White House the motor convoy of the United Army Motor Transport Corps, its long journey from Washing- to San Francisco, the Secretary War dedicated the "zero mile- with an address which con- pronounced comment as to of establishing a nation- road system. Mr. Baker re- to the departure of the army train, with its sixty trucks two hundred odd soldiers, as beginning of a new era." He the world war as "a war motor transports." In authorized there is included as among "purposes of the trips:" "The Department's contribution to good roads movement for the of developing the construc- of through-route and transcon- highways as a military and asset."

That the Expeditionary Forces giving the American highways positive attention is set to Chairman Diehl of the A. A. good roads board in a com- from the editor of the News," now printed at Co- Germany. This publication is giving much space to good roads and a recent article by A. M. Flint of Indianapolis these pertinent paragraphs:

FROM OVERSEAS.

"The most urgent necessity of our in the immediate future is roads, permanent roads that be used twelve months in each

"The roads of America today are inadequate, inefficient and They are not designed carry the heavy traffic now. What become of them in the future? It is a vital problem, this ques- of roads, one that reaches down to the very foundation of our so- and economic scheme of life, roads are the clearing-houses of the various States and the only of free travel.

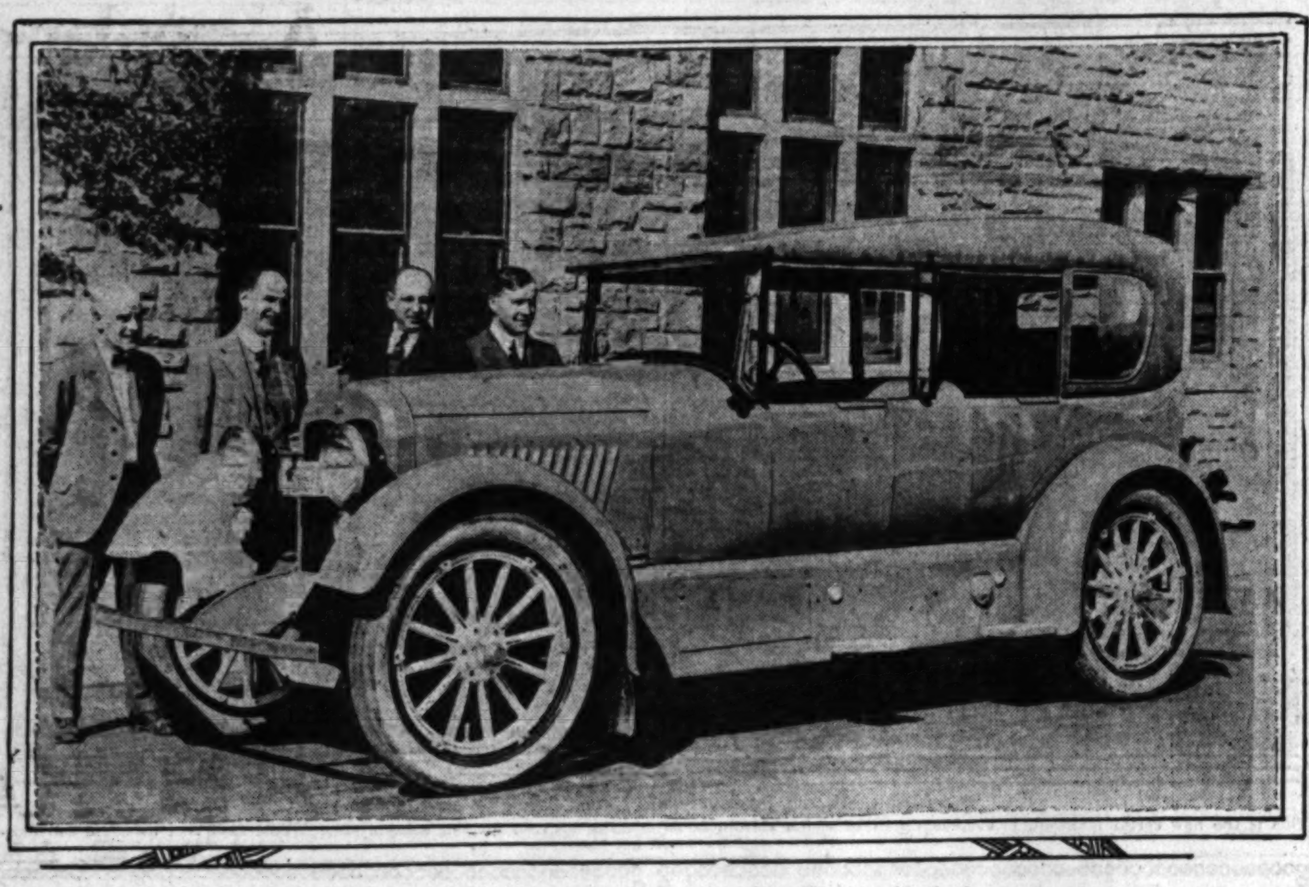
VALUABLE ASSET.

"In no small measure the success of the Allies is due to the great of travel, which the far-sighted Frenchmen had constructed in the time of peace. Subjected to a constant stream of heavy traffic for over four years, such as is largely beyond the imagination of those who have not seen for themselves, these roads stood the test, summer and winter, spring and fall, and made possible those victories which resulted in driving the Hun back across the Rhine. Whether those who are opposed to the building of highways are purposely blind to these facts is not known. In the true sense, they are obstructionists. They are a drawback to any community. They are uncivilized. America, because of her government, permits these creatures to hibernate and live among us.

"Since the time is approaching when all of the expeditionary forces will return across the seas, it is inevitable that their thoughts should be more and more of home, their minds relieved of the worry of war. America has made a wonderful record during the war; her fame has spread far and wide by the manner in which her men responded to the call to arms. Are we to show less foresight or less determination in meeting the problems of peace?

MUST HAVE THEM.

"We are faced again with a great problem, for our national prosperity, education and social intercourse of the immediate future demand that this disadvantage of roads be overcome. This can only be done by honest legislators making laws, the enforcement of which shall be placed in the hands of men who have passed the test, by service in the construction and maintenance of highways. Good roads mean extended prosperity to America."



At Last—the Car Whose Appearance has Been Eagerly Awaited.

LOS ANGELES-BUILT CAR.

The day toward which the motoring fraternity of Los Angeles and Southern California has long looked forward has arrived. It signalizes the entrance of this city into the ranks of automobile manufacturing centers and at the same time gives material form to the dreams and planning of a man whose judgment in motor-car design, construction and value is widely recognized.

The man in M. A. Leach and the car which he has produced in the factory of the Leach-Biltwell Company, on South Grand avenue, is announced under the name of the Leach Power Plus Six.

Competent critics of the automobile world who have inspected the Leach Power Plus Six and ridden in it have pronounced it nothing short of a marvel of beauty, comfort and mechanical excellence. More than one has frankly proclaimed it the finest and most complete standard custom-built motor car in the entire country.

But the man who conceived the car itself is not content altogether with the verdict of motor experts alone. He wants the public to pass judgment on his product, and to that end he has announced that the two models of the Leach Power Plus Six—speedster and sport—will be kept on exhibition at the Leach-Biltwell showrooms.

Already a number of the more enthusiastic motorists of Los Angeles have not only inspected the car, but have either purchased one outright or placed an order with the Leach-Biltwell Company for one.

Combining the distinctiveness of especially built models with all the economy of standard construction the Leach Power Plus Six is expressive of the knowledge gained by men identified with the Leach organization as manufacturers, manufacturers' agents, distributors and retailers.

Behind the Leach car are the best efforts of some of the best known men in the motor-car business of Los Angeles. Headed by H. A. Leach, who spent two full years planning the car, are the following men: L. G. Martin, vice-president; E. P. Hughes, secretary and treasurer; R. A. Wilson, production manager; R. P. Pennock, superintendent; J. H. Faircloth, purchasing agent; A. Ashby, office manager, and C. N. Graves, wholesale sales manager.

That the car marks the production here for the first time of a high-class, custom-built car embodying standard equipment is the source of chief satisfaction to the Leach-Biltwell organization.

To build the first stock custom motor cars, to build them to conform to high ideals; to build them to provide the greatest comfort, the utmost luxury and the most certain safety; to build them so every car is instantly converted into an inclosed car—to really build a car beyond comparison, has been the Leach aim.

Featured as standard equipment of the Leach Power Plus Six is the de luxe top with sliding windows and curtains, and the Leach is the only car made in America including the unique feature as part of every car. By simply grasping the lower edge of the curtain it is easily drawn down and when the curtains have been thus drawn and the windows slid into place, the car becomes completely inclosed.

Specifications announced show the Leach Power Plus Six to be a quality car throughout. The motor is a Continental red seal, model 9-N, six-cylinder, bore 3½, stroke 5¼. Westinghouse, two-unit electrical equipment is employed and there is a Prestolite storage battery with Westinghouse generator and Remy distributor. A Rayfield carburetor is used, and the gas supply consists of a Stewart vacuum and a twenty-gallon tank in the rear. The transmission is of the Brown-Lipe sliding gear, selective type, three speeds forward and reverse.

Specifications otherwise include: Drive, Hotchkiss, with double universal; frame, seven-inch, extra heavy channel pressed steel; brakes, easy acting, extra large drums, bolted to rear wheels with external contraction and internal expansion; wheels, wire, 32x4½ inches, five in number; tires, Goodrich Silvertown cord; steering wheel, Liberty collapsible with locking device; bumpers, front and rear, with combination trunk rack in rear.

TURNING RADIUS IS BIG FEATURE.

CAR THAT CAN TURN IN THIRTY-ONE FOOT CIRCLE IS HANDY IN TRAFFIC.

"Not the least advantage to be found in the compact construction of the Nelson car is the matter of turning radius. It is matter of frequent comment from Nelson owners that the short turning radius of the car is a constant convenience in handling a car in the downtown traffic," says Frank Nelson, Southern California distributor for the Nelson car.

"Two chief factors enter into the construction of the Nelson, which permit it to turn in a circle thirty-one feet in diameter. One is the short wheelbase of the car and the other is the narrow frame, that allows the front wheels to turn at a sharp angle. If all cars were able to turn in as short a space as the Nelson the question of parking space would be considerably improved, for it is possible to park a Nelson in a space that it would be utterly impossible to get an average car in or out of."

NEW SALESMANSHIP IDEA.

"As applied to the automobile business, what are the chief attributes of salesmanship?"

The question was such an unusual one that B. L. Graves, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Ford Motor Company, hesitated a fraction of a second before he attempted to answer it.

But he didn't get a chance to say a word. Graves knows, alright, what constitutes salesmanship, but sensing that the Ford dealer, who sprung the question on him one day last week, had something unusual to tell him, he indicated that he was listening.

"I know," the dealer went on, "that there's a lot to be said pro and con on the subject. But let me tell you a story of real salesmanship. It relates to a young fellow I put to work, who uses methods all his own. He's not an order taker, he's a real salesman, and the way he is going after the delivery car business would make your heart glad.

"Why, I had hardly told him to get busy before he was back with an order, and he has been repeating his performance with clocklike regularity. When I asked him how he managed to get into action so quick, he told me how he started out from an angle different from that employed by most salesmen.

"The first thing I did," he told me, "was to look up a storekeeper still using horse and wagon delivery. I found he had been canvassed by a lot of auto salesmen, but he had never been able to make a choice because they had swamped him with statistical data.

"I told him to forget the statistics, agreeing that if he would give me a half hour of his time, I would guarantee to let him sell himself a Ford chassis, which he could have fitted up with any delivery body to suit his fancy. He agreed and consented to go with me to Seventh and Broadway. On the way downtown I sprung my pro-position.

"Now I am going to give you visible proof of Ford popularity, I told him. Now if I show you ten Ford delivery cars to one of every other makes combined, will you be convinced that the Ford is the car for you. Of course, he said he would.

"Well, to make a long story short, we stationed ourselves at Los Angeles' busiest corner and started counting. In ten minutes we counted exactly 158 light delivery cars. The first thirty-two were Fords, then another make came along, and then another procession of seventeen Fords and following them two cars difficult of identification. Out of the entire 158 there were just nine other cars other than Fords. Well, you know the rest, because you filled his order that afternoon for a Ford Chassis."

"Now, that's what I call salesmanship," the dealer concluded. "I'll say so," was Graves comment, the Ford branch manager's consent.

RETURNED SOLDIER ON THE JOB AGAIN.

Discharged from the army at Camp Dodge, Iowa, June 10.—Sergt. E. E. Rauen, brother of J. B. Rauen, secretary and treasurer of the United States Spring Company, arrived in Los Angeles last week and has again assumed his duties in the office of that company. Sergt. Rauen was eleven months in France as a member of the Headquarters Company of the Three Hundred and Forty-ninth Infantry, Eightieth Division, and was in active service on the Toul sector. He was in the advance on Metz when the armistice was signed. Accompanying him is his bride, the couple having been married in Minneapolis, shortly after his discharge.

TRUCKS

QUALITY COUNTS

Why is there such a remarkable increase in the number of MACK trucks in use today?

It is because in every MACK truck there is real quality—nothing shoddy or imitation, but the genuine.

This same quality always has been in MACK trucks and now is shining in full splendor through the fog of make-believe and just-as-good. Users have seen the light and now MACK trucks have begun to set the sales pace among high-grade manufactured trucks the same as they do in actual performance.

What is there back of the quality that exists in all MACK trucks? There are the correct principles of motor transport engineering; refusal to produce a truck that is lacking or weak in any essential; use of only the highest grade of materials; skilled labor and years of experience in building trucks exclusively.

Why the Mitchell Victory "6" is the Easiest Riding Car

A pair of the most flexible and carefully tested Cantilever Springs, each 58 inches in length, is the reason why the Mitchell Victory Six is the easiest riding car.

Never in six years has a Cantilever rear spring on any Mitchell been broken—that is the test of time, number and value.

On a trip from Lancaster to Rosamond—12 miles of almost impassable chuck holes—in 38 minutes, the Mitchell Victory Six rode so evenly that it never raised either passenger off the rear seat—ample proof of the supremacy of Mitchell riding ease.

Ask anyone who has traveled this 12-mile stretch lately—then think it over. You'll understand the popularity of the Mitchell Victory Six.

Immediate delivery can now be made.

Absolutely and Positively the Latest Thing in Its Class.

This is the new series Maxwell, $2,000,000 worth of which Harold L. Arnold has ordered for this season. Mr. Arnold says that he could sell more if he could get them.

NEW MODEL CARS ARRIVE.

"When I recently ordered 2500 new type Maxwells for delivery at Los Angeles within the next twelve months," said Harold L. Arnold, "I really had more than just the improved cars in mind.

"As a matter of fact, to market over $2,000,000 worth of automobiles in one year is some job, but it is much less of an undertaking when people have full confidence in the man at the head of the organization making the car.

"Take the Maxwell as an illustration, C. C. Hanch, general manager of Maxwell interests at the factory, is one of the best-known figures in the motor-car world. When the company secured his services for Maxwell, they were looking forward to an uninterrupted demand for motor cars. They proposed to develop one of the strongest manufacturing organizations in the United States, and to make a car which would be known as the best automobile for the money on the American market. The new type 1920 Maxwell we have recently received bears out that statement and in this model we can see the progressive determination of the man who said, 'The best is none too good.'

"Mr. Hanch came to Maxwell equipped with all the executive leadership and automobile knowledge necessary to make the Maxwell company one of the most formidable institutions in the commercial world.

"For nineteen years he was general manager and treasurer of the Nordyke Marmon Company at Indianapolis. In June of last year he became chief of the automobile products section of the War Industries Board, and the same energy, leadership and tremendous results he accomplished for Uncle Sam will make him an asset of incalculable value to the Maxwell factory and dealers.

"Since the armistice Mr. Hanch has been in Europe representing the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, and his keen insight of conditions here and abroad, augmented by his versatile experience and familiarity with all the ins and outs of the automobile industry, points to the greatest forward leap in the Maxwell company. It means continued improvement of Maxwell cars until they are as perfect as experience, skill and unlimited capital can make them.

"To illustrate I need only point out that the 1920 models, which we have just put on exhibition, have five distinctive improvements over former Maxwells. The intake manifold, in combination with the exhaust manifold, is so designed that every particle of gasoline comes in contact with a hot spot which vaporizes each molecule into vibrant gas of maximum power. This superheated gas mixture is then drawn into the motor through a ramshorn distributor, which feeds a uniform supply to each cylinder and develops 10 to 20 per cent. more power from the same amount of gas formerly used.

"The new cars have many mechanical improvements, including lower gear ratio on first speed, resulting in more power for steep mountain grade work, and slightly higher gear ratio on third, giving greater speed for boulevard driving. The fenders, running-board and dust shields are so greatly improved in design that when considered in connection with the higher, narrower radiator, the entire appearance of the car is changed and modernized.

"In making these improvements, however, the Maxwell company has retained one element which stands forth above all; the car still has the same sturdy, dependable construction of frame and cross members, and the same inherent reliability of motor, clutch and transmission, which permitted it to win and hold the world's nonstop motor record of 22,000 miles, made in forty-four days and nights of continuous driving, a record which stands supreme among all reliability tests ever made in the history of the automobile."

STAGE PILES UP MILEAGE.

If the San Fernando stage ran to the moon it would have reached there last year and been well on its way back now. San Fernando stage No. 1, a Studebaker, has traveled 300,000 miles and is still going, piling up another 100,000 miles for its 1919 contribution to Southern-California transportation.

Three years ago this Studebaker was put in the San Fernando stage service. Going day and night, almost continuously, the car has covered 100,000 miles yearly, with its heavy load. It is one of a fleet of twelve Studebakers in the San Fernando stage service.

They pile up mileages rapidly, those Studebakers in stage service. Attracted by the service given by the Studebaker, H. G. Beckley looked over the line last March for a car to run between here and Saugus. He thought that a Studebaker big six would answer the purpose. He required power, sturdiness and room, for when Beckley travels he carries no less than nine passengers. More often he has eleven aboard.

"I ran that big six Studebaker 21,000 miles before I ever spent a nickel on it," Beckley told Paul G. Hoffman, of Maxwell & Hoffman, the Studebaker distributors, yesterday. "The first expense was having the carbon cleaned out, and that was the only expense I ever had, except when I broke a spring leaf with eleven passengers in the car. It was my fault, for I hit a railroad track going fast with a whopper of an overload.

"The car is just as good today as when I put it in the service. And let me tell you something. There's nothing that gets by me on the Newhall grade. That is a long pull, and will test any car. But I shoot over there in high gear, even with a heavy load, and I don't have to pull aside for anyone."

TAKE OVER LOCAL AGENCY.

"We live and learn; we certainly do." The speaker was John de Palma, brother of Ralph de Palma, the racing king, and his comment was occasioned by the many things he learned on his visit to the factory at Waltham, Mass., of the Metz Motor Car Corporation. The agency for the Metz master six in Los Angeles and Hollywood has just been taken over by De Palma and Horace P. Keeler.

"One of the first things I found out," De Palma said, "was that the government has finished turning back to the Metz corporation its factory, which during the war was devoted to airplane construction and the building of Liberty motors. I learned, too, that the factory, which is expanding rapidly and effecting many changes, is building more of the Metz master six than is generally known in automobile circles.

"I thought I had investigated pretty thoroughly before taking over the Metz with Mr. Keeler, but what I learned that I didn't know before would fill a lot of space in print. The painting of the Metz master six body, for example, is strictly a hand job throughout, and the aluminum body more than favorably compares with the work found in much more expensive cars."

ANTI-RUST LUBRICANT.

As an anti-rust lubricant for the leaves of springs, etc., heat a pound of India rubber scrap and mix with half a pound of grease and half a pound of graphite.

COAST ROAD ALL PAVEMENT.

With the elimination of the last long detour south of King City on the Coast highway between Los Angeles and San Francisco, this route may be now considered as boulevard "all the way," according to an announcement issued yesterday by the touring bureau of the Automobile Club of Southern California.

The club has just received word from an inspection car making the trip that only a few very short detours now exist around bridge construction work. The last long detour, one of twelve miles between San Ardo and San Lucas, has been thrown open, and cars are streaming through.

Those few detours now remaining are maintained in such good condition that the Automobile Club scarcely considers them in issuing its weekly reports, and classifying the condition of the road.

SHOWS SPEED AND STAMINA.

One of the most remarkable achievements in the history of the automobile has just come to light through receipt of a letter by the Los Angeles branch of the Willys-Overland Pacific Company from M. Schneider, proprietor of the Hotel Muehlebach of Kansas City.

Mr. Schneider has just returned to Kansas City after a brief visit here. He made the trip across country by way of the old Santa Fe trail in his Overland model 90 touring car, leaving Kansas City at 6 in the morning on June 7, the party arrived in Los Angeles at 7 a.m. June 19, just twelve days for the trip, despite terrific road conditions at various points along the line, including twenty-four hours of hard rain.

In addition to Mr. Schneider the party included W. A. Adams, Mrs. Schneider, Mrs. F. Moll and P. Morris together with their baggage. The car was comparatively new and yet the motor ran as smoothly as if it had been tuned up for a race and the hood was not raised for a look at the power plant during the entire trip.

The tires too, stood up wonderfully and came through to Los Angeles with the Kansas City air in them and without a puncture or noticeable scratch. Never even in the rough going through the worst of the muddy roads did the radiator show signs of heating up. Car after car was passed on the road, nearly all headed toward the Coast and California. "I never thought I'd see so many cars within so short a space of time in all my life," said Mr. Schneider in one part of his letter.

"I knew the Overland was an economical car, whether for city or touring use," declared Mr. Schneider, "but I had no idea a trip could be made to California so cheaply. Aside from our hotel bills the entire expense of the trip was the total of what we paid out for oil and gasoline. You will be surprised to learn that the itemized account for oil and fuel, which I give in full below, amounted to only $71.99, just about what it would have cost one of us to make the trip by train.

"Then too, we had the wonderful scenery which we were able to enjoy during the main part of the trip, as the weather was almost ideal for nine or ten of the twelve days we were en route."

ORGANIZATION AT A GET TOGETHER.

PROMINENT MOTOR DEALER TELLS EMPLOYEES IDEALS OF THE COMPANY.

For the first time since the Frank O. Renstrom Company, distributor of Grant and Briscoe cars, and Grant and Atterbury trucks, established its important branch in Los Angeles, the members of the local organization, including the sales and the service departments, assembled at a get-together meeting which was addressed by Frank O. Renstrom, last Saturday afternoon, he having arrived that morning from the company's headquarters in San Francisco.

Renstrom impressed upon the members of his organization that sterling integrity in business is the only sure road to success. He pointed out that in any organization, co-operating is imperative if the enterprise in which it is engaged is to be successful. He outlined his ideals and stated that he hoped that every member of the organization would maintain those standards.

60,000 Earlier Hudsons Foretold This Super-Six

Qualities That Men Had Predicted Would Make it the Unrivaled Car Have Now Been Realized

Everyone knows Hudson Super-Six history. It is written in the official records of some of the greatest endurance and speed tests known. It is told in nearly every locality by those who know how performance reveals quality.

But its greatest fame lies in the appreciation that thousands of owners hold for it.

You have heard Hudson owners predict its ultimate achievements. They have praised their cars and yet always they have said that a greater Super-Six was inevitable.

Hudson Evolution Came Naturally

Let the reader review the past four years of motor history. The Super-Six was a distinct step ahead in motor designing. It added 72% to power without increased weight or complications.

Its principal was new. Vibration had been minimized. Performance had been increased.

That first Super-Six revealed a development not possible to any other type. It foretold the Hudson we now offer.

Each Year Marked Some Improvement

New Hudson models are not mere changes in body design. Such attractiveness is not overlooked. The main effort has been to increase endurance, to free it from the faults common to all cars.

Easier starting, more reliability of performance, freedom from mechanical tion, a safer, more comfortable and economical car has been the aim.

Each added quality has been proved thousand ways. The speedway, road ing, mountain climbing, trans touring at express speed, did their Spectacular records were established long after details of the world's fastest for a stock chassis, or the double run San Francisco to New York and return been forgotten by the public, Hudson neers continued to profit by the learned in those tests. Subsequent showed the result.

Such a car would have been imp without that experience. We did not racing to win prizes, but to learn how build a better car.

She Liked the Car So Well She Became a Saleswoman.

Mrs. May C. Yates bought herself a Jordan and thought so much of it that she boosted it all the while and finally persuaded Johnny Powers of the Los Angeles baseball club to buy one.

SELLS A CAR TO POWERS.

Motorists have been known to wax enthusiastic over the class and performance of their cars, but when one comes along who will not only extoll the fine qualities of a favorite car, but will go out and demonstrate to an interested person, that's a new story in motordom.

Such is the unique position in which Mrs. Mae C. Yates, of 672 South Rampart, finds herself. Mrs. Yates is a graduate of Polytechnic High School and a thoroughly experienced—and enthusiastic—motorist. She owns a Jordan touring car, and she makes no secret of the fact that she is thoroughly satisfied with it.

John Powers, president of the Los Angeles baseball club, happened to mention in Mrs. Yates's presence that he was thinking of getting a new car. Thereupon, Mrs. Yates burst forth in eloquence relative to the power, speed, economy and appearance of the Jordan six. Mr. Powers wavered a bit in the face of the salesmanship barrage, and he soon found himself in Mrs. Yates's Jordan.

A few minutes' ride in the Jordan, with Mrs. Yates at the wheel, showing what the car possessed in the way of performance, and Mr. Powers was ready for first-aid treatment from Robert S. Weaver, vice-president and general manager of the Seager-Clark Company, distributors of Jordan cars in Southern California. The result is the baseball impresario now is listed among Jordan owners.

DON'T EVEN ASK DEMONSTRATION.

CAR IS SO MUCH IN DEMAND THAT THEY SEND A CHECK AND ASK NO RIDE.

After considerable thought on the subject, sales manager Frank S. West of the local Stearns agency has come to the conclusion that not all of the Stearns salesmen in Southern California are on Buxton's pay roll. "It is customary for purchasers of a car in the class of the Stearns to at least ask for a short demonstration before they sign on the dotted line," said West last week. "It is a fact, however, that most of the recent buyers of Stearns cars have not even asked for a ride in the car. Their only concern is to know how soon we can make delivery.

"In the mail last Saturday morning was a letter and a check from a prominent business man of the Imperial Valley, ordering a Stearns car, and I know that he had never had a demonstration from us. On that same day we received orders from two Los Angeles men for cars, and neither one asked for a demonstration."

SETTING THE MAGNETO.

When setting a high-tension magneto it should first be seen that the proper cylinder is in firing position; that is, both valves closed and the piston brought up to the highest point, which can be ascertained by running a rod or wire through the spark plug or petcock opening. When this point is reached the motor should be backed up one-eighth of a stroke, which is where the spark should occur when the spark lever is fully advanced. If it is desired to throttle the motor down very low the spark plug points should be opened until they are fully one-sixteenth of an inch apart.

POSTOFFICE BUYS TIRES.

Word that the Postoffice Department at Washington has closed a contract for their tire needs with the Mason Rubber Company for cord tires, Maximile fabrics, solid tires and tubes, was brought to Los Angeles last week by L. B. Broering, a special factory representative of the Mason Tire and Rubber Company. At the headquarters of the C. Fred Thompson Tire Company, Mason distributors for Southern California and Arizona, Mr. Broering gave some of the details of the big contract.

"This is the first time in the history of the Postoffice Department that a contract has been closed with a single concern for fabric, cord and solid tires," Mr. Broering told C. Fred Thompson. "The Postoffice Department has, of course, an opportunity to conduct the most rigid tests as to wearing qualities on their thousands of vehicles. Consequently their choice of Mason tires of all three varieties was a matter of considerable pride to us.

"The Mason Tire and Rubber Company is at present building a huge tire fabric mill near their present plant at Kent, O. It will have an output of 3,000,000 yards of tire fabric per year, and will, of course, permit the Mason company to keep absolute check upon the quality of the fabric which they use. There is only one other tire manufacturer who makes their own fabric.

"In order to control their supply of rubber as well, Mr. D. M. Mason is at present in South America in the Amazon country to purchase a huge rubber plantation. When this is done, it will give the Mason factory a complete control over the material used in the making of their product."

During his stay here, Mr. Broering visited many of the dealers in Southern California that handle the Mason line, in company with a representative of the C. Fred Thompson Tire Company and expressed himself as more than pleased with the outlook for Mason business on the Coast. In the future, Mr. Broering expects to spend much of his time on the Pacific Coast henceforth, and declares that he is already a strong booster for Southern California.

LETTER OF CREDIT FOR BUYING TIRES.

LOCAL DISTRIBUTOR ARRANGES NICE CONVENIENCE FOR HIS CUSTOMERS.

For the convenience of the hundreds of Los Angeles users of Racine tires, who take long vacation trips in their machines, F. H. Osler of the Osler-Racine Rubber Company has planned a "letter-of-credit" scheme that will undoubtedly be much appreciated. To any of his customers who desire it, Mr. Osler is issuing a letter, which, if they present it to any Racine dealer anywhere, will permit them to secure a tire or tube and have it charged against their account with the local Racine agency in Los Angeles.

"Frequently people who go on long, rough automobile trips, dislike to carry with them a sum of money sufficient to provide them with extra tires on the road should they become necessary," said Mr. Osler last week. "It is sometimes difficult to get a check honored in a strange town on short notice, as well. The letter-of-credit which we are issuing now does away with these difficulties. Any Racine dealer anywhere will furnish a motorist with anything he may need in the way of tire equipment on the presentment of this letter."

GYMNASIUM WILL PRESERVE HEALTH.

TIRE EMPLOYEES WILL HAVE REAL CHANCE TO GET PLENTY OF EXERCISE.

Although every inch of space in the immense B. F. Goodrich Rubber Company's factories at Akron is needed to meet tire production demands, and despite the fact that several old buildings are being razed to make room for a mammoth eight-story building, officials of the company are providing a big gymnasium located in the heart of the plant in recognition of the need of recreation for the 20,000 employees of the company.

The big recreation hall will have three basketball courts, indoor baseball diamond, handball and volley ball courts and complete gymnasium equipment. On the floor below the "gym" will be dressing rooms, lockers and shower baths. Girls will have a share in the new gymnasium, certain periods being set aside for their use.

CLEANLINESS IS RULE OF COMPANY.

The firm of Ralph P. Dignowity (formerly Dignowity & Kirkpatrick) owes its inception and much of its success to some very sane principles of efficiency. The present establishment is one of the finest and most extensive in Los Angeles, including all departments for repair and supply needs and a beautiful salesroom for display of late-model used cars.

Mr. Dignowity said: "My plan demanded that cleanliness should be its first rule—and that rule has been kept. Furthermore, I have found it an incentive to the mechanics themselves to greater pride in their workmanship. Cleanliness, efficiency, speed, economy—those in our shop are the fundaments of 'specialized service.'"

CAR MAKES A FINE RECORD.

Upon their return to their home in Bangor, Me., a party of motorists who had just completed a double transcontinental tour had an interesting story to relate. They had been told many things by other motorists about what to expect when crossing the Mojave Desert en route to Los Angeles and their minds had been filled with apprehension. They were among the very first of the season's arrivals in this city and promised Ralph Hamlin of Ralph Hamlin, Inc., the representatives of the Franklin car in Southern California, that they would let him hear from them when they were safely back in Bangor.

The other day Mr. Hamlin received a letter giving some of the details of the trip, which was made in a Franklin touring car containing three passengers, two of them women, and several hundred pounds of luggage. "In going across the Mojave Desert all the other cars we saw were carrying an extra supply of water for the radiators in water cans or water bags," the letter says. "The only water we had was in the Thermos bottle and we felt absolutely safe."

The party left home in Maine last December in the throes of midwinter and while the roads in many places were blocked with snow and ice. At one point in New England it was necessary to employ seven men to clear the road of snow sufficiently to permit the car to go through. January 9 the start was made from Boston for the Pacific Coast. Upon the return to Bangor recently it had covered more than 13,000 miles and been on the road more than six months.

BOOST TRUCK SHIPPING.

"We figure if people see the words 'Ship-by-Truck!' often, the time will come when each reader will think about the meaning, and we know that when he gives it thought he will realize something of the vast possibilities, and the immediate benefits to himself, of this newest method of commercial transportation."

In these words a local motor-truck express operator yesterday explained the new "Ship-by-Truck" insignia he has stencilled on his trucks. The same insignia is appearing on motor trucks throughout the city and country.

"Repetition has been recognized in schools for a long time as a valuable method in education, and now it is well established even in the business world," said E. S. Firestone, manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Firestone Tire and Rubber Company yesterday.

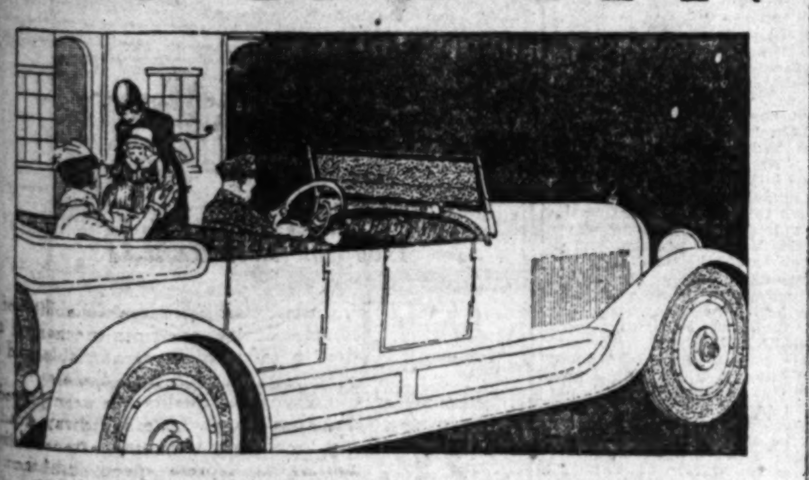
"Truck manufacturers, motor-truck express operators and our bureau," he continued, "are the latest to use repetition in an educational campaign. We are distributing thousands of celluloid buttons, papers of matches and watch fobs on which is shown a large truck wheel, across the face of which are the word in script 'Ship-by-Trucks.' The insignia will also be used in national and newspaper advertisements; it will be printed on letterheads and stencilled on the bodies and windshields of trucks and automobiles.

"The insignia is copyrighted and its use by any trucking, individuals or firms that do not maintain the highest standards of operation will not be permitted. Every effort will be made to give it standing as the symbol of 'Good Trucking Service,' meaning service by trucks that meet the requirements of good truck manufacturing, service by trucks that are kept up to proper maintenance standards, and service by trucks that are operated by drivers who observe the rules of the roads and can assume responsibility, being mindful of the trust the shippers impose in them in giving them their loads.

"You will observe that the words 'Ship-by-Truck' are written across the moving wheel with an upward slant. It is intended that by this position they will indicate speed which is emphasized because it is one of the best arguments in the 'Ship-by-Truck' movement."

The insignia is neat, and readily attracts the eye.

JORDAN



People Demand Light Weight

Thousands of owners now know that Jordan cars possess that peculiar quality of balance which cannot be attained in cars weighing from twelve to fifteen hundred pounds more—nor in extremely light cars of short wheel base.

People demand light weight—but not too light. There must be no ruinous side sway—no jerky up and down vibration.

The new Jordan Silhouette is the lightest car on the road for its wheel base—but perfectly balanced—accurately suspended. Its whole tendency is toward forward movement without side sway.

Many a man who felt it necessary to pay a high price and get a heavy car in order to attain reliability has chosen the Jordan because it combined quality with light weight and perfect balance.

The body is all-aluminum. Smart French angle at dash. Perfectly flat top-edge—without a trace of bevel. Gun metal instrument board. Artistic hardware. Innovation in tonneau equipment. Tailored top. Character in every detail.

The Silhouette finished in Egyptian Bronze or Burgundy Old Wine is built in both four and seven passenger capacities.

NEW FIRM IS FORMED HERE.

Jack Griffin to Distribute Cars and Trucks.

Well-known Salesmen to Join the Organization.

New Sales and Service Station will be Erected.

J. G. Griffin, with the J. G. Griffin company, has joined the list of local automobile concerns. The new firm will act as authorized dealer in Chevrolet passenger cars and trucks, and will be located in South Main street. For the present the company will handle its business at 147 West Pico street.

Announcement to this effect was made yesterday by R. C. Durant, head of the big Chevrolet Motor Company of California. When he signed his contract Griffin gave an order for nearly $750,000 worth of Chevrolets to be delivered within the next few months. The magnitude of this initial allotment at once placed the J. G. Griffin company among the really big automobile concerns in California.

Griffin is well equipped to handle the affairs of the new firm. He is known all over the country as an experienced automobile executive and is responsible for several features of the business that are universally followed. His particular forte has been service, and it is expected the J. G. Griffin company will inaugurate many features pleasing to its patrons.

Identified with Griffin as the nucleus of his sales organization are R. H. Bach and E. M. Elliott. The latter has for some months been the star of the local Chevrolet sales department, while Bach is leaving the Overland company, where his record was equally as impressive. Elliott, Bach and Griffin are unusually popular and widely known, and the new concern is expected to flourish in remarkable fashion.

Scores of telegrams and messages were received at the temporary quarters of the J. G. Griffin company yesterday, predicting success for the new venture and congratulating members of the firm on their advent into the business world. Many local dealers and friends called in person, and the little makeshift combination shop and sales room on Pico street was the center of activity for hours.

Griffin entered the automobile world several years ago as Western advertising manager of the Studebaker Corporation. Later he helped make the Hupp a popular car, and then joined the Maxwell forces. About two years ago he affiliated himself with R. C. Durant and the Chevrolet, remaining there until January, when he resigned to devote his time to oil interests in Texas. On his return here he was given an opportunity to realize on the wonderful popularity of the Chevrolet product, and the J. G. Griffin company is the result.

There are more than 150,000 Model 90 owners who sought first for beauty, economy, comfort and dependable performance. The significant fact is they all decided upon Model 90. These are the advantages you want in a car. Model 90 combines them all.

A world's record of 4370 miles in 7 days and 7 nights, sealed in high gear, without motor stop in Oklahoma, and 3852 miles in 7 days and 7 nights, without motor stop, on a fixed schedule in Massachusetts, also over 702 miles a day for 5¼ days, sealed in high gear without motor stop in Pennsylvania, are a few of the typical instances that show the dependability and efficiency of Model 90 stock cars.

Goes Right After Them.

George W. Franklin, manager of the Security Motor Corporation, distributor of the Mitchell Victory six, heard that fishing was good at Fairview, located above Kernville on the Kern River, near where the Southern California Edison Company is building its immense Upper Kern River power plant. "Let's go get 'em," he suggested to "Bill" Williams, wholesale manager, and "Bill" agreed. With David Leighton and C. F. Crank, they loaded into a Mitchell, and over boulevards, desert, canyon and mountain grades, they went. Here are three members of the party snapped during a halt between Havilah and Caliente.

FIND ROMANTIC COUNTRY.

No other form of mining ever held half the interest and romance of placer mining. The days of gold in California, when the miner with pick and shovel and rocker and pan might acquire a fortune in virgin gold from a mountain stream in a few weeks, still hold a lure unequalled by any later period in the history of the State. Northern California, of course, was the scene of most of this activity, and the traveler in the Sierras still can find infinite interest in what remains of such historic towns as Calaveras, French Camp, Jimtown and Hangtown.

Not all of California's placer gold came from Sierra streams, however. The visitor to Big Bear Valley may easily visit, if he cares to take the trouble, Holcomb Valley, scene of Southern California's most famous placer diggings. Over the low ridge to the north of Big Bear, between that famous summer playground and the last outposts of the San Bernardino Mountains that overlook the desert, lies Holcomb Valley, which once held the largest voting precinct in San Bernardino county. For the decade or so that followed the discovery of gold in Holcomb in May, 1860, by W. R. Holcomb and Ben Ware, the valley was crowded with gold-seekers. Fifteen hundred miners dug and sluiced and panned in the gulches and fields. Nor did they take all of the gold. Today you may find a "color" almost anywhere in Holcomb. The richest gold deposits, however, lie on the bed rock and many feet of water-filled gravel overlie the granite, and safely hold the richest treasures of the valley. Until some scheme of dredging is devised to meet this condition, or until a tunnel drains the valley, Holcomb gold will remain safely held in the valley's heart.

Last week Harry Lord of the Lord Motor Car Company, Velie distributors, visited Holcomb Valley while on a trip to Big Bear, and he brings back word that it is a region well worth visiting. When you weary of fishing for nonexistent fish in Big Bear Lake, crank up your car and go hunting for forgotten history and romance over the ridge in Holcomb Valley, is the advice that the Velie distributor brings.

About midway along the road that circles the north shore of Big Bear Lake, the Holcomb Valley road branches off. An Automobile Club sign marks the road, which, for the most part, is in very good condition, though decidedly narrow. One steep grade might give a car less powerful than the Velie some trouble, but the Velie six surmounted it easily. At its summit the road drops again over a short decline, and you are in Holcomb Valley.

A wide green meadow, where a few cattle graze, is your first glimpse of Holcomb. In the days when the valley was a thriving gold producer, a race track ringed the meadow, and many an exciting horse race was held there for the miners to wager their dust upon. The town of Doble that lies east, toward Baldwin Lake, was named after Bud Doble, the famous horseman who was son-in-law of Lucky Baldwin.

A pair of gigantic wheels, almost thirteen feet in diameter, beside the road give evidence of the lumbering operations that were carried on in Holcomb in the early days when the mining work demanded timber. The log cabins that once sheltered the miners are vanished for the most part now, but remain, deserted and falling to ruin. Water-filled shafts, ditches to bring water for sluicing and endless piles of gravel that were laboriously "panned" by the crude outfits of the miners of the sixties give evidence of the extensive mining operations that were once carried on in Holcomb Valley.

On a blasted pine tree is to be seen a grim-appearing arm with a dangling rope. Whether it was the spot where early-day justice was fulfilled or not, tradition does not say, but certainly it would make an excellent gallows tree.

Harry Lord drove the Velie east through Holcomb Valley to where the road emerges at the summit of Gold Mountain, overlooking Doble. Here a wonderful panorama stretches below. The blue water of Baldwin Lake is rimmed with a narrow band of gleaming white alkali. North stretches the vast reaches of the Mojave, white and glaring under a summer sun. The view from this point is probably the most wonderful obtainable by motor car in the Big Bear region, and is alone well worth the trip.

"If you have a good car, by all means make the Holcomb Valley trip the next time you visit Big Bear," says Harry Lord. "We went down the Gold Mountain grade and returned to Big Bear by way of Baldwin Lake. It is a beautiful trip, and one full of interest. It is not necessary to retrace your steps a foot of the way, if you follow the road as we did, and it makes a most interesting trip to take during a sojourn at Big Bear."

LOCAL CARBURETER HAS A REPUTATION.

The great increase in the export business of a well-known truck manufactured in the East and one that is fabricated on the Pacific Coast and both of which use the Miller carburetor as regular equipment, has resulted in many export orders for this Los Angeles-made device, according to Milton H. B. Miller of the Harry A. Miller Manufacturing Company. "These trucks are shipped to China, Japan, Australia and South America. Those owing other motor driven vehicles in those countries have seen the Miller on the truck and have sent in orders for the carburetor," he said.

YOSEMITE TRIP POPULAR.

Figures compiled by Mack A. Erwin, Los Angeles manager for Camp Curry, Yosemite, since June 1, indicate, in no uncertain degree, the great increase in motor touring to that national park this season over that of last year. "If anyone had told me last spring that motorists would take to the road in such numbers this summer—and for such extended trips—I would have placed him in the column of those who should have their heads examined," he emphatically stated.

Since June 1, the Los Angeles Camp Curry office has booked 1832 reservations for that resort, and of that number about 90 per cent. have gone into the Yosemite by auto. Of this number about 40 per cent. represent motor tourists from other States, the majority coming from the Middle West States.

"We have noted that the greatest number of those we send into the valley from outside of California evidently come from Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas—prairie States. There has also been a goodly number from Texas and Arizona. In one party from the vicinity of Amarillo, Tex., there were twelve cars. Motorists of the Middle West have a longing for the ocean and the mountains. California offers them these and more," said Erwin.

SILENT THIRST KILLS BATTERY.

THIS IMPORTANT PART OF CAR IS UNABLE TO GIVE WARNING TO MOTORISTS.

At H. L. Arnold's battery department, the Arnold public service man who looks after the interests of all motorists, regardless of the make of their cars, says that fully 85 per cent. of all battery troubles come from a "silent thirst."

"If Southern California motorists could only understand—could know, as we know them here, the results of forgetting their thirsty battery, the savings banks would carry another million dollars every year, for that is what silent thirst costs in Los Angeles county alone. That seems like a big figure, but we have 100,000 cars in this county and they will average at least $10 a car, sacrificed needlessly because of a neglected battery, dying from silent thirst. If a battery is only partly 'dead,' our experts, schooled to detect the extent of damage, can remedy the trouble, if taken in time. That is the essence of the case, 'taken in time.' The longer the neglect, the more the cost, which the owner does not realize, because the battery does not give warning."

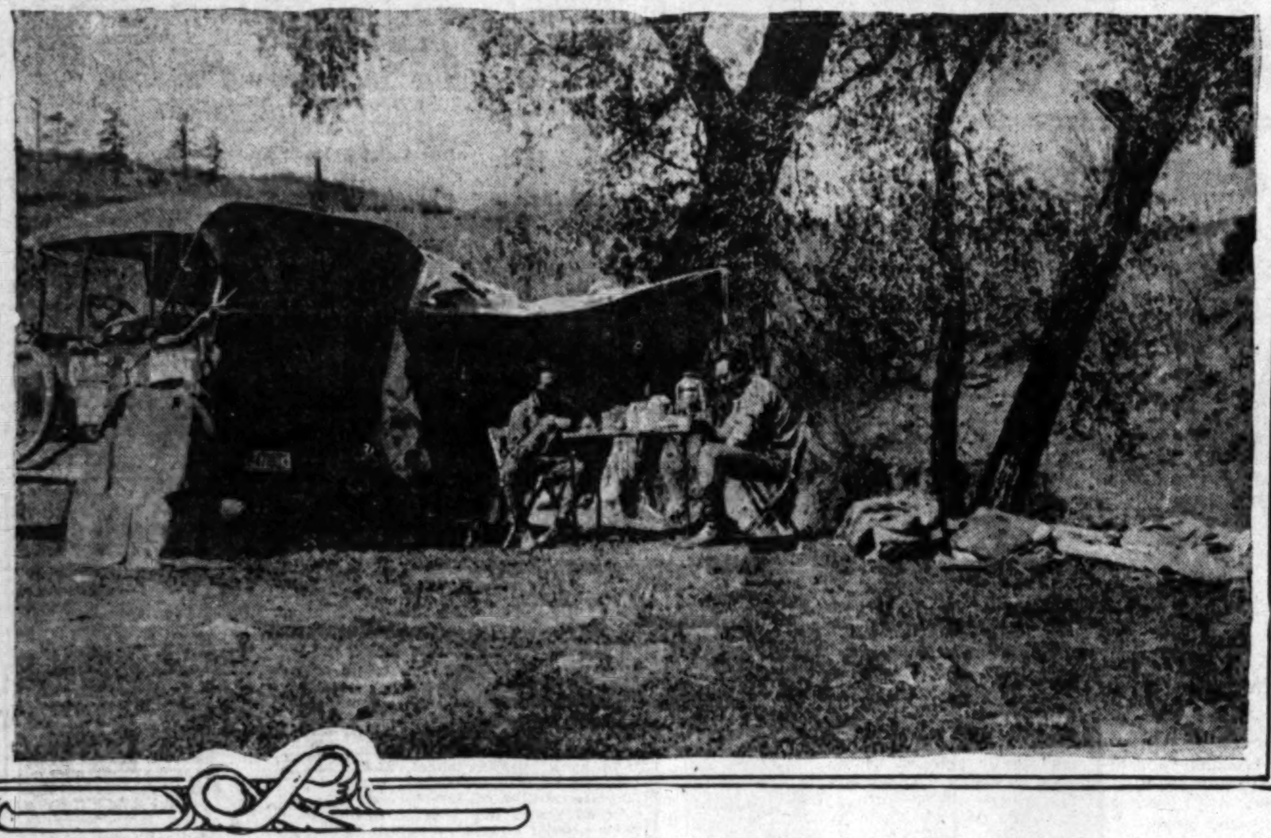
It proposed to revive this famous classic for this year, but automobile manufacturing conditions such that the men who be called upon to put the undertaking into action could not devote any time to it. Manufacturers have so many problems connected with production that require undivided attention that the cannot this year render the support that it merits.

C. McVey, Los Angeles representative for the Oakland car, has information to the effect it now appears almost certain Glidden tour will be run in and that the Pacific Coast be its destination. If there is desire upon the part of those in such events in Los Angeles will have to make known that this city is on the however, as the tentative plans time designate San Francisco the western terminus.

would be no reason, in McVey's opinion, why the automobile dealers could not get together on the matter and have the tour visit both Los Angeles and San Francisco. No matter which city is selected as the terminus it would not be advisable to omit the other entirely, he says. If it was the desire of the participants to end in San Francisco they could come to Los Angeles first, or if Los Angeles were chosen as the final destination, San Francisco could be reached over the Lincoln highway, and the cars then continue to this city.

TESTING THE MIXTURE.

If the mixture is suspected of being too rich, shut off the fuel in the tank and open the throttle. If the mixture passing into the cylinders is too rich the engine speed will increase as the level of gasoline in the float chamber is lowered, since this operation weakens the mixture considerably. If the mixture is thought to be too weak, the float chamber can be flooded while the engine is running, and if this causes the motor to speed up, it may be accepted as an indication that the mixture is not rich enough.



Camping Out on Their Transcontinental Journey.

Chaffee Grant and William A. Rettenmaier left for San Diego, May 6, and made the trip by Ford to New York, following the Santa Fe trail and arriving in New York, June 12. The two men camped on the way, having a full equipment, including gas cook stove, table and comfortable chairs and other equipment. William Rettenmaier went from New York south to Florida and New Orleans and is now on his way to San Diego. Grant is the son of U. S. Grant, Jr.

MOOCHERS TO BE DOWNED.

Motorists Who Want Everything and Contribute Nothing to be Swatted.

A national uprising with an eye to curbing the activities of "mooching motorists" is threatened among the motor clubs of the United States.

This action on the part of some thirty or forty wide-spread motoring organizations will definitely affect the touring activities of hundreds of thousands of automobile parties every year.

Free route information, guide signs and maps dispensed every year by automobile clubs throughout the country to all who may apply, regardless of whether or not they are members of a club, has led to the development of a "mooching" instinct which has become ingrained, say the officials of those clubs which are leading the revolt.

In New York State, and in the vicinity of Detroit, the antimoocher feeling has become most intense and from these points it threatens to spread broadcast.

Ohio motorists are the first to feel the sting of having the bars put up against their "free service to all comers" instinct, according to the Ohio Motorist, official organ of the Ohio State Automobile Association, which quotes the following spicy bit from the Autoist, official publication of the Utica club:

"The folks who think an automobile club is a good thing when information is wanted or help along the highway is desired, but not the sort of thing a man should invest in, are quite likely to see the error of their ways before long.

"The New York State Motor Federation will make every effort to get rid of the 'moocher.' A 'moocher' is the cheap sort of an autoist who sponges. He asks for touring directions and road information; he wants automobile clubs to see to it that Legislatures take care of his interests. He wants all the roads in the State posted so that he will not have to buy a map or a book. He wants someone to combat the speed traps. There is no end to the things he wants. But put an application blank under his nose and he will howl: 'I can't afford to belong to an automobile club.'"

The Detroit Motor News, published by the Detroit Automobile Club, is just as kindly disposed to the "free information hound" as is the New York federation.

Ohio motorists, it is pointed out, are between the fire and the deep sea so far as traveling between Michigan and New York is concerned, unless they belong to an automobile club and have their little old "exchange courtesy" cards in their hands while traveling.

Southern California, so far, is inclined to be a bit standoffish in the war against the get-it-for-nothing clientele that infests every public-spirited organization.

Western hospitality probably actuates the officials of the Automobile Club of Southern California when they stated yesterday that so far they had planned no action against the "moocher."

"In all justice to the members of the club, we do not feel that we should put up the bars against visiting motorists when they come to our touring bureaus for information, whether they belong to any other motoring club or not," stated Secretary S. L. Mitchell yesterday.

"The Automobile Club of Southern California always has acted as a sort of 'host' to the thousands of touring parties who cross the continent every year, and the club officials know that the members wish the touring bureaus put at the disposal of these visitors.

"However, it is a very different matter when a large number of local car owners begin to drop in on the club for information, maps and route service who are not members and never plan to be. They take up the time and energy of employees whose business it is to serve members and bona-fide visitors.

"While we do not ask for a presentation of membership cards over the touring bureau counters, it is a very easy matter to identify the habitual 'moocher' as he is called throughout the East, and he is charged for maps and printed matter commensurate with his demands."

It is alleged by the Detroit club that practically every "moocher" bites the hand that feeds him. In other words, he wants, always, to be directed over the best route, and then if he finds that route to be rough he blames the automobile club which directed him, and takes advantage of the fact to decry all motoring organizations.

Particular venom is saved for the type of "moocher" who, because a friend or a relative is a member of the club expects to receive the same amount of service that his friend is getting. This demand for service, complains Detroit, extends even to the legal departments of the clubs.

If the Southern California organization attempted to take the same care of all the members' friends and relatives as it does of its own members, it would have some 250,000 automobile owners besieging its doors regularly.

But Southern California is particularly free from "mocheritis," says Secretary Mitchell, a majority of car owners realizing that it is due to the enthusiasm and generosity of those who have supported the efforts of the automobile club that this part of the country is the best sign-posted and best "serviced" of any other section of the United States.

But beware, moochers, don't impose on your Southern California club—or the hand that feeds you may nip you!

INSURANCE FOR BATTERY A HIT.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY DEALER BRINGS RUSH FROM WILLING PURCHASERS.

The response that greeted the announcement last week of the Western Auto Electric Company that they would issue an insurance of eighteen months of satisfactory service from Willard Threaded Rubber batteries purchased from them left no doubt as to the popularity of the new policy.

"By the actual sales of new batteries and by the comments of hundreds of motorists who come in each day for service, we know that our new policy of battery insurance is something that is going to prove very satisfactory," said A. J. Tobey of the Western Auto Electric Company last week. "The idea of making a flat insurance of satisfactory service for a year and a half from a battery is something new in the battery world, and it should certainly indicate the remarkable degree of perfection which we have found in the Willard threaded rubber batteries. It is the ability of the threaded rubber type of battery to resist the various forms of abuse which the average battery does get that enabled us to make such an insurance of service."

DISTEEL WHEELS MUCH IN FAVOR.

IMPERIAL VALLEY RESIDENTS ARE ANXIOUS FOR EQUIPMENT ON THEIR CARS.

The new fashion in disc wheel equipment for motor cars, called the Disteel wheel, has a strong supporter in the person of G. R. Keith, manager of the Standard Steel Automotive Corporation, Los Angeles distributors for the Standard eight.

"The popularity this type of wheel has achieved in the Imperial Valley convinces me that it has a decided field of usefulness in this section of the country especially," said Mr. Keith last week. "No matter how carefully a wooden wheel is seasoned in the East, the intense heat and the excessively dry air of the Imperial country will loosen wooden spokes in the course of a few months' usuage. Then, Imperial Valley cars are frequently driven over the road to San Diego, and the side strains imposed by the miles of twisting mountain roads makes a loosened wooden wheel a hazard. Consequently, the Disteel wheel, with its all-metal construction, is proving decidedly popular in the Imperial country. Almost all of our orders from that territory are specifying that type of wheel."

GASOLINE LOGIC.

A simple but frequently forgotten precaution in regard to filling the gasoline tank is that the mouth of the gasoline can should be carefully wiped off before filling to remove any dust or dirt that may have lodged there. Otherwise, in the absence of a strainer the gasoline will carry the accumulated dust into the tank, and later there will be trouble with clogged pipes or carburetor.

SCRATCHES IN BODYWORK.

While a deep gouge in the car's body work will usually call for the attention of the coach builder, still the really skillful owner may be able, by running into the scratch beeswax and resin melted together, and then smoothing off the surface and repainting, to accomplish a satisfactory repair.

A HOT SPOT Chalmers Multiplies Its Friends

ONE Hot Spot Chalmers makes many friends. Those who own one like others to share the rare experience that goes with driving a Hot Spot.

This pleasure doesn't come solely from the reasons you might expect, such as, over-soft seats, a steering wheel at just the right pitch, generous, flat springs, or the like.

It comes from the engine—a new kind of power; not the terrific burst that you sometimes get from an immense engine, nor the roar that goes up when the "sporty" kind lets forth.

It's delicate, because you rarely hear it; it's soft, because it doesn't jar you; it's quick as lightning, for all you have to do is to touch the accelerator button gently.

The reason is found in Hot Spot and Ram's-horn. Let us explain these two great improvements to you.

Then take one ride; and you will remember it long.

THE SIDE OF THE TRUCK.

Statement on Behalf of Transportation on the Highways.

BY J. A. STONER,
International Mack Corporation.

In opposing the applications for permission to operate freight-carrying motor trucks between Los Angeles and San Bernardino before the Board of Public Utilities recently, the railroads through their representatives, presented the plea that the increased activity by freight-carrying trucks was jeopardizing railroad service in this part of the country.

Among other railroad representatives who opposed the grants was Paul Burks, legal representative for the Santa Fe Railroad. Mr. Burks is quoted as saying:

"The cumulative effect of competition of this character cannot do otherwise than deprive Los Angeles and vicinity of proper railroad service. This, I believe, is the attitude of all the rail carriers.

"This city requires a service that is dependable in all classes of weather, regardless of the price of gasoline or of rubber tires. A good, healthy competition, which is not ruinous, is beneficial to everybody, but if you are going to continue to extend this motor truck service, it can have but one effect, and that will be to cripple the rail carriers. It is a matter of far-reaching importance and one which I believe this board should consider with much care."

The attitude of the railroads in a matter of this kind cannot be but surprising to the general public. It is well understood that, for the most part, motor freight transportation in the vicinity of Los Angeles is largely in the nature of local business. For years we have heard from the railroads that they do not make money on "short hauls." Everyone in the shipping business knows that it costs more to send a shipment by rail a distance of fifty miles than it does to send a similar shipment 500 miles. That is in proportion to the distance the goods are transported.

It has not been many months since the Federal government was encouraging all sorts of shipment by motor rather than by rail. It may be said an emergency existed then owing to the great rush of freight and the inability of the railroads to cope with the situation. The railroads acknowledged they could not meet the issue. Now that the crisis has passed, the railroads are seeking to put out of business the same medium that they called upon frantically to come to their relief when they could not fill the bill themselves.

Furthermore, railroads have recognized the utility of the motor truck as a freight transportation medium and now are using them. They have learned truck operation is cheaper than many spur lines. When they solicit or accept shipments they do not tell shippers that trucks will transport the consignment a part of the distance. Evidently, trucks have proved their efficiency with railroads, but in the hands of private owners the price of tires or gasoline would prevent their operation.

To question the dependability of motor-truck freighting is very short-sighted upon the part of the railroads. There are freight trucks in operation over the highways of Southern California that never have been known to miss a trip. The idea of the weather or cost of supplies stopping them is absurd. As a matter of fact, should it happen that a truck was laid up on the road through accident, another truck can be dispatched to the scene and the cargo removed with very short delay. All of us know the long delays that follow accidents to railroad equipment. Some of us have had experience with cars in transit being set out because of a hot box, broken axle, or some other reason, and the shipment delayed, not for hours, but for days and even weeks.

Then, too, there are other things that we in Southern California remember. We can recall the regularity with which landslides occur in the winter and block railroad transportation. We may have had experience with tunnels being closed and when making a railroad trip having to be taken by motor stage on a detour around the point of trouble, but all the while riding on a railroad ticket. Freight shipments under such circumstances are delayed for days at a time. Yet, they say, motor truck shipment is not to be regarded as reliable. Probably the exception can be found in every line of transportation.

As to costs. Freight-carrying motor trucks operate cheaper than railroad trains and the rates to shippers are lower. It is the shipper and therefore the consuming public that benefits from this difference in rates. Would it be fair to the public to deprive it of the option of shipping by rail or by truck when there is a difference in rates? One truck will not transport the same load that one freight train will, but many trucks will accomplish the same end and evidently it is the desire of the railroads to restrict the number of trucks so that they will not have to meet such formidable competition.

The general traffic manager of one of the largest manufacturing concerns in the United States figured out what it costs them to ship freight by rail and truck between various eastern points. By computing the savings made in the preparation of the goods and the lack of delivery charges at both ends the vast difference in the costs of the two methods of transport was all in favor of the trucks. Certainly Los Angeles city's officials will not deny to Los Angeles shippers and the public at large the benefit from this difference in transport that is enjoyed by shippers and the public in the East.

And the railroads benefit in no small way from the automotive industry represented in Southern California, the very same industry they are striking at by trying to have the operation of trucks in competition with them locally restricted. At this time there are approximately 5000 motor vehicles, not counting tractors or motorcycles, being received in Southern California monthly. This represents a shipping charge of approximately half a million dollars that the railroads receive. The railroads must appreciate an income of about $6,000,000 from shippers of motor vehicles, but they would turn right around and prevent the public deriving its share of the benefit from that part of the income represented by truck shipments when these same trucks are put on the highways. Evidently, as reflected by their opposition to truck useage, the railroads do not wear the same size shoe on both feet.

GLYCERINE FOR RADIATOR.

Many car owners make a practice of using a small amount of glycerine in the cooling water during the summer, naturally not as an anti-freeze agent, but to keep down scale deposits. The glycerine in the radiator has a tendency to keep down scale and has long been used in steam boiler operation for this purpose. The proportions are one-half pint to each five gallons of water.

When a piece of work to be drilled is too small or of such shape that it cannot be bolted to the drill press table it can be kept from turning by putting under it a piece of stiff emery cloth.

NEED BETTER HIGHWA

The new State highway lateral that will connect Bakersfield with San Luis Obispo is a piece of highway improvement that is much needed at present, according to Ned Addams of the Lord Motor Car Company, who has just returned from a vacation tour that led him over some of the alleged roads that now connect the southwest end of the San Joaquin Valley with the coast. Addams spent part of his vacation up near the entrance to the Gen. Grant Park and then struck west across the San Joaquin Valley to Paso Robles on the Coast highway, and found some hot weather and some very bad roads as well in the course of his trip.

"Hauling the wheat harvest with heavy trucks and trailers has cut the roads in the region around Tulare Lake into bottomless ruts and chuck-holes," said Addams last week. "By going down to Stratford, and then west over a little-used road that connects with the Coalinga road, I found what I believe to be the best route across that portio valley. But it was no bo that, and when we reached the thermometer showed 1 shade. Traffic in Stolen Machines will not Then be Such a Cinch.

Seeking to stamp out the interstate traffic in stolen automobiles, and aiming to protect prospective buyers and dealers in motor vehicles, a new department has been established in connection with the theft bureau of the Pacific Coast Automobile Underwriters' Conference by Detective John W. Powell, manager of the Los Angeles division.

Arrangements have been made with the theft bureaus of the conference throughout the country and all police officers for the receipt of information regarding all automobiles reported stolen in any quarter of the United States.

This information will be filed and cross-indexed in the new department. The files will be open to all prospective buyers and dealers, who are urged by Powell to consult them and check up the engine, frame and other serial number of any machine, especially those bearing foreign-license plates. An expert will be in charge of the department and will assist applicants for information in determining the status of the title of any automobile.

The purpose of the conference officials in establishing the new department, Powell says, is to wipe out the transcontinental traffic in stolen automobiles and assist other police agencies in trapping those engaged in the unlawful traffic.

The information regarding automobiles stolen in other States will be copied for the State highway police, and an effort will be made by all police authorities to prevent the growing traffic and arrest members of the international thief gang on the highways.

Not only will information regarding automobiles stolen in other States be kept by the Los Angeles theft bureau of the conference, but the same co-operation which has been arranged for in every quarter of the United States will be given

Data regarding automobiles stolen here will be dispatched to the theft bureaus of the conference in every part of the United States, and to police officers in every community of the various districts of the conference.

By the interchange of information regarding stolen automobiles, the conference, which has become one of the great police organizations of the United States, expects to make it most difficult for the auto thief who steals a car in one State, takes it to another, secures an ostensibly, but fraudulent clear title to it, and then attempts to dispose of the stolen auto here, or in some other section of the country.

The new department will rival any similar departure in police work in the country, Powell says. The files will contain up-to-the-minute information regarding every stolen automobile in the United States, and will be one of the greatest assets of the prospective buyer and dealer in the automobile industry.

By consulting the officer in charge of the new bureau here, dealers and prospective buyers of automobiles, especially some cars bearing foreign-license number plates, will save themselves thousands of dollars and will avoid legal proceedings in many instances through identifying the "prospective buy" as a machine without a clear title.

HOW AUTO BODIES NAMED.

"The derivation of the various names by which the popular types of motor car are known is decidedly interesting. Coupe, sedan, limousine, touring car, roadster are the names by which the five chief types of cars are known and both the French and English language contributed to their naming," declares Walter H. Fisher, Haynes distributor for Southern California.

"The word coupe was originally applied to a closed carriage for two persons. It is derived from the French verb, meaning 'to cut,' and was so called because it gave the appearance of a larger carriage cut in half.

"The word 'sedan' is probably one of the oldest words applied to a vehicle for transportation. Sedans were at first portable inclosed chairs carried on two poles and they derived their name from the fact that they were first used in the French city of Sedan.

"'Limousine' was originally the name of a cloak worn in France and probably the name originated from the old province of Limousin in Central France. Just how it later came to be applied to the modern chauffeur-driven car is not quite clear.

"'Roadster' was first applied to vessels that worked their way by means of tides. Later it was applied to bicycles and more recently to two-passenger open cars.

"The touring car takes it name from the fact that it was the vehicle most frequently used on lengthy tours. Nowadays the closed types are frequently employed in long-distance trips. Dozens of Haynes owners of closed cars use them for all of their journeys and they seem to be growing decidedly in popular favor for all classes of usage."

CAR WITH LOCK IS "SAFE AS A SAFE."

Richard Coleman, sales manager for the Able Manufacturing Company, who is demonstrating the Able combination auto lock, says this combination auto lock is something absolutely different in locking devices. It is controlled by a combination, which is operated as readily in the dark as in the daylight. The lock, when installed, is right under the driver's hand, convenient to lock and unlock, and becomes a permanent part of the car. An interesting feature of the car is the patent one-way screw which clamps the lock around the steering column. The car, when locked, complies with all the city and fire department regulations.

Hupmobile

We believe that at the end of 100,000 traveled miles, the Hupmobile will have shown less cost for operation per mile than any other car of its price or anywhere near its price.

Although the unprecedented demand for the Hupmobile would consume four times the number the Hupp Motor Car Co. can manufacture at this time, that company has not taken advantage of the situation to make an unwarranted profit through raising the price of the comfort car.

Buy now before increased production cost forces the price upward.

PROVES SPEED IS COSTLY.

Speed costs money when you drive an automobile, as was shown by a series of interesting fuel consumption tests, just completed by Earle C. Anthony, Inc., the California distributor of the Dort line.

The Dort scout car, which is known all over California by the nickname of Cucumber Kate, was used for making the tests, to show the increased fuel consumption when a motor car is driven at higher rates of speed than 15 miles per hour.

Beginning at 15 miles per hour on a boulevard, which was comparatively level, and driving back and forth over a 5-mile course, it was found that the car would run 29.8 miles to a gallon of fuel. When the speed was increased to 20 miles per hour, the gallon would take the car for 27 miles only. At 25 miles an hour the distance was shortened to 25.8 miles for each gallon, while at 30 miles an hour 24 miles per gallon was the average obtained.

It was interesting to note during the tests that when the car was operated at 15 and 20-mile speeds most other cars on the boulevard passed Cucumber Kate, but at 25 miles an hour she held her own with the traffic, and at 30 passed every car on the road.

This would indicate that the public is accustomed to travel in the cities on good thoroughfares where the traffic is not dense at 25 miles per hour, which rate is usually permissable, but that few of the average drivers run close to the 30-mile mark on their speedometers.

Another interesting test was made on a well-paved street, with an average grade of 3 per cent., just enough downhill for the car to coast 15 miles an hour. On this road the car was started at the foot of the grade and driven at the rate of 15 miles per hour over a 1-mile course, then allowed to coast back to the starting point. When two quarts of fuel had been used the odometer showed 21.2 miles, an average of 42.4 miles per gallon.

Many motorists know that coasting saves gasoline, but few take advantage of it, for the reason that the safer way to drive is to allow the gears to remain in mesh at all times when traveling, as the engine affords a good brake, and in an emergency, when power is needed, to have a dead engine is sometimes embarassing, to say the least.

The mileage records that were made on the economy run from Los Angeles to Yosemite Valley the first of June were due largely to the fact that the drivers coasted every bit of the way that they could and conserved fuel by shutting off the motors. On this run the Dort averaged 24.4 miles per gallon, and was beaten by but two cars which consumed less fuel for the trip.

On a reliability run between Los Angeles and San Francisco of 906 miles for the round trip, the fuel consumption of the Dort was 22.2 miles per gallon at an average speed of 31.3 miles per hour.

Fuel economy is largely a matter of operation as many owners waste gasoline by permitting the motor to run idle for minutes at a time when not driving rather than use the electric starter, and others just naturally waste gasoline at all times by not being competent operators. Dragging brakes and lack of lubrication in the bearings throughout the car are other sources of waste, and it is usually found when a driver complains of low mileage per gallon that one or the other of the brakes is dragging.

SOLDIERS ASSEMBLE CARS.

When the transport of French soldiers, who left San Francisco six months ago, reached Vladivostock, they found on the docks one hundred crated Cadillacs that had been there during the cold months of the past winter. The mechanical force was immediately put to work setting up these cars and, according to the small party of blue devils who passed through San Francisco last week en route home, not one of these weather beaten cars failed to start as soon as the battery had been connected and fuel supplied.

Ten of the members of the company who left here six months ago for Siberia, returned last week. Among them are several who went over in the motor transport and aviation sections.

When the party left here they took with them fifty new Cadillac eight touring cars for use of the French forces, and when they reached Vladivostock, according to Sergt. R. Deligny, they found one hundred more Cadillac cars that had been laying in crates on the docks at the Russian-Siberian port. These Cadillacs had been ordered by the old Russian government, but had been taken over by the French forces. It was the work of the force, which went from here last February, to set up these cars and get them into service throughout Siberia. The men, who had previously taken considerable instruction in the Don Lee shop in San Francisco under Master Mechanic T. J. Beaudet, went to work on the Cadillacs and for fifty days averaged three cars a day. Although some of these cars had been exposed to the Siberian weather for six months, Deligny stated that not one of the one hundred and fifty cars failed to start when the batteries were put in and the engine turned over. The French mechanics returned full of enthusiasm over this wonderful demonstration. The cars were immediately sent out to all parts of Siberia, some as far as 600 miles inland. Many were run over the roadless country while those to the most distant points were shipped. This proved rather precarious as thieves were busy along the railroad, and when the destination was reached, in some of the freight cars there was nothing left of the Cadillacs but the frames. According to the French soldiers the Cadillac is the only American car used by the French army—at least these men who have seen active service on the French front never saw any other make.

"There are no roads in Siberia worthy of the name," said Deligny. "The towns have one main street and after leaving the towns it was a case of build your own road or cut out across country. The mud was terrible, being up to the hubs of all vehicles.

"Siberia is a country with a wonderful future. There are undeveloped mines and a great deal of oil. In places we saw coal sticking out of the ground."

The small party will leave for France Monday. They were in receipt of advices from abroad that the standardized method of production, such as is employed in the Cadillac plant, is being adopted in France.

LIGHT TRUCKS POPULAR.

"The heavier truck, running on solid tires, travels between ten and twelve miles an hour," said L. V. Starr, manager of the J. W. Leavitt Company, distributors of the Oldsmobile economy truck, in discussing the modern transportation problem the other day, "while the Oldsmobile truck," he continued, "fitted with pneumatic cord tires, will maintain twenty to twenty-five. The extra speed and power operating costs enable two trips to be made at less expense than one trip with the heavy truck.

"Due to its superior speed and road ability, the Oldsmobile economy truck can transport a given tonnage in a given time at lower cost than the heavier truck. This factor, together with the comparative lightness, marked economy in repair and maintenace costs and low fuel consumption of the Oldsmobile three-quarter-ton truck have made for it an enviable place in the modern business world.

"Despite the fact that I have kept close watch of the development of the modern truck it was surprising recently to glance over a list of some of the users of our trucks and find the wide range of service to which it has been found adapted."

To illustrate his point Mr. Starr ran over the following list of industries which are now using the Economy truck: Department stores, bakeries, cleaners and dyers, grocers, meat, poultry and egg dealers, creameries, public service repair and service wagons, linemen's supply wagons, florists, furniture dealers, house and sign painters, building and plumbing contractors, electrical contractors, transfer and storage concerns, laundries, drug dealers, cigar merchants, hotel and interurban buses, tire and accessory dealers, lumber merchants, orchardists, poultry and dairy farmers, truck gardeners, hive and box factories, bee farmers, seed and plant dealers, paper and stationery houses, news agencies, post-office and rural mail service, hay, grain, coal and wood dealers, soft drink bottlers, express companies, oil refineries and canneries. There were many other uses, he declared, to which the light truck was peculiarly fitted, but those enumerated give a good idea of the innumerable services to which such a "speed wagon" may be adapted.

CUTTING IN IS VERY DANGEROUS.

Some of the most serious accidents on the highways of recent date have been caused by "cutting in" on the part of motorists, state officials of the Automobile Club of Southern California, and that organization is going to take steps to see that the habit is stopped.

An automobile overtaking another vehicle must pass that vehicle on the left at an increased rate of speed and must not assume the right-hand side of the road in front of the overtaken vehicle until it is a "reasonable distance" ahead.

This "reasonable distance" means a distance which is long enough to be safe. If the motorist "cuts in" ahead too soon he is liable to arrest.

And he is going to be arrested, too, according to the Auto Club's reports from county traffic officers throughout the State. Don't "cut in" in the future if you want to avoid trouble, warns the club.

COIL SPRINGS TAKE RIPPLE FROM ROAD.

"Modern concrete roads, with asphaltic surface, or surfacing of heavy oil, furnish rather a new problem for the spring designer who seeks utmost comfort for the automobile passenger," declares S. Minnice, manager of the Los Angeles store of the Western Auto Supply Agency. "Bumps and chuck-holes are rather rarely encountered nowadays in Southern California it is true, but frequently the road surfacing becomes "rippled" enough to impart a very annoying vibration to cars driven over it rapidly. That is something that it is almost impossible to overcome without the use of auxiliary coil springs. An automobile spring that would be flexible enough to smooth out these small unevenesses of the road surface would be entirely too flexible when a really rough road was encountered. For that reason, we have noticed a growing popularity in the use of the coil spring shock absorbers of the Johnson type."

TRUCK EXPERT IS ON INVESTIGATION.

Mr. Wayne, manager of the Los Angeles Firestone Ship-by-Truck Bureau, left Sunday morning for Bakersfield, where he will conduct an investigation of the hauling of wheat by motor truck. He will also investigate the use of trailers in the farming industry. These investigations are in line with the ship-by-truck bureau activities all over the country. The different bureaus are making separate investigations of the use of trucks in hauling products of all kinds in this country.

SEES AMERICA BY COWPATH.

Englishman Gets Little Rest Touring by Motorcycle.

Says Cycling is Now King of Sports in England.

Kicks About American Roads; Hasn't Seen California.

[From the Kansas City Star.]

"Roads? What roads? I haven't seen any roads. I have been following a place where cows had been walking."

That is the declaration of an English motorcyclist touring America. He came to America for the tour as a "rest" after serving with the Royal Air Forces in the war. Capt. C. H. Shepherd of the Royal Air Force, Birmingham, Eng., was in Kansas City today and wrote the following impression of this country's highways:

To attempt to describe any except a minute fraction of my impressions in America in a few hundred words would be folly. Some day, when I find myself back in England, that is, if I survive the American roads, I am going to sit down for three solid months and write a detailed history of my travels and experiences in this wonderful country of yours "across the duck pond." Many a worthy American citizen has predicted that I shall never see England again, and on many an occasion, when for the tenth time that day I have extricated myself and the machine from the ditch and examined myself for bruises and cuts after a "header," I have thought the same way about it!

To be more explicit, I am on my way from coast to coast on a motorcycle—of all things. Now there is a very big difference between motorcycling here in American and in England. In England everyone rides a motorcycle, men and women alike—office boys, journalists, business men, "city" men, millionaires, lords, dukes and princes. In fact motorcycling is now the king of sports in England, and the most popular way of spending a holiday is to tour the country on a motorcycle. But in America it is different. Only the mad brained young "blood" who doesn't mind whether he is graduated for the lunatic asylum or the county hospital would think seriously of risking his neck on a motor cycle tour.

"ROADS? WHAT ROADS?"

When at some town or village on the way I stop to quench a legitimate thirst and I am met with numerous inquiries as to the roads, I respond: "Roads? What roads? I haven't seen any roads. I have been following a place where a cows had been walking." Roads are my only real sore point about America. At present I am recuperating from the effects of them. My starboard leg has to be kept permanently straight until further orders, and a square inch or so of good English epidermis is missing from my forehead as a result of a gigantic hole in the road some ten miles north of Kansas City.

"Of course (I hear someone saying,) it is all very well for this Englishman to come to our country and complain to us about our roads Let him stick to his own country." Quite right. I shouldn't complain, but do you Americans realize what a tremendous lot you're losing through bad roads and how much your commerce is being hampered and your motor car and motorcycle industry is being stinted on account of them?

IMPRESSIONS OF "SPEED COP."

Another decidedly definite "impression" is the American "speed cop." I thought that England was the only place cursed (or blessed) with them. I succumbed to the energies of a "speed cop" before I had been in the country two days. The kindly old "judge" left me with just twenty-six cents in my pocket wherewithal to buy me food and gasoline for the next four hundred miles! Even that didn't amuse me half so much as the unceremonious way in which it was done. In England, if anyone is unfortunate enough to be arrested for speeding, there is a great fuss made. You receive a summons politely requesting you to be at the assizes, or the high court, or whatever it happened to be, on a certain date, sometimes weeks ahead. When the hour arrives you feel almost proud as you walk up the marble steps of the law courts. In the court you are made speechless by the constables in their brilliant uniforms, by the reporters who are there as silent recorders of your fate, by the throng of faces in the public gallery come to witness your condemnation, and last but not least, by the awe-inspiring judge who deigns to look upon you. Finally you feel that it was really worth while for the experience when, after much argument, persuasion and deliberation, you are relieved of five shillings and costs!

But not so in America. You have an altogether different way here. You are doing, say, forty-five. A man asks you to stop and leads you to the local judge. He takes your money and out you go onto the road again!

How many hundred times have I heard the eternal question. "Where are you from?" Of late I have referred people to the number plate. The other day I had been fighting my way along through endless mud for hours in the full heat of the baking sun. It was real hard work, "paddling" that heavy machine along through the ruts, up hill and down dale. I was all but exhausted and soaking in perspiration. Just as I had successfully negotiated a difficult part of the road I struck a rut edgewise and the machine landed on top of me in the hedge. A young fellow in a car near by got out, came over, and said, "Say, fella, do you have any trouble with your back cylinder getting hot?"

However, I shall never regret having started on this trip. America is a beautiful country and I have not seen a fraction of its beauty yet. To travel across America has for years been one of my ambitions and undoubtedly one can see more of any country by traveling it by road. Once America has good roads there will be nothing to prevent an American seeing and knowing his own country the some as the Englishman now sees and knows his.

Berlin Cigarettes Triple Value.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

BERLIN, June 15.—The illicit trade in cigarettes has grown to such proportions in Berlin that the authorities are considering a campaign against profiteers who sell them for double and treble their value. Cigarettes now have become so scarce that one of ordinary quality readily commands 15 cents and, while the price is plainly marked on each cigarette, they are daily sold in the streets by peddlers for much higher prices.

GALVESTON PLANNING TO RISE ABOVE SEA.

ENGINEER SUBMITS TWO LEVELS; CITY WAITS ON THE GOVERNMENT.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

GALVESTON (Tex.) July 27.—In a report to the City Commission on the probable cost of raising the grade of Galveston so as to place the city above the danger line of overflow from the Gulf in time of severe tropical storms, John H. Gernand, Commissioner of Streets and Public Property, and Charles A. Holt, Jr., City Engineer, submitted two suggested grade levels without recommendation as to which should be adopted.

One of the suggestions is that the city be elevated by an eight-foot fill over the entire area of the city. The estimated cost to the city, not including the expense to the property owners for this fill, would be approximately $15,000,000, according to City Engineer Holt. The second plan is that the downtown portion of the city be elevated to 11.4 feet and 10 feet above mean low tide. The two levels are necessary to insure proper drainage, it was pointed out. The cost to the city of this fill would be approximately $5,000,000, according to City Engineer Holt. The railroad tracks and property and the wharves would not be raised by this proposal.

It is probable that the City Commission will defer final action upon the pending propositions until the board of United States engineers, which is now making a similar survey, shall have submitted its report to Congress.

ENGLAND MAY LIFT AUTOMOBILE DUTY.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, June 17.—The automobile section of the American Chamber of Commerce in London has made representations to the British Board of Trade with the view to having the import restrictions on American motor cars further relaxed if not entirely removed. At present the importation of motor vehicles and parts thereof is limited to 50 per cent. of the 1913 imports up to September 1, 1919, in proportionate monthly quantities.

Sir Aukland Geddes, president of the Board of Trade, informed the automobile importers that, no increase in imports could be allowed at present owing to the necessity of guarding the future of sterling exchange on America.

Sir Aukland said that the Board of Trade could not consider any one trade or industry by itself, but must look at everything with a view to the best interests of the nation. From this point of view the matter of maintaining Great Britain's financial position and therefore the position of her exchanges was the essential consideration.

The American Chamber of Commerce here announces, however, that the government has promised to review the entire import and export position on September 1, and that the Board of Trade has agreed to a concession in favor of importers not represented in 1914, but who have since established sizable business dependent on automobiles from America.

Why Demand Continues to Outstrip Production

You are doubtless familiar with the situation surrounding Goodyear Tires, and our difficulty in supplying promptly the enormous demand for them.

Possibly you yourself, in anticipation of your future requirements, have deemed it wise to place a reservation order with your Goodyear dealer.

It is likely you have wondered, why, with a production enlarged beyond any previous figure, such precaution to insure getting Goodyear Tires should be necessary.

Surely it is a strange condition, that despite such production and the intelligent competition of the manufacturers of some 300 other brands of tires, Goodyear Tires should continue to be oversold.

The true explanation of this condition concerns no other thing than the remarkably fine service Goodvear Tires everywhere deliver to users.

You people who have used Goodyear Tires know by how uniformly generous a margin this service exceeds that commonly given by ordinary tires.

To those who have not used them, we wish especially to emphasize that the present unmatched popularity of Goodyear Tires rests wholly on the merit they embody.

No fictitious discounts, no delusive guarantees, no expedients of any sort have been employed to stimulate artificially the favor they normally command.

At present we are devoting our whole energies to the problem of fulfilling as soon as possible every call for our product that may arise.

For months past, the production of our Akron factories has approximated 25,000 finished tires per day, while the daily output of our Canadian plants has well exceeded 2,000.

Work is already under way, now, for the establishment of a plant in Los Angeles which will allow us several thousand tires additional daily volume.

These figures, representing by far the largest tire production in the world, reflect with what earnestness we are endeavoring to make Goodyear Tires easy to get everywhere.

RALPH DE PALMA AS A POLICEMAN

Famous Speed King Now a Full-Fledged Captain.

Holds that Rank in New York Motor Police Corps.

Performs in Fast Car on Great Speedway Course.

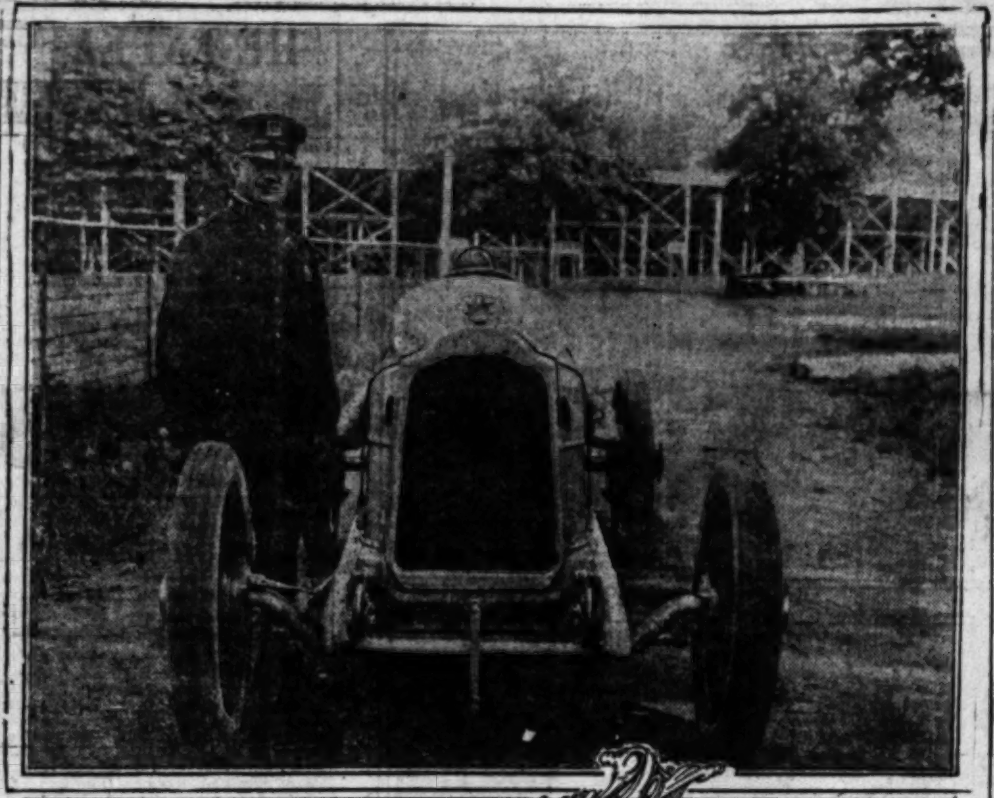
[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

NEW YORK, July 19.—Ralph De Palma and the "fastest car in the world" have been ordered to report for police duty this afternoon. De Palma is now a full-fledged captain in the New York Police Motor Corps, having been sworn in recently by the chief and founder of that organization, Maj. Fred Cardway.

Attired in the full uniform of a police captain, De Palma will pilot the famous aviation motored Packard "905" around the track at Sheepshead Bay at record speed for the entertainment of visitors at the police field day. This is the car with which De Palma made the sensational speed of 150 miles an hour and also broke the world's records for every distance from one kilometer up to and including twenty miles at Daytona Beach, last February. Although nominally "under orders," De Palma, who has many times refused large sums to appear at speedways, has volunteered his services for the benefit of dependents of deceased and incapacitated policemen of New York.

Prior to the event at Sheepshead Bay the Police Motor Corps and about 400 guests will take luncheon with Mayor Hylan at the Waldorf Astoria. The Police Motor Corps is composed of some of New York's most prominent business men, and at the luncheon all will be in full police uniform. Later they will transport the guests to Sheepshead Bay, led by Maj. Cardway in his new $10,000 car.

The New Motor Transport Corps is made possible by the public spirit of its members, who are under orders to supply transportation with their cars for police use in cases of emergency, regardless of the hour of day or night. One of the members offered the use of forty of his motor trucks in case of emergency.



No Chance to Get Away from this Speed Cop.

This is Ralph de Palma in his uniform as a captain in the New York City motor police. He uses his 150-mile-an hour Packard to catch speeders, or he would if he were called upon to do so by the Chief.

VACUUM SYSTEM ON MOTORBOATS.

Glass-bottom boats at Catalina Island are employing the Stewart vacuum system for heavy engines with great success, according to N. M. Smith of the local Stewart products service station on West Pico street. The fuel supply for the engines of these boats is carried as low as possible, in order to make the boats more seaworthy, and the matter of elevating the fuel to the carburetor of the motor was always a considerable problem, until the development of the Stewart heavy-duty vacuum system. Pressure systems proved unsatisfactory for the same reasons that led to their abandonment on practically every motor car made," said Mr. Smith last week. "The first Stewart vacuum systems that were made were eagerly tried in order to try and find some substitute for the unsatisfactory pressure feed."

"When the Boss has a load to get out on the job, I want a good truck to handle it. A truck with plenty of power to make the grade. That's one of the best things about this Diamond T—she's a bear for power. The Diamond T engine is there every time and never gives me a bit of trouble."

CAR SHORTAGE VERY REAL.

Even the automobile buying public is coming to realize that the shortage of automobiles is real and that the situation is one that can not be solved by simply laying down the money on the counter and insisting on immediate delivery.

Many a skeptical would-be purchaser who has held that the shortage of automobiles was just pure bluff has received a severe set back when he tried to get immediate delivery on the car that the wife approved or that he had set his heart on. And many an automobile distributor has found himself in the sad position of having to turn away ready to make immediate payment hands or with check book out reday to make immediate payment.

"This has been a trying season for the automobile distributor as well as for the automobile buying public," said Walter H. Fisher, distributor for Haynes cars, yesterday." Pleading with the factory for cars to meet the demand has become a habit with us and fulfillment an unheard of joy.

"However, cars are now en route and several shipments will arrive next week. The factory salesmanager advises me that both light sixes and light twelves in open models are included in the shipment for us. These cars will arrive next week, and will immediately be put on display."

ARE SELLING CARS FAST.

They're selling Hupmobiles "over the counter" down at the Greer-Robbins company, according to "Billy" Williams, sales manager of the Hupmobile retail department of this large distributing concern, who said;

"It's a fact! Who'd have thought a year ago that we'd be selling cars this way and, before making the sales, inform the purchasers that they must wait until the Hupmobiles arrive from the factory? It is no longer an infrequent occurrence to sell a Hupmobile over the telephone and without any demonstration, and sales are also made on the floor and without the purchaser requesting a demonstration. If that isn't selling automobiles 'over the counter,' I don't know what it is.

"Although the Hupp factory is now producing more Hupmobiles than it ever has, and although we are probably getting our quota of the plant's output, we are utterly unable to anywhere near keep order books clean. As fast as Hupmobile shipments reach us new orders set us back as far as we were before. With production increasing at the factory, we hope that by fall, or perhaps by early winter, we will be able to once more make immediate deliveries."

MAY BUILD STEEL MILLS.

Detroit dispatches of July 29 carried a story of the purchase of a tract of 278 acres of west river front land in that city by Dodge Brothers. More than $2,000,000 was paid for the property, according to the advices from Detroit, which stated that it was generally believed that the purchaser foreshadowed the erection of huge blast furnaces and rolling mills by the Dodge Brothers.

No information concerning the plans of Dodge Brothers for their new property has yet been received by the Albertson Motor Car Company, their Los Angeles representatives. Dodge Brothers recently received more than $24,000,000 in cash through the sale of their interest in the stock of the Ford Motor Company, and it has been generally believed in motor car circles that the addition of this sum to their working capital would mean an enlargement of the already huge facilities of the present Dodge plant.

"If it is true that the Dodge Brothers have purchased this big tract of water front land, I imagine that it means that they will enter the manufacture of iron and steel," said Fred Albertson last week in discussing the Detroit dispatch. "They are tremendous buyers of iron and steel, and it is a noticeable tendency of the great manufacturing companies of today to seek to control their own sources of raw materials. The Goodyear Rubber Company, with cotton plantations in the Salt River Valley, and rubber plantations in the East Indies, is a good example of what I mean."

A SHORTAGE IN TRUCKS.

Destined to haul "hot stuff"—asphalt ready for laying on streets or road beds—and to do other heavy duty work, a five-ton Atterbury truck was delivered last week by the Frank O. Renstrom Company, Atterbury distributors for California, to N. O. Harmon, contractor, who will add it to his fleet of trucks.

"The Atterbury Motor Car Company of Buffalo. has been engaged in scientific truck building for ten years and from front bumper to tail the Atterbury in every detail represents the best material and engineering skill that money can buy. This truck is made in one and one-half, two, three and one-half and five-ton capacities," said "Bob" Planck, salesmanager of the Renstrom organization.

"Not so long ago it was not a difficult matter to get trucks. The supply far exceeded the demand because the economic value of the truck was not appreciated by many a business man. Those days have passed into history and now there is an actual shortage of that class of trucks so much in demand," he said.

"California is already one of the most important truck fields in this country—if not in the world—and as our highway system is increased, and which it will be as fast as the work can be done, it will take higher rank in the truck world. The number of trucks in a locality is generally an index to its commercial importance. At this time we can make fairly prompt deliveries of Atterburys."

EX-KAISER IRRITATED AT TERMS IN CHANGES.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

AMERONGEN, June 15.—The former German Emperor displayed marked irritation after reading the clause of the peace treaty in which the Allies announced their intention of putting him on trial on charges of violation of international morality and of the sanctity of treaties. For several hours after he had read the clause no one at the castle of Amerongen had the courage to approach him. He sat in a chair before the main entrance to the castle entirely alone and apparently in deep thought, while the former Empress, Auguste Victoria, and the members of his suite walked in the grounds, occasionally glancing in his direction.

Next day he seemed to be in a state of nervous agitation, for he frequently ceased his sawing and walked away, leaving those who assist him to continue the work alone. Later, however, he resumed with increased energy, so much so that one of his assistants was forced to take to his bed for some days in order to recover from a chill caught while perspiring at the other end of the saw.

Subsequently the dull life at the castle resumed its ordinary dullness and since the first display of annoyance Count Hohenzollern has shown few signs of being much affected by the conditions of the peace treaty.

The former Emperor has sawn his four thousandth log and it is asserted by some of his retainers that he intends to bring the number up to 10,000. The logs which now form a large heap are placed in piles to dry in preparation for use as fuel in the castle next winter.

Webster says it's "a scene or source of joy in monotony and dreariness." The City Life Committee of the Methodist centenary celebration, appointed to select a substitute name for saloon, says it's the substitute.

Centenary authorities in charge of the contest say the new word is destined to shine from the soft drink emporiums the world over.

PANTS FAIL TO GET ATTENTION.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

REDLANDS, Aug. 2.—The proper garb for women motorists going to the mountains has been established. No longer do the men of this city stare when they see a pretty woman tripping down the street with riding breeches, high boots, flannel shirt and broad hat. They are too common. It is uncommon now to see the women mountain motorists wear the divided skirts that were once the thing, just as it is uncommon to see the old-style bathing suits with the all-enveloping skirts. Some of these "breeches," especially when well filled, are worth seeing.

HAVE LONG WAIT FOR THEIR CARS.

INDEPENDENCE DEALERS HERE FOR FIVE DAYS TO GET PAIR OF AUTOMOBILES.

After having waited in the city for five days, S. C. Miller and F. L. Jobes, who compose the firm of Miller & Jobes of Independence, left last Tuesday for their homes driving two Grant sixes, that were part of a large shipment which had been delayed in transit between the factory and this point, and which was consigned to the Frank O. Renstrom Company, Grant distributors for California. Miller & Jobes, well-known dealers in their territory have added the Grant to the lines now handled by them.

"Although we have constant requests for Grants in territory more near at home and although our deliveries must, because of necessity, be delayed, we couldn't turn down the Independence boys," said J. C. (Bob) Planck, sales manager of the Los Angeles branch of the Renstrom organization.

STILL USE CLEVELAND'S DESK.

The old flat top desk used by Grover Cleveland when he was Sheriff in 1872 has been taken out of the Sheriff's office at the City and County Hall and sent to the repair shop, being replaced by a modern rolltop desk. The old desk had been in use since 1872.

The original desk used by Cleveland when he was Mayor of Buffalo still is in use in the Mayor's office today. It, too, is a flat top.

"They made furniture to last in those days" William F. Fisher, superintendent of the City Hall, said. "Most of the tables, desks and chairs in the hall today are the same with which the building was originally furnished. Where city or county officials have preferred more modern types, they have been supplied by the Trustees, but the old stuff is as good today as it was forty-five years ago, and with care it ought to last forty-five years longer. It is made of black walnut and has lasting qualities."—[Buffalo Express.

M. A. Leach Presents the Leach Power-Plus Six
—A Los Angeles Built Motor Car

As a manufacturer's representative and as a dealer in motor cars for years, M. A. Leach studied and learned the wants of the motoring public—for two years he worked to perfect his plans—and today, the Leach "Power-plus" Six is his answer.

It is a Los Angeles built motor car—built to meet the ideas and needs of the California motorist—a luxurious custom built automobile with de Luxe top and patent sliding curtains and sliding glass that combines the utility of an open car with the exclusiveness of the closed one, with the advantage of light weight and economy of upkeep.

In the Leach Power-plus Six such freedom is permitted in the selection of paint colors that it becomes a personal expression of the owner's individuality and good taste. The distinguished body lines serve to accentuate the beauty and ultra refinement of the car ensemble with its unique features and unusual equipment.

You have a choice of two models—a Speedster and a Sport car de Luxe—each a typical expression of what its name implies.

Every mechanical unit of the Leach is standardized—Continental Motor of 60 horsepower, Timken Axles, Brown-Lipe Transmission, Borg & Beck Clutch, Fedder's Radiator, Westinghouse Starting and Lighting and Presto-Lite Battery—an owner can get parts anywhere he goes.

A cordial invitation is extended to the Southern California Motoring Public, their friends and to the Motor Trade to call and inspect this Los Angeles built masterpiece, the Leach Power-plus Six.

AMERICA again has called upon the power and resource of her motor trucks—this time to catch-up her war-interrupted building program.

Just as the nation's calls for war-supply and food-supply were answered, so this newest call is being answered by the combined strength of thousands of trucks.

Nothing but the motor truck matches the speed of steam-shovel excavation. No other carrier is adequate to modern building methods.

Thousands of Federals are making good for builders—giving always that complete satisfaction which has brought from the public an ever increasing demand for more.

"Shorten the miles to market—build better roads."

"Federal Traffic News," a magazine of modern motor haulage, will be sent free on request to responsible executives.

A Pair of Very Interesting Automobiles.

One of them is the Templar recently driven to this city by Prof. E. C. Woodruff of Penn State College, who crossed the continent in it. The other photograph shows the new Dorris six which has just been received by Mr. Russell and will be distributed by him. He says that it is even better than it looks.

USES CAR FOR VACATION.

An unusually long overland trip was completed last week by Prof. E. C. Woodruff of the State College of Pennsylvania when he arrived in Los Angeles in a four-passenger Templar touring car with a total mileage of 4895 miles to the car's credit since June 20. He was accompanied by Dr. T. W. Galloway of Beloit, Wis.

The route followed from the State seat of learning of Pennsylvania was through Cleveland and South Bend to Chicago. From the Windy City the pair traveled to St. Paul and from that point followed the Yellowstone trail to Seattle. From the Washington city they toured south by way of Olympia, Tacoma, Portland, Oakland and over the coast route to Los Angeles.

Woodruff stated that practically no paved roads were encountered until California was reached. The Yellowstone trail through Montana and Dakota, he said, was good, as a whole. There were certain stretches in very bad shape and he and his companion passed many cars with broken axles or in other difficulties. One tortuous piece of road was through a forest where trees had been cut down to make a roadway. The stumps remained and it was necessary to do corkscrew driving to negotiate the distance.

"The Yellowstone trail and the organization working in its interest were one of the pleasant suprises of the long grind. The organization maintains offices of information in all of the larger cities from Minneapolis to Seattle and has representatives in all of the smaller ones, all of whom are at the command of the motorist for any possible service," he said.

"The following is an illustration of the character of this service: A few miles east of Aberdeen, S. D., the spare tire carrier broke and three tires and spare wheel were lost. The Yellowstone office at Aberdeen communicated with other offices within a radius of thirty miles of Aberdeen, inserted advertisements in the local papers and two weeks later found the lost tires and spare wheel. They then paged our car through Montana, much as an individual is paged in a hotel, and finally located us at Bozeman and the articles were shipped to us at Spokane upon request. It is that class of service that appeals to the motorist in a strange land and far from home."

According to Woodruff, the average gasoline consumption of the Templar for the entire trip was 17.5 miles per gallon. Oil was changed four times, making an average of 213 miles to one quart of oil. The efficiency of the Templar motor was proven to his satisfaction, he stated. In the Yellowstone National Park, where several days were passed, its cool-running qualities were very much in evidence. It was unnecessary in that high altitude to stop at any of the water stations to refill the radiator, which was evidently neccessary for other cars to do, judging by the number that were observed at those points. Woodruff is an active member of the Lincoln Highway Association. In his Templar he will tour to the Yosemite this month, and, returning, remain in Southern California until fall.

TIRES STAND HEAVY DUTY.

"If tires could only speak I'll bet the first thing they'd do would be to yell for help." This is what E. M. Porter, who has just returned to Los Angeles, had to say by way of preface in describing a trip cross country to Dodge City, Kas., during which his party averaged 200 miles a day over what Porter brands as the most miserable roads in the West.

There are not many motorists who would care to drive over thirty-five miles of road literally covered with sharp-pointed rocks, but this is what the senior member of Porter and Brown, local tire men, did. Not that alone, but he piloted the car from Holbrook, Ariz., to Gallup, N. M., with both front wheels wobbling and toeing out instead of in, the result of rough roads.

In the party with Mr. Porter were his wife and son and Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Maguire. "We wanted to see the country along the Santa Fe trail," Mr. Porter said, "and we didn't miss a foot of it. Starting out with our touring car equipped all the way around with Globe handmade, wrapped tread tires we went all the way through on them and you'd never know from the tires themselves that we had ever left California's paved boulevards.

"It was my own method of putting to the test a tire that I am boosting as the most satisfactory one on the market. I actually tried to break it down, but it defied my efforts.

"We headed straight from Los Angeles for Needles and then proceeded on through Kingman, Flagstaff and Holbrook, Ariz., thence through Gallup and Albuquerque, N. M., through Rattoon Pass and on up into Trinidad, Colo., and from there to Dodge City."

Similar stories of performance are being received almost every day by Hawley, King & Co., Globe Tire distrubtors. Especially gratifying to H. H. Anderson, sales manager, are the reports from the Kern county oil fields. "Everyone knows that oil is a natural enemy of rubber, and while we have sold through our Bakersfield dealers an unusually large number of Globe Tires we have yet to receive a single complaint on them and this notwithstanding there is hardly any way of avoiding oil in the neighborhood of Bakersfield."

MOTORISTS LIKE TO USE SAME MAKE.

NOW TAKE A LOT OF PRIDE IN HAVING OWNED MANY MODELS OF ONE KIND.

Once having satisfied himself that a motor car of a particular make is best adapted to his pleasures and requirements the experienced owner no longer makes frequent changes. It formerly was the custom for motorists, who regarded it as necessary in their idea of progression, to change the make of car they were driving every season. Now motorists pride themselves on the number of cars of one certain make they have owned and usually rejoice in telling how far they have driven them.

This same situation proves true of motor tires, in many instances, according to Grove Hill, traveling sales representative for the J. B. Wood Tire Company, distributors of Hewitt tires and tubes. In covering his territory Mr. Hill says he has encountered a number of tire consumers who say they are glad to learn of the Hewitt representation. They declare they were accustomed to use Hewitt products in the East and became so positive of their merits that it was only with reluctance that they tried other makes.

SHOW INTEREST IN BIG TRUCKS.

MIDDLE WEST FARMERS LEARN MUCH FROM VISIT OF CARAVAN OF FREIGHTERS.

One of the most gratifying features in connection with the recent motor truck tour conducted by the St. Louis motor truck dealers was the interest taken in trucks by farmers. The tour covered 400 miles in Eastern Missouri and Western Illinois and went direct into the heart of many agricultural communities. As the caravan of thirty-three trucks moved along the road it was a common sight to see farm hands lined up along the way to watch the trucks. In several instances the trucks stopped to permit the operators to converse with these men, and it is said that many a short furrow was plowed the day the truck train went by.

Occupying a prominent position in the lineup of the caravan were two all-American trucks, such as are represented in California, Nevada and Arizona by the Gates-Kelley Automotive Company of Los Angeles. Mounted on one of the all-American trucks were two papier-mache horses, symbolic of the passing of the horse as a transportation medium. The all-Americans rendered excellent service throughout the run.

ARIZONANS ARE PEEVED AT US.

DON'T LIKE THE WAY WE HAVE BEEN SAYING THAT THEIR ROADS ARE PUNK.

Enter a protest from Arizona about what has been reported in Los Angeles relative to the conditions of the highways in that State. S. W. Higley, a resident of the neighboring State arrived in Los Angeles a few days ago after making the trip with his family in a Chandler touring car. Said Mr. Higley to a representative of Earl V. Armstrong, Inc., distributors for the Chandler: "We people over in Arizona are tired of reading in the Los Angeles papers that we have such terribly bad roads in our State that it is next to impossible to drive over them without breaking up the car in some places.

"It is true some of the roads are bad but let me tell you that there are no roads in Arizona that are worse or even as bad as those in California over which we came in our Chandler. There are more than 100 miles in this State that prides itself upon its fine highways between the Colorado River at Parker and the junction with the National Old Trails road, east of San Bernardino that are what even we Arizonans will term bad. You would have to hunt for a long time to find their equal in our State."

Abbey Has Full Bell Octave.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

HE EXPLAINS BATTERIES.

There have been men of mystery and women of history ever since the world began, but since the motor car came there has always been a mystery connected with storage batteries which few motorists have been able to solve satisfactorily.

Contrary to the usual procedure, there is now one man in Los Angeles who proposes to take the mystery out of the battery, and to make this essential element of an automobile so simple to every one who drives a motor car that with ordinary intelligence the average owner can take care of and maintain his own storage battery.

When Harold L. Arnold became distributor of the Columbia storage batteries in Southern California he determined to take this bugaboo of "mystery" out of this branch of his business.

"As a matter of fact," said Mr. Arnold when interviewed yesterday, "the well-built battery that is made nowadays is practically trouble-proof if properly taken care of. Nine out of ten battery ills come from abuse or neglect of which the owner is ignorant. That seems odd, but it is a fact, he doesn't know he is abusing the innocent-looking black box under the front seat of his car. He is neglecting it without knowing it and we propose to tell him how and why to do for that battery in plain English, shorn of all 'mystery' talk or frills.

"That is one of the reasons I established the Arnold public service department, so that this public service man would be at the call of any motorist who desired an intimate personal knowledge of his battery, how to take care of it, and reduce the expense of his car, at the same time increasing its efficiency and power."

CAR STRIKE FAILS TO STOP WORKERS.

The city of Akron, O., woke up on a recent Saturday morning to find that absolutely unannounced, the employees of the street car company had gone on a strike. Thousands of workers employed in the rubber factories of the city were compelled to seek other means of transporttaion to their respective places of work. As soon as information of the strike came to the Goodyear Tire and Rubber Company, it put into service a fleet of motor trucks over a system of converging routes embracing every part of the city and environs. So efficiently did this arrangement fulfill the transportation needs of the workers that 9000 Goodyear force starting the day's duties on the 6:30 a.m. shift, less than a dozen were tardy.

MAKES FAST TIME ALONG THE COAST.

Averaging 24.9 miles per hour, C. U. Barlow of Oakland, in a Chevrolet, covered the 753 miles from San Francisco to Portland, Or., in 30 hours and 15 minutes. Leaving San Francisco Saturday, July 12, Barlow arrived at Portland on Monday, July 14. Barlow states that heaveraged a little better than 21 ½ miles to the gallon of gasoline. Besides Barlow, the Chevrolet carried his wife and son, 15 years of age, and J. E. Little.

TEXAS LIQUOR MEN GIVE UP THE FIGHT.

ONLY A THIRD OF NORMAL VOTE CAST IN RECENT PROHIBITION ELECTION.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

AUSTIN (Tex.) June 10.—It is asserted by the anti-prohibition leaders of Texas that the recent adoption of a "dry" amendment to the constitution was due chiefly to apathy on the part of the followers of the "wet" cause. This lack of interest was shown by the abnormally small vote that was cast. While there are a score or more of counties that have as yet made no returns of the count, and their standing will not be definitely known until the official vote is canvassed on July 3, the figures on hand show that a total of less than 250,000 of a normal voting strength of more than 700,000 were cast on the proposed amendment. It is also shown that the proposition carried by a majority of perhaps 15,000. The counties from which no report has been received are of small population.

The cause of the disinterestedness of the "wet" supporters may be best expressed in the phrase, "what's the use?" With national prohibition close in sight and with a statutory State-wide enactment prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors in rigid effect, there was little incentive for waging a fight for a brief respite from existing conditions. It is certain that there was no organized campaign on the part of the liquor interests to bring the saloon back to Texas. It was not considered worth the attempt. It is equally almost certain that had the anti-prohibitionists waged one of their old-time fights they would have defeated the pending amendment. Nothing was done to bring out the "wet" vote, while the campaign on behalf of the amendment was most vigorously conducted.

During the past two years the brewery interests have been combrewery interests have been driven completely from political power in Texas. In former times they dominated the elections. Most of the breweries have been turned into other kinds of industrial plants. The former saloon men have either moved their stocks to Mexico or gone into other lines of business in Texas. The masses of the people of the State look upon the traffic in intoxicating liquors as a past incident and have readjusted themselves accordingly.

It is the theory of the men who led the campaign for the adoption of the amendment that with it in force the prosecution and punishment of illicit liquor dealers and bootleggers will be that much strengthened, as their offenses will come under both Federal and State acts.

The most significant feature of the vote on the prohibition proposition was the majorities which it received in Rio Grande border counties which formerly piled up overwhelming majorities against such proposed amendments. This change is attributed largely to the enforcement of a law that was passed by the last Legislature making it illegal to give assistance to illiterate voters in making out their ticket. This act kept thousands of "wet" Mexicans away from the polls. It is noticeable that in all of the counties where the German population is large a heavy majority against the proposed amendment was cast. In this respect, however, the Germans ran true to form.

AMERICA-TO-SWEDEN CABLE IS CONSIDERED.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

STOCKHOLM, June 12.—Strong financial interests in the United States have under consideration with authorities of the Swedish government a plan to lay a cable from America to Sweden, making the landing at Gothenburg, says the Dagens Nyheter.

British monopoly and control of cable connection between Sweden and the United States and the exercise of British censorship in the war have caused some adverse criticism here. The American Minister, Ira Nelson Morris, now in the United States, is said to be energetically supporting the plan under consideration and it is understood here that one of the purposes of his visit to America was in connection with the proposed new service.

Advocates of the proposal point to the prospect that a considerable part of American trade with Finland, Poland and the provinces will pass through Scandinavian countries, and they see in this increased need of a direct cable service with the United States.

SAYS TENNIS AGES GIRLS.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

LONDON, June 16.—Tennis tournaments rob a pretty girl of her good looks, in the opinion of some observers of the game here.

"I have known pretty girls who after a season or two of tournaments have become so completely changed in appearance and manner that old friends have failed to recognize them," said a well-known player. "Their faces become hard and lined, their youthful bloom entirely disappears and they lose much of their feminine charm. I have told my own daughter that she can play in no more than two tournaments a season. That means she cannot hope to become first class, but I would prefer her to remain an attractive woman."

UNIQUE PRESCRIPTION.

If people always knew beforehand just what the doctor's prescription would be, most of the time it would be quite unnecessary to consult a doctor.

A patient with a vague and indeterminate complaint sought out the late Dr. Weir Mitchell and elaborately described what she thought were the sumptoms of imminent collapse.

The famous physician heard her out with courteous gravity, wrote a line or two on a bit of paper and then said: "Take this to the drug store across the street and they will fill it for you."

When the ailing hypochondriac showed the paper to the apothecary he smiled and handed it back.

"I'm afraid you'll have to fill this out yourself, madam," he said, deferentially.

"What do you mean?"

Then she read what was written. It was simply the Bible verse: "Greater is he that ruleth himself than he that taketh a city."—[Philadelphia Ledger.

The Story of the Home of the Sheffield Blade.

Mary, Queen of Scots, was in Prison There.

Wonderful Growth of Cutlery Manufacturing.

[From the Kansas City Star.]

Sheffield's first claim to fame as an English city of note is, of course, its manufactories. But it is interesting to recall that its castle was for twelve years the prison of Mary, Queen of Scots, and that before that, Cardinal Wolsey was "entertained" there after he had fallen into disfavor with his king. Nothing remains of the castle today but the ruined walls of the manor house. A writer in the Christian Science Monitor tells of the present-day Sheffield.

Those who best know Sheffield, the home of the "Sheffield blade," in the West Riding of Yorkshire, are constantly forced to the admission, whenever they return to the town, that Sheffield is not as bad as it looks. There is, of course, no escaping the fact that Sheffield, however it may be approached, is "of a terrible aspect." Leeds has its ever-hovering cloud of smoke, Manchester, too, in this respect, is no whit behind; but Sheffield, in the density of its wonderful envelope, as seen from the train, seems to outstrip all competitors. Chimneys there are, great forests of them, on all hands, whilst house and factory, church and warehouse, crowd over the hills and dales right up to the skyline. All this only renders all the more wonderful the fact that, once in this great town of knives, scissors and all manner of cutlery, known the world over, the forbidding envelope seems to disappear, whilst few towns more quickly capture even the chance visitor with the glamor of its great industry or the romance of its great trade.

For the "man of imagination," as he stops to look at the shining finished products in the Sheffield shop windows, inevitably recalls the fact that the town was famous for such things as these more than 1000 years ago, when the Saxon cutler wrought his rude blade in his wattle hut at the foot of the same great moorland which, today as then, stretches away to the west.

MENTIONED BY CHAUCER.

"A Sheffield thwytel bare he in his hose," wrote Chaucer, in the fourteenth cenutry, describing the teller of the Reeve's tale, and the term "whittle" is still familiar to Sheffield cutlers. In Chaucer's day, the straight iron blade set in a wooden handle was held in high esteem, if it were, indeed, "right Sheffield." For was there not a certain well-known goldsmith of York who made a special point in his will as to the disposal of his "anglice thweltyll?" And he was by no means unique. Then by Elizabeth's day a very much larger world had heard of Sheffield wares. They figured everywhere in the literature of the day and in common speech, and always in terms of high approval, "First, then, be the choice of your pen-knife; a right Sheffield knife is best; a good razor is next, being not too thick nor too thin grounded. Many other knives there are indifferent good, but these two first named hold commonly best in proof." Thus confidently affirms a sixteenth century authority.

It was not that they had a superfine finish. Other goods from other markets were, no doubt, much more to look at, but the reputation for serviceability of the Sheffield blade was thus all the more fairly won. The knives of the Sheffield craftsman, as set forth by the Act of Incorporation, in 1624, were "knives of the best edge." We may, declares one writer, understand the proud modesty with which the Earl of Shrewsbury, who at that time practically owned the town, sending a case of "Hallamshire whittles" to Lord Burghley, in 1575, referred to them as "such things as my poor country affordeth with fame throughout the realm."

Sheffield, moreover, by this time, had its Cutlers Company, and the London cutlers were beginning to complain bitterly of the "English foreigners" who were caught "hawking in the street and highways with deceivable wares." The "deceivable wares," however, steadily had the best of it. Even in the sixteenth century, Sheffield knives were finding their way to distant markets, whilst the Act of Incorporation states definitely that the Sheffield cutlers supplied with their goods not only "most parts of this kingdom," but also "other foreign countries."

AMONG THE FANS.

The following item is taken from the Glasgow Herald of July 5:

"BRITAIN VS. AMERICA.

"The English Draughts Association has written the Scottish Association with a view to the making of arrangements for a return match between teams representing America and Britain. The match is proposed for 1921, but in Glasgow draughts circles it is suggested that play should take place next year. A considerable sum of money is required to cover expenses. The E.D.A. has got promises of substantial contributions already, and no doubt Scotland will not be behind hand. The matter is to be discussed at an early meeting of the Scottish players."

J. A. Drouillard, who has been out of the city for the past two months, is again in our midst, and will probably remain for some time, as he has about six more weeks in college before taking the examination which will allow him to prefix "Dr." to his name.

L. M. Lewis, formerly of Indianapolis, Ind., is now located in Chicago. I can see no good reason for checker players stopping at Chicago, since all trains are now running as far West as Los Angeles.

The prospects are bright for a checker column to be started in the Boston Saturday Globe in the near future.

MORRALL ANSWERS VAIR.

In re of Mr. Vair's query in regard to problem No. 333, Herbert Morrall, Boston, Mass., writes: "As near as I can remember, I played a game with a fellow member of the Liverpool Draughts Club, just before the international match, and that was the ending of the game which I won across-board. The late J. K. Lyons, draughts editor of the Chronicle, who was watching the game, took down the ending and published it in his column under my name. It was copied by the Draughts World and, I suppose, noted by Horsfall when he wrote his book. It is an unpleasant position to be placed in, as I do not publish other people's works as my own, and if Mr. Vair published it in 1895 he certainly has the right to the position. It would be interesting to know if Mr. Vair won the ending across-board or manufactured it. I have often won endings which have taken the form of published problems by various authors. Sincerely yours,

"HERBERT MORRALL."

While on the subject, a few words concerning problem No. 330, published in this column under the name of H. Lieberman and later claimed by Mr. Vair as one of his published long ago, would probably not be "out of order." Mr. Lieberman was out to my house one evening and, while looking over a position, the idea of the "shot" came up. After repeated efforts, we finally decided on the setting as given. Neither of us had ever seen Mr. Vair's problem, so the position was published under Mr. Lieberman's name.

a—This improves play given in Lee's Guide, page 10, variation 2, at next to last move, which gives 30-26, 24-27, drawn.

b—This loses. I think E. H. Payne was the first to show the neat draw by 26-22, 15-19c, 23-26, 19-23, 22-27, 30-23, etc. Drawn.

e—The gate is now closed and Black must helplessly await the executioner.

a—P-QB4 is now recommended by Tarrasch as the only good defense to the queen's gambit. We believe, however, that there are at least two other lines of play for Black arising from this move of Black—Kt-KB3.

b—This is one of the continuations referred to above and Kt-K5 is the other.

c—A line of play very much in vogue at the time, other continuations are P-QB3 and R-K.

d—In as much as this Kt is moved back again to Q-B3 a few moves later, there must be something wrong in moving it now to K2. White should have continued to prepare the K side attack before moving this Kt.

e—A lost move. He should have played QR-K square at once.

f—This Kt has been moved too often from QB3 to K2 and back again. P-B3 at once, I believe, would have won, as White would then have to devote some of his forces to stop the passed pawns which would take all the strength away from his king side attack, and then Black's superiority on the queen side would tell.

g—White properly takes advantage of Black's last move, and the combinations which follow are nothing short of marvelous. A game in Pillsbury's most finished style, as soon as given a good chance, hitting hard, and to the point.

i—If QxP, KtxP, winning.

j—Very fine. It not only threatens Kt-B4, but it also brings the rook back to protect the queen side pawns.

k—Black finally does what he could have done three moves back.

l—Better was to play P-KR3 first, in order to gain time.

m—Black does not see the danger and goes after a pawn, exchanging a very useful bishop for an almost useless knight. Perhaps he should have played PxP, followed by Kt-B3.

n—White now makes a wonderful combination, which carries him to victory. In all, one of the finest games on record.

Openly Sides With Bolshevism.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

CHRISTIANIA, May 5.—The Norwegian labor party, controlled by the Bolshevik faction, has refused to participate in the socialist conference at Amsterdam. The Norwegian Central Labor Committee refuse to participate in the reconstruction of the Internationale as planned at the Berne conference, but has decided to co-operate with the left wing of the Swiss Socialists, with German Spartacists, with Russian Bolsheviki and the Hungarian Communists. The committee thereby refuses to connect with labor in Western Europe and openly sides with Bolshevism and revolutionary methods with terroristic action against the bourgeoisie.

FIG TREES 50 YEARS OLD.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

SACRAMENTO, June 9.—George H. Hecke, State Commissioner of Horticulture, recently endeavored to obtain a list of the oldest fig trees in California, and found three that had passed the half-century mark, including the one at the mission San Jose, which is said to be the oldest in the State. It is said to be 125 years old, and its trunk measures seventeen feet in circumference.

One was listed from Corning, Tehama county, as being 60 years old, with a trunk thirteen and one-half feet in circumference, and R. H. McCloud of Stockton reported to Hecke that he had a fig tree in his back yard that had passed the half-century mark, which produced a bountiful crop each year.

SYDNEY, May 2.—Sydney Atkin, who was one of the Aurora party in Sir Ernest Shackleton's last Antarctic expedition, has returned to his home in New South Wales after years of adventure. Atkin came back from the French battlefields with a healed broken jaw, only one lung and several scars. In addition he was gassed. He is about thirty-six years old. Prior to joining the Shackleton expedition he was in turn a cattle drover, a Coast Artilleryman, a soldier in the South African war and a sailor.

TO TAKE PLACE OF BARLEYCORN

Music, Books and Candy Have been Suggested.

But up to Date the Outlook is not Hopeful.

All Admit Stimulation is the Thing Wanted.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

WASHINGTON, July 7.—Now that liquor is no more and the head of him who used it is cleared for straight thinking some really worth while substitutes are being proposed. Folks are removing the trimmings and facing the one fact of alcohol—stimulation. It is stimulation that is wanted. They are abandoning the idea of getting it surreptitiously, unlawfully. Is there not a ligitimate stimulant to take its place—music, for instance?

The recent funeral of John was attended by a large number of kindly souls, who just bubbled over with consoling suggestions. You must have noticed them. "My dear man," you could hear them gently explaining to some sad and embittered follower of the deceased, "you must not let this loss blight your life."

People of this peculiar, pollyanna type never can be suppressed. They insist upon seeing good in everything, even an empty bottle. You simply cannot make them see any difference between cocktails and candy. They rise triumphant over the worst snubs and cynicism and go right on assuring you that you must bow to the will of the prohibitionists; that in time you will forget your grief in the joys of chocolate or concert music.

COMPLAINTS OF PAST.

It is complained that in the immediate past when the swinging door was still a conspicious feature of our large cities our concert halls were sadly devoid of male listeners. While most of the musicians were men, their audiences were almost completely women. Musicians themselves will tell you that they would have to give up their art and open grocery stores or something if it were not for the women of the nation. Obviously, the majority of American men share the view of the distinguished novelist who, upon being questioned as to what he thought of music, said, "Oh, I see no harm in it."

But now the mourners of the late John are requested to take the question of music as a solace under advisement. Why, they are asked, have women been such ardent devotees of music? Is it not because they discovered in it the same stimulation, elation, that men find in alcohol? It is admitted that there are cases which seem to point to this conclusion. For example, the famous singer, Malibran, was so overcome with emotion the first time she heard Beethoven's Fifth Symphony that she swooned, and had to be carried out of the hall. Then there was the case of Berlioz who swore that he became absolutely intoxicated upon hearing certain pieces of music.

In describing his symptoms of intoxication, he wrote: "My vital forces seem at first to be doubled, I feel a delicious pleasure in which reason has no part; my arteries pulsate violently." Then come tears, "followed by spasmodic conditions of the muscles, trembling in all the limbs, a total numbness in the feet and hands, paralysis of the optic and auditory nerves—vertigo—almost swooning."

INFLUENCE OF MUSIC.

It is suggested that music as a means of intoxication has one advantage over alcohol in that it produces no depressing after affects On the other hand, the victim is rejuvenated and refreshed. Plato wisely asserted that music cleansed the soul as a bath did the body. Since Plato's time the psychological effect of music has been carefully studied, and as a result music is now being introduced as a therapeutic measure into a large number of hospitals. In the Japanese-Russian war, the beneficial effect of music on wounded soldiers was noticed and studied, while in the European war it was a common occurrence to have wounded men ask for music before drink or medical help.

Again, there are those who assert that the best substitute for booze is books. While no great degree of physical intoxication is claimed for them, it is well known that in books men have always found that relief from the pressure of life, which is the chief lure of alcohol and the narcotic drug. "Men drink because they are bored, because they lack excitement," declares one authority, "and yet locked up in books there is more stimulant, more excitement, than in many bottles of whisky. A Chicago bookseller calls attention to the fact that a store in his city regularly sells 2500 pounds of peanuts every Saturday, and not twenty-five pounds of books during the whole week." This does not prove, as might be claimed, that peanuts offer an even better substitute for alcohol than books, but that Americans are neglecting their opportunities. (See De Maupassant or Ambrose Bierce or Comptom McKenzie or Algernon Blackwood.)

AS TO CANDY.

An even deadlier substitute for alcohol than either of these, urged by the consoling, is candy. The candy store proprietors themselves are keeping discreetly silent on the subject, but there are plenty of others to do their advertising for them. Men who have experience in climbing on and off the water wagon assert that candy is the only hope of the faithful when the last descendant of John Barleycorn has been dragged from the cellar and destroyed. This statement is also upheld by scientists, who have studied the effect of various foods on the human system, and who point out that a piece of candy in the process of digestion becomes alcohol, in which form it is distributed throughout the system. Eat a few chocolate drops on an icy winter day and you get almost the same effect as if you had tapped the flask in your inside pocket. But candy, in large quantities, is capable of causing almost as much damage as alcohol itself, according to our best dieticians, so that the nation is now faced by another danger—the bon-bon drunk.

Our jails will all be filled with candy eaters; a new society will have to be formed for the suppression of candy manufacture, and the movie scenario writers can go right on writing the same drunken scenarios of heroines lured away from home by candy and of young men who take their first chocolate drop and thereafter rapidly go to wreck and ruin. Already are suggestions for dramatising the candy vice beginning to appear. In one of these scenes one shows a pathetic little group, consisting of a sad little woman and her children, who sit sobbing about the kitchen table where the evening meal is growing cold. The mother rises and looks mournfully out of the window, shaking her head. "I fear father is eating again," she sobs.

TO BRING FATHER HOME.

Although the night is cold and stormy, as you can see by the way everything in the room is being blown about by a cleverly-concealed electric fan, little Angela, aged ten and a half, rises nobly to the occasion and assures her mother that she will go and bring her father home. Follow several feet of film showing little Angela braving the storm outside, searching the dark streets of the big city, passing ribald groups of men with candy on their breath, and finally discovering her bleary-eyed, sodden father, just as he is about to fall off the wharf into the river, clutching a candy carton firmly in one hand. "Oh, father," says little Angela, "you promised us you would stop eating candy." And, leading him gently by the hand, Angela guides her father through a thousand or more feet of film which ends with his miraculous reform and the signing of the candy prohibition pledge.

Besides the vivid pictures candy conjures for the imagination, buttermilk, weak beer and even cologne are pale and inconspicuous. Automobile press agents have proposed joy-riding as a substitute for the usual week-end spree, but this is obviously illogical, since joy-riding has always been the effect and not the cause of intoxication. There is one other suggestion, however, which appears to contain merit. That is travel. Beginning July 1, there was a large increase in the number of requests for passports, and it is stated that thousands are barely holding themselves in until the passport situation loosens up, and they are able to emigrate in wholesale quantities to Europe.

Some who are unable to restrain themselves that long, are already on their way to China, where American breweries are now doing a large business. According to the testimony of an American who has just returned from China, every attempt is being made to popularize American beer and light wines in that country, and so far the results are so successful that many more American brewers are talking of moving their plants to the Orient. Under these circumstances, it is quite comprehensible why so many American business men are suddenly evincing such a tremendous interest in China.

CARE FOR FLU ORPHANS.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

NOME (Alaska) April 21.—Natives who survived the Spanish influenza scourge at Wales, in the northwest portion of Seward Peninsula, known as the wealthiest native district of Alaska, have virtually begun life over, and with true American pluck, according to officials of the Bureau of Education, who recently made a trip to the village.

Ninety-five widows and orphans are still being cared for by the bureau, but the rest of the population is self-supporting, and has insisted that none of the orphaned children be taken away from the village. Many native marriages have been consummated lately, and in nearly all cases the newlyweds adopt one or more of the orphans, the population of the village deeming it their duty to care for the little ones left without parents as a result of the epidemic.

French to Use American Horses.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY OF OCCUPATION, MAY 15.—American army horses, some of which last year hauled artillery over the battlefields of France, will this summer be used by French peasants in various districts as aids in tilling the soil of hundreds of acres of devastated regions.

Details for the sale of ten thousand American army horses and mules to the French government were completed recently at the headquarters of the American Army of Occupation. These animals are to be shipped from the occupied area of the Rhinelands to France by rail and sold by the French government direct to the peasants. The first batch of one thousand horses sold to the French under this arrangement brought about $200 each.

Nome Gold Output to be Larger.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

NENANA (Alaska) May 5.—Travelers arriving here from Nome say that indications point to a larger gold output from that district this season than last. On the benches of the Snake River, flowing close to Nome, a new strike was reported to have considerable merit. On Dry Creek, flowing through the town of Nome itself, several dredging outfits expected to have a profitable season. A strike of miners for $6 a day and board, with working day of eight hours, last year, was said to have been settled, with no labor troubles in sight for this season's mining operations.

Hun Indemnity Might Be Raised.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

BERLIN, June 14.—Richard Calwer, financial writer, believes that Germany's offer of financial indemnity supplies her enemies with a weapon which may encourage them to force her to pay a still larger sum than that offered. He writes: "Germany, they will say, appears to be still quite solvent and her credit unimpaired if she is able to offer a gold indemnity of 100,000,000,000 on her own initiative. If she volunteers that much, she is in reality capable of exceeding that limit, will be the enemy's logic, and it is surprising to think this had not occurred before the men responsible for the offer."

Carribou Invasion Helps Alaska.

[BY A. P. CORRESPONDENCE.]

VALDEZ (Alaska) May 27. — Nature has proven a generous provider for the town of Franklin, Alaska, and its residents. A herd of carribou estimated to number 100,000 recently invaded that district and residents of the section laid aside all the juicy steaks and ribs they will need for the coming year. Ranches nearby provided all vegetables needed. Ninety per cent. of the population are over 60 years of age, all are able to work, and the absence of a doctor in the vicinity has not been felt, for sickness is unknown.

STIEFEL LANDS WHOPPER!

As a fishing ground for the big finny babes, Balboa is fast becoming a dangerous rival of Catalina. Balboa can boast some monster catches herself here lately. Comes to the front with a whopper catch Mr. Sam Stiefel of 116 South Broadway. If any one doubts his word all Samuel has to do is to flash a bruised index finger of the right hand and a sprained left arm. These injuries are the result of capturing a huge jew fish last Tuesday morning about two miles off Balboa.

Mr. Stiefel was not angling for sea behemoths but only for the lowly halibut. Suddenly without warning he got a strike that almost toppled him into the briny. Pete Mardesic, in whose boat Sam was fishing, sensed the trouble and rushed to the rescue. Then the real tough sport began. For an hour and twenty-five minutes Stiefel wasted every ounce of biceps he possessed to subdue Mr. Fish which he had been informed by the boatman was no other than a jewfish.

When Sam began to weaken, Mardesic took up the burden and after forty-five minutes of strenuous labor the big fellow cried "Take it" and was gaffed. By the aid of a windlass he was pulled into the boat. The catch weighed 245 pounds and when placed on exhibition on the beach was the center of attraction for a long time. Stiefel declares that the next time he fishes in Balboa waters he will take along a heavy iron cable and a patent steel stop reel for just such emergencies as cropped up in his last Tuesday's angling.

LONG BEACH PUTS IT ON REDLANDS NINE.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

REDLANDS, Aug. 2.—Redland's crack indoor baseball team went down to defeat at the hands of the Long Beach "Y" team here last night, the score of the "twilight game" being 10 to 9, after ten innings. Long Beach early in the game developed a big lead, but the locals evened this in the seventh when they solved Felker's delivery and knocked the ball all over the field.

Dye pitched the game for Redlands and was working hard all the time. He could not always keep the hits scattered and especially in the first few innings the Long Beach men hit him hard. Felker proved to be a real twriler and Redlands had trouble nicking him for safe hits.

The game was the first of a series to be played here. It is estimated that probably 500 saw the game.

New discovery produces tire of remarkable durability

TWO years ago Thermoid chemists found that one of the chief weaknesses of average rubber is a more or less porous condition. They worked out a substance—CROLIDE—that greatly reduces the small pores in a rubber compound.

Not only does this new substance—CROLIDE—increase toughness 50% to 200%, but it increases elasticity—a one-inch strip stretches to 7⅞ inches.

We ask you to buy this new tire for the extra mileage it will give you. That we know it will, is evidenced by the manufacturer's real guarantee. Guaranteed 6000 miles (Ford sizes, 7500).

NIMRODS MINUS LUCK.

It need not be said that the deer season which opened Friday, August 1, is or will be a fiasco, but the reports coming in from Districts Nos. 2 and 3 show that not many bucks have been garnered. In fact, in none of the windows of the various sporting goods houses are there housed any bucks shot by local nimrods.

Ventura county is nil as far as hunting results are concerned. The streams are all dried up and there is absolutely nothing doing. Several hunters have reported that they lost considerable time in searching for tracks of the deer, but did not even see any of the non-existent animals.

Paul Schenck and Frank Siefert made a trip into the Mt. Pinos region of the Coast Range and had no luck. Probably in the other parts of District No. 2, things were better, but as yet no reports have come in, though in all probability they will shortly.

On the fifteenth of the month, the Santa Monica Mountains will be opened to local buck hunters and merry, merry, will be the chase. The hills of the near-by beach resort are said to be prolific with life, and as many as 100 deer have been seen in just a few days by rangers. The brush has been burnt to quite an extent thus making chances pretty nice for the anxious hunter.

TO BRING UNCAS HERE.

[EXCLUSIVE DISPATCH.]

BALBOA BEACH, Aug. 2.—With plans under way for bringing the schooner-yacht Uncas, owned by John Bowers of Goldwyn pictures, from New York, a forty-mile speedboat, carrying four passengers, contemplated by W. W. Paden, Los Angeles capitalist, and a fast speedboat owned by Capt. Sherman of the Arcadia Balloon School, en route here from New York, by rail, pleasure boating in Newport Harbor and vicinity promises unprecedented popularity by next season. There are other boats coming, too, and others will be built this winter, but these show that the advantages of Newport Bay as a home for pleasure boats are being appreciated as never before.

The trip of the Uncas from New York to Newport Harbor, as outlined, should be a humdinger vavacation jaunt for those lucky enough to be aboard. Wilson brothers of Balboa are in charge of arrangements and plan to make the trip quite interesting. They are gathering a party of seven or eight during her journey to the west coast. The cruise will consume about sixty days, and stops will be made at Atlantic and Gulf ports, at Panama, and on the West Coast of Mexico wherever the passengers desire. Three members of the vacation party, well known in Los Angeles, are already booked, and the rest will be signed up within a short time, so that within a few weeks the Uncas will be ready for her trip to the Pacific.

W. W. Paden of Los Angeles recently bought the sixteen-foot speedboat, Rainbow, from A. R. Powell of Azusa, and is using it this summer. The Rainbow, however, is only good for thirty miles or so in the water, and Paden is contemplating the construction of a new and larger speedboat, which will carry four passengers, and be capable of forty miles an hour, which he hopes to have completed and in the water by next season.

Capt. Sherman of the Balloon School has purchased a summer home at Balboa, and his fast speedboat, shipped from New York by rail, is expected to arrive here within a week or two. Hardly a week passes but what one or more new boats arrive here, and by next season Newport Bay will be filled with motor and sailing pleasure craft.

THORPE SUFFERS A SLUMP.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE.]

CHICAGO, Aug. 2.—Jim Thorpe, the Indian outfielder of the Boston Braves, has suffered a slump in hitting, but not enough to cause him to give up his position as leader of the National League. According to averages released today, Thorpe is hitting .366. Manager Cravath of Philadelphia continued to be the runner-up to Thorpe, with a mark of .353.

Benny Kauff, New York, tied Cravath for home run honors by making his ninth circuit drive. Kauff also is high man in total bases with 155 to his credit. Jake Daubert, Cincinnati, maintained his lead as a sacrifice hitter with 23. Cutshaw of Pittsburgh passed his team-mate, Bigbee, in the number of bases stolen. Cutshaw has pilfered 25 to Bigbee's 23.

Other leading batters for thirty-five or more games: McHenry, St. Louis, .319; Williams, Philadelphia, .317; Rousch, Cincinnati, .316; Burns, New York, .314; Doyle, New York, .311; Kauff, New York, .310; Young, New York, .309; Daubert, Cincinnati, .306.

In the American League George Sisler, the St. Louis star, has boosted his average from .346 to .362. Sisler also is leading the league in total bases, having to his credit 180, made on 119 hits in eighty-five games. The St. Louis man also has taken the stolen base honors from Johnston of Cleveland, having 22 bases to Johnson's 21.

Roger Peckinpaugh, New York, has broken the tie for scoring honors by pulling away from Sisler. Peckinpaugh counted 68 times to Sisler's 61.

Babe Ruth of Boston tied Seibold's American League record for home run honors by cracking out his sixteenth circuit drive.

Tyrus Cobb is hovering near the top among the batters with a mark of .355, nine points behind Sisler. Witt, Boston, continued to be the best sacrificer with a mark of 37.

Other leading batters for thirty-five or more games: Veach, Detroit, .351; Peckinpaugh, New York, .343; Jackson, Chicago, .338; Flagst, Detroit, .322; Rice, Washington, .326; Chapman, Cleveland, .321; Fewster, New York, .316; Heilman, Detroit, .315; Gandil, Chicago, .314; Ruth, Boston, .313.

FISHING NOTES.

Attention to Orders — Fishing is now the best along the coast in many years, and great big numbers of people are wise to the fact. The truth of the matter is that Redondo Beach, Long Wharf and just oodles of other places are being crowded over Saturday and Sunday with angling enthusiasts. All kinds of fish are running, mackerel, halibut, albacore and sea trout are all pretty apt to bite at most of the beaches now.

AT THE LOCAL BEACHES.

Trollers who go outside at the local beaches are well repaid by yellowtail and albacore, and many fishermen do go outside. Then farther away up at Mono county, Roy Carson writes down to his friend, Ceph Salisbury of B. H. Dyas Company fame, to say that Silver Lake is producing the best fishing in many moons. No mosquitoes bother the folks, and the weather is fine.

The tributary streams of Silver Lake are fairly alive with fish, and Crater Lake is also one of the cream spots for angling in that vicinity. The best is yet to come, says Carson, as August is generally the banner month for that section of the country.

From San Diego to the Malibu all kinds of fish are running, as it is just haul 'em in and put on some more bait with the fishermen there. As it is the dark of the moon now, it is just great for fishing.

Brother Oscar Lane and his good spouse will run along up to Mateo on the coast, and make a try for some croakers, for Oscar is a croaker fiend, he just can't leave them alone.

DEMPSEY TO FIGHT OFTEN.

New Heavyweight World's Champion to Take on All Comers.

BY BENNY LEONARD,
Lightweight Champion of the World.

[Copyrighted, 1919, by the New York Herald Co., All Rights Reserved.]

Just when Jack Dempsey will climb into the ring to defend his newly-acquired championship is a matter of conjecture at this time. Just who his opponent will be is also shrouded in drab mystery, although it seems that Willie Meehan has the call, but one thing is certain. Jack does not intend to make the serious mistake of remaining out of the ring too long.

"I am going to defend my title just as soon as there seems to be a popular demand for me to step into the ring," Dempsey told me immediately after he had defeated Jess Willard. "I am willing to fight anyone at any time."

He did not say this in a boastful way as if he thought there was no one on the pugilistic horizon who could have a chance in the same ring with him. He merely intended to imply that his business is boxing and he intends to stick to it until he makes up his mind to retire for all time.

TO MAKE HAY.

Naturally he will engage in some sort of show business until a match is made. He can't be blamed for that. There is no good reason why he should sit idly back until a logical contender flashes across his resined path. He might just as well make hay while the sun shines as long as he is prepared to answer the call of the gong when it sounds.

"I am willing to give anyone a chance at the title just as soon as there is a demand for the match," smiled Dempsey. "It won't make any difference to me. I don't know who they will select as my next opponent, but it doesn't make any difference to me. Let them pick out the best man and tell me that the match is on. All that I want to know is the date and the place and I'll be there. Of course, I will insist upon having sufficient time in which to train, for I am not going into the ring out of condition. Whenever I enter the ring the public can be assured that I am fit to put forth the best there is in me.

LIKES TO TRAIN.

"I don't mind training; in fact, I like it. The road work, the pulleys, the punching bag and my sparring partners are all part of my play. I don't regard it as work. I have heard some boxers say that training is hard work. I don't think so. It makes a fellow feel fine to realize that he is getting into tip top physical shape. As you know, I don't dissipate and it doesn't take me very long to get into condition, but I want all the time it does take whenever I am going to fight. I do not intend to be caught napping if by getting into condition I can avoid it."

I am convinced that Dempsey does like to train. I watched him during the closing days of his work on the shore of Maumee Bay at Toledo when he was getting ready for Willard and he seemed to fairly revel in the work. Not once did he show any signs that it was irksome to him or that he felt the monotony of doing the same thing day in and day out.

HARD WORKER.

"He is one of the hardest workers I have ever handled," was the comment of Jimmy Deforest, his trainer. "He never seems to tire. You don't have to watch him to make him work. You have to watch him to see that he doesn't overdo it. He kept me on my toes all the time.

"I made up my mind that he wasn't going to go stale, but it was the hardest thing in the world to make him ease up. He wanted to keep going at top speed all the time. But it's a pleasure to work with a man like that. I don't believe he will ever be caught out of condition."

IS A BUSINESS.

Dempsey likes boxing. I don't think Jess cared a great deal for it. That's the difference. With Dempsey it is not only a business but it is a pleasure as well. With Jess I think it was more of a business.

I know how I feel about it. When I get ready to hang up my gloves for all time I will retire not from boxing but from boxing in public. I will always box. It is the greatest exercise a man can take and I will continue it to keep in shape. Dempsey feels pretty much the same way.

And because he likes it I know that he means it when he says he will give them all a chance. He won't side-step anyone. In short I am convinced that he intends to be a real champion.

IN BAD HEALTH.

There has been some talk of trying to match him with Georges Carpentier. I do not believe that this match will be consumated for some time, if at all. I have been told by some friends who saw Carpentier in France that the great French boxer is not in the best of health, that he is suffering from four hard years of warfare. If this be true it will take some time for him to get into proper condition. It would not be fair to him to send him against a man like Dempsey until he had had ample time to work his way back into shape.

Carpentier has been doing some boxing in benefits and for the edification of his comrades in arms during the war, but it was not enough. It was the exhibition stuff that cannot be taken seriosly. No doubt a bout with Carpentier and Dempsey as the principals would draw a big gate and no doubt there are many promoters both here and abroad who would bid up to the sky for the attraction, but I think Carpentier himself would hesitate to make a match at this time or in the immediate future. He must be too wise a ring general.

FEW OPPONENTS.

When you stop to look over the field there are not many opponents for Dempsey on the firing line at the present time. He has beaten most of the men who were rated as possible contenders for the heavyweight crown. Meehan alone seems to stand out at this time. He has fought Dempsey in four-round bouts on the Coast and always made a creditable showing and it would not be in the least surprising if he were selected as the first opponent for new champion.

RECORD OF PINCH-HITTING.

BY HARRY A. WILLIAMS.

Pinch-hitting is something that has them all guessing—the manager, the pitcher and the pinch-hitter himself.

Whether to leave in one of the regulars, or shoot forth with a substitute batter, is something that the manager must decide ever and anon. If the batter delivers, well and good. If not, the manager is a bum in the estimation of most of those present.

As a rule, the average of a pinch-hitter looms very prolific or very punk. If he manages to get a few safe swats, he is likely to go through the season with a fat percentage, as the chances are he will not be used often enough to shrink his percentage. By the same token, if he is sent up four or five times without getting a lick, it is not probable that he will get enough more chances to fatten up his figures, and lean statistics will rise up to rebuke him throughout the race.

HIT IN STREAKS.

Batters, even the best ones, are inclined to hit in streaks. He has his slumps and his spurts. With the regulars the spurts off-set the slumps, and they finish as a rule with a respectable average. The pinch-hitter is similarly constituted. If sent in when going good, fine and lovely. If called on a few times when he is in a slump, his substitute batting percentage is ruined for the season.

Unquestionaly, the pinch-hitter is up against a tough proposition. The regulars have their soft spots, and can gather an occasional hit when a pitcher has a lead that justifies himself in easing down. Not so with the emergency batter. He comes to the plate in a crisis, generally with men on bases, and the pitcher is putting everything he possesses on the ball. Therefore it is not surprising that the collective batting averages of pinch-hitters in the Coast League up to Friday is only a little over .200.

WARES THERE.

Up to this time, Coast League managers had resorted to pinch-hitters on 273 occasions. Fifty-five of these landed safely, twenty-seven of them drew passes or were purposely walked, and three of them laid down sacrifices. Six of them, Bigbee, Koehler, Zamlock, Mulligan and Cunningham crashed doubles. Wares holds the season record for walking in a pinch, having drawn three passes out of four trips to the plate.

Bigbee has been employed more prolificially than any other man in the circuit in a pinch. Twenty-three times Clymer sent him to the plate. During this time he made four hits, and walked once. Bigbee started off strong, but evidently cracked under the repeated demands on his pinch-hitting talent. Most of his swats were made the first few times up.

OH, YOU SCOTTY!

Scotty Alcock of the Tigers made the best showing at getting on successively, when in four trips to the plate he made three hits and walked once. Manger Bill Rodgers hit safely three times, or every time that he put himself in as a pinch-hitter. Plainly, Bill knew when he was feeling fit.

Following are the records of our pinch-hitters during the season to date. More than half the players in the league have tried their hand at it one time or another, which merely goes to show how keenly the managers were striving to turn the tide in this or that close game. Some of these show better averages as pinch-hitters than as regulars, and vice versa. Here are the figures:

STUDENTS BEGIN ON THEIR SECOND HALF.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Aug. 2.—Students here for summer school work completed their final examinations yesterday and started immediately on the work of the second half of the summer today. There is to be no vacation between these halves due to the recently adopted policy of intensified study. A student taking advantage of this plan may finish his college course in three years instead of the usual four.

The Stanford campus which, until the inauguration of the quarter system in 1917, was always deserted by students between June and September, is now a busy place. The summer community has nearly 500 students and over ninty instructors. The fall term will begin on October 1.

JACK DOYLE'S "OLD GUARD."

Faithful Coterie of Boxing Fans on Hand Every Tuesday Night.

BY ED O'MALLEY.

Napoleon had an "Old Guard" that was always Johnny at the bung hole through all the stress and press of hostilities. Miss Los Angeles, nevertheless, can tilt herself on her pretty little toes and boast of a band of faithful, just as dependable as that of the Little Corporal. Master Jack Doyle is the sponsor of this guard, which up to date has never failed to enter his pavilion every Tuesday night with steady and warlike tread. As sure as tides, taxes and the hourly increase of film stars, this famous guard for many moons has held itself unshakenly in the front line of action.

The hetman of the old guard is Billy Crane, the famous thespian, and his side kicks are George Goldsmith, Dr. L. M. Moore, George Baker, Harry Caulfield and Carter DeHaven. A sextette forsooth that is the last word in fistic acumen and from whose composite judgment there is no appeal. Weekly in the ringside chairs, amid the tempest and roar of an outraged house, they swing their thumbs up or down, when the judgment of roughneck crew has flown to brutish beasts and men have lost their reason.

JOTS 'EM DOWN.

Billy Crane's cup of joy goes over the top when a quartette of five-ounce mitts flicker in fervid action before his eyes. So deeply has Crane delved into his sporting lore that he jots down every salient feature of the different bouts, punctuating each jolt with a chuckle of, "A hit, me boy, a palpable hit."

George Goldsmith always frames his countenance into a severe cast, very much of a Cato aspect. With folded arms and concentrated gaze he loses not a blow. If the decision is of the nose-squeezing variety, George curls a contemptuous upper lip and nods an inferred, "Can you beat it?"

BUG OF BUGS.

Carter DeHaven is always there with a cloudburst of frenzied vocalizing. When enthusiasm was born, Carter was its godfather. No other man at the ringside or around its environs can shout louder advice—with its accompanying immediate or remote effect—to fighters than this same bug of bugs. Despite the fact that he has advised many a luckless scrapper into snares and pitfalls the pitch of his voice has never lessened an iota.

Oh boy—does Will Wyatt gurgle over a real scrap?—Well, we'll say he do. Willie is a ringsider of the thirty-third degree. When he enters the pavilion he leaves Will Wyatt at the door and immediately becomes a cross between a whirling dervish and a poor wight whose countenance is afflicted with a quiver of St. Vitus dance. Say boys—a word with you—the moment Will sees a boxer in action, he comes pretty near knowing just about what said boxer can do. On several occasions in the last two months the man that made the Mason Operahouse famous has picked the entire card of winners at the pavilion. If Will were to get out a Roseben Special in the tipping line each Tuesday night, he'd make Paul Browning wish he had never seen a race track.

AL A CORKER.

Al Monroe regarded by many as the shrewdest boxing follower in Los Angeles would rather be at the pavilion on Tuesday nights than be president of the Ice Trust. Al is always surrounded by a coterie of fans who breathlessly await his keen remarks on the fisticuffs whirling around the ring. He's a scrap bug for fair and has the distinction among local members of the fancy of making the best prediction in regard to the Dempsey-Willard fracas that trickled out of Los Angeles. That Toledo first round came off almost to a dot just as Monroe said it would. Al really spoke as one inspired.

SID JOYOUS.

And then there are those two fistic dromios of the famous pavilion, Messrs. Charley Chaplin and Sid Grauman. This is surely a pair to draw to. Sid is the happiest and most joyous of all fans. His exuberance often plays hobby with his judgment and when the thrill is the thickest he is wont to lay scandalous odds. It is when this fit is upon him that that arch conspirator, Carter DeHaven, shows his fine Italian hand. Sid will pick out some poor rummy of a boxer that is getting his block knocked off and then burble, "I'll lay three to one he wins." It was in a spasm of this kind not long ago that DeHaven, Chaplin, Vic Levy and Harry Sherman swung on him hard, each with a twenty spot. As Sid took them around to the back of the book and coughed up, the quartette in unison chortled "Say Sid, what time will you be here next Tuesday night?"

Chaplin is just the reverse of his team-mate, Grauman. Charley likes to see the sluggers go about three and a half rounds before he has a thoroughly set opinion and then if any one flicks a defiant finger at him with "Well, what'll you lay?" Charley will come through with everything that the hen layed but the egg. Charley doffs the cap and bells when he invades the domain of Jack Doyle's and in the enjoyment of the swirling mitts, forgets all about those physical quips and quirks that has made him the Rothschild of the silver screen.

HARRY'S BLEAT.

Harry Sherman. Ah, this is Jack Doyle's one best bet in the yodeling line. In resonance of tone and height of pitch, Harry's vocal chords can give those of Caruso's ten yards and a beating in a hundred yards, straightaway or around a curve. If Billy Sunday had his bleat he could pack an auditorium a mile long. At the ring side, Sherman is the judge, jury, prosecuting attorney and proprietor all rolled up in one. Harry's chief goal, however, is the referee. To get the ring arbiter's nanny and attempt to seduce that gentleman into a decision that favors Harry's choice, the Vernon Caruso will thunder wails of advice and objections to the principals in the ring that explode with a detonating force far above the combined shouts of the other spectators. Of late, fans sitting close to this human thunderblast have made themselves immune from earache by donning ear muffs. We all know what Gen. Sherman said about war, but it's doubly true of the same thing, to sit close to Harry Sherman at Jack Doyle's boxing pavilion.

ECHOES BLOWS.

Dr. L. M. Moore conveys his unalloyed joy through the elbow route. He sits between Goldsmith and Crane and each of the blows in the ring are echoed on George and Billy's unoffending ribs. Doc's subconscious recreation has caused these two worthies to resort to porous plasters and an endowment policy.

George Baker, a prominent member of the Lambs' Club, is a keen, close observer. Even in the thickest of action there is little play to his countenance, but near the corner of each eye there is just the slightest jolly tremble that bespeaks a latent pleasure.

Harry Caulfield, who used to be Mayor of Universal City, is always there with bells. Ecstasy sits close to him when the boys are roughing it. His spirits bound along like a mountain torrent and he is always aided and abetted by one Pat Powers, whom he brings along as a safety valve.

OH, YOU MOSE!

Mose Hamburger bids adieu to self-consciousness the moment he enters the pavilion. When that gong sounds, Mose furnishes a personal replica of every blow dealt. With the flying of the gloves his body becomes ensouled and is of fisticuffs all compact. He squires, grimaces, groans, jerks his shoulders, pops his eyes and fidgets himself into a St. Vitus fox trot. Such is Mose.

William Farnum with that peachblow suffusion, Hyperion curls and eyes like the deep blue of unsumned seas, is a most appreciative observer. His enthusiasm breathes forth in every dancing lineament of his features and his eyes twinkle as gaily as the rollic of an Easter day sun.

DUSTY SERENE.

Dustin Farnum twins not with brother Bill in the open-faced joy line. Dustin's is rather the concentrated essence of diversion; a sort of enjoyment-in-a-nutshell kind. He neither laughs loud like Bill nor throws a double portion of severity into his countenance while grinning up sleeve, but preserves a look of rather demure serenity disturbed only by an arch sparkle of the eye that betrays his indwelling delight.

Tom Mix is as undemonstrative as the Sphinx. His countenance is like a desert without an oasis, but nothing can estrange his eyes from the sport before them. Ah, but what a contrast between the tameness of his frontispiece and the hilarity of his attire, "Must give us pause and make us bear the ills we have."

FATTY'S HOWL.

Fatty Arbuckle, there aplenty with corporeal bar, is a fan for fair. He is always on tap with a Falstaffian gurgle of humor and a flow of enraptured small talk. He enjoys every bit of the proceedings like a great big overgrown kid and his spirits are seldom ruffled. Wait a minute—when the referee pulls a boner Fatty, by the aid of a hidden escalator, is boosted to the top of his chair and then and there lets out a howl that would awaken sleeping sickness itself. In these fits, Fatty's activity leads one to suspect that he has sent the fat trust into the hands of the receiver.

VANISHING CIGAR.

Harry Lenhardt, of the California Theater—oh, yes, he's there, with or without a cushion. During the six bouts he chews twenty cigars to smithereens. Some time ago when Danny Kramer put Kid Mende to the canvas in the first round, Harry's gullet forgot that it was part and parcel of his anatomy and in a flame of zeal allowed a Carolina perfecto to suddenly pass through its portals. This goes to show that some fans at times will even defy asphyxiation.

Bill Desmond, "Mend him who can, the ladies call him sweet," has a coign of vantage in the fourth row. His face is always wreathed in a perpetual smile, but let the referee slip a cog—'tis then Bill becomes a sudden Jack Be Nimble, and he is up in arms at once.

LOOKS FOR INFO.

George Beban, looking like the wise old owl that he is, keeps up a continual blinking of satisfaction throughout the hurl of gloves. He sits two rows behind the Farnums. At the end of each bout, George flops over to Farnumville to get its whys and wherefores; then he returns to his seat a wiser, if not, a better man.

Among others that brave the terrors of Caudle lecture every Tuesday night are George Hussey, Gene Doyle, Maxwell Kerger, Fred Kley, Melton Hoffman, Tom Ince, Smiling Bill Parsons, Jack Pickford, Frank Keenan, Charley Murray, Johnny Powers, Lew Anger, Bobby Harron, Ben Wilson, George Mulford, Douglas Fairbanks, Ben Estes, Billy Coe, Charley Pike, Raymond Stull and F. J. Reiley.

CAN ROSS SWIM THE CHANNEL?

Sheffield Thinks He is Only Man Today Who Can.

Tells How Capt. Webb Accomplished Big Feat.

History of Other Water Cracks Who Failed.

BY T. W. SHEFFIELD.

Over seventy separate attempts have been made during the last thirty-five years to swim the English Channel. The first cussess was that of Capt. Webb, who was drowned while swimming the Niagara Rapids, he on his second attempt swimming the channel on August 24 and 25, 1875, in the remarkable time of 21h. 45m., under very favorable weather conditions, the sea being quite calm, with no wind and very little cross tides. The log and course recording the swim were given the writer by Capt. Webb's brother. The additional arrow course shows the swim of Thomas William Burgess.

Capt. Webb, well smeared with popoise grease dived in from the Admiralty pier Dover, at 1 o'clock on the former date, swimming westwards towards Folkestone.

2:45 p.m.—Webb was swimming down channel with the breast stroke, doing twenty-two strokes to the minute.

3 p.m.—A number of porpoise were swimming in close proximity to Webb, which were probably attracted by the smell of grease which he was anointed with.

3:20 p.m.—The tide was turning and Capt. Webb was being drifted a little to the west, being only four miles from shore.

SIP OF BEEF TEA.

4 p.m.—Dover Castle was just visible in the mist. It was about this time the captain took light refreshments, consisting of strong beef tea. He rarely spoke, evidently determined to do or die, for he went on swimming steadily through the closing hours of the day until dark.

9 p.m.—Webb had now been in the water eight hours. It was just at this time he was severely stung by a jelly-fish, which is a very painful ordeal, as sea swimmers well know.

12 p.m.—Webb took a little coffee and brandy. The moon had risen by this time, and we were about fourteen miles from Dover.

2 a.m.—We were drifting westward, with the white chalk cliffs near Cape Grisnez standing out in bold relief. Webb could see the light, which seemed to cheer him on his solitary course.

TIDE TURNED.

5 a.m.—Daylight, with a haze over the land. Webb took some refreshments, coffee and cod liver oil, treading water while drinking, refusing to even rest his hand on the boat, although told to do so by the referee. Webb had now been in the water sixteen hours. The tide had turned and carried him further and further away from the goal he so longed to reach.

9 a.m.—Webb took a little beef tea and brandy; fearfully exhausted, but still toiling on. His hands now began to drop, and his fingers open, a bad sign, barely making headway.

9:30 a.m.—We had, however, drifted until we were directly off Calais pier. We sounded and found we were in five fathoms of water.

10:15 a.m.—We were two hundred yards from the shore, Webb barely keeping afloat; it was now or never, Webb doing twelve strokes a minute. We were within one hundred yards of the shore; the men in the mail boat passing out of the harbor struck up "Rule Britannia," and cheered Webb on for the final struggle.

TOUCHED SHORE.

10:40 a.m.—Great excitement on shore. Webb had touched shore in about three feet of water, tried to stand up, but fell heavily forward. Willing hands rushed in waist-deep and carried him to the carriage, when he was rolled in a rug and hastily driven to the Hotel Paris. Many of those on the boat had tears of joy in their eyes, after watching the terrible struggle of the last hour. The people of Calais looked upon Webb in the light of some extraordinary being—half man, half fish. The crowds increased hourly, and a ringing cheer went up as Capt. Webb appeared on the veranda some six hours later, after completing the most difficult swim any swimmer in the world had yet accomplished.

The second man in the world to swim the channel was Thomas William Burgess. For seven years Burgess, the Yorkshire blacksmith, had been trying. In that time he had made fourteen attempts. Over and over again he was beaten by one unfavorable circumstance and another—once when he got to within a quarter of a mile of his goal.

WAS PLUCKY.

Nothing daunted he kept trying, and his plucky efforts were at last rewarded, for starting from Dover, he reached the shore near Cape Grisnez on Wednesday, September 8, 1911, having been in the water nearly two rounds of the clock, covering 60 miles in 22 hours and 35 minutes. At the start portents were none too favorable, for Burgess had severe attacks of sickness and trouble with his goggles. These early difficulties surmounted, however, the swimmer settled himself down to his task, and for hour after hour swam with his powerful over-arm stroke. Towards the end he naturally tired, but his indomitable pluck would not let him give way, and after a terrific race with the tide, he at last reached French soil, very weary, but happy in the knowledge that he had done that which only one man had done before him.

INCIDENTS IN THE LOG.

Burgess started on his great swim at 11:15 a.m., entering the water at a spot about midway between the South Foreland Lighthouse and St. Margaret's Bay.

At the start the breeze was northeast, about ten miles an hour. This was considered rather favorable, as the wind was helping the swimmer over. It was soon apparent, however, that the wind was freshening. White-capped waves came rolling up, and the party on the motor boat had several drenchings. Burgess, however, made no complaint, though it was apparent that he was having a bad time. Several times he swallowed water; the lumpy sea was very tiring to his arm action, and most serious of all his eyes became affected. At the start, of course, he had been greased down with lard and this combined with his great powers of endurance, enabled him to keep quite warm all through the long hours of the swim.

MENDED PACE.

There is no other swimmer who knows so much of tidal conditions in the channel as Burgess, and as always, he took great interest in his course, inquiring at intervals the bearings of certain land and sea marks. When informed as to his position he did not hesitate to express his satisfaction or otherwise, and he regulated his pace accordingly. The end of the flood tide on which the swim was started took Burgess three miles north of the South Sands Head Lightship. In three hours he was six miles direct off the land. The lop was still troubling him.

He was slightly sick three times and after about three hours' swimming, he had a serious consultation with his pilot as to the advisability of remaining in the water. "A couple more turns of sickness will finish me," he said. He was advised that the wind was dropping, and he once more settled down and swam steadily on although it was evident that he was still feeling far from well.

The ebb-tide was tremendously strong. Burgess came down channel at a great pace, and the Calais boat due at Dover at 5 o'clock passed many miles eastward of him. His westward drift took him as far as the Shakespeare colliery, situated half way between Folkstone and Dover. The weather was improving rapidly, and the swimmer was in better spirits after six hours' swimming than after two.

STRONG EBB-TIDE.

One of the most important points in a channel swimmer's calculations is the Varne Buoy. A great deal often depends upon how near the swimmer gets to this buoy, which marks a sandback several miles in length, and about seven miles off Dover. The buoy first showed up two miles to the northwest, but the ebb-tide was so strong that seven hours from the start Burgess was situated three miles south of the Varne, or, roughly, halfway across the channel, ten miles direct on the way to France, in seven hours. It was a position that any channel swimmer would have envied. Burgess was satisfied, but not elated. He was fast settling down to the real business of the swim, and those on board heard little from him except the swish, swish of his mighty stroke and occasionally a jest about any unfortunate member of the party who looked a little sickly.

About this time after eighteen hours' swimming Burgess got a little weak. He stated that he was all right physically, but felt "lightheaded." He said he could see a mirage, and summed the whole situation up by saying he had "a bad fit of the blues, and if the boys didn't sing to him he should chuck it shortly."

The party immediately called upon its musical members, who were somewhat scarce and all badly out of form. Mr. Watson led off with the "Miserere," from "Il Trovatore," surely a queer melody for anyone longing for a word of encouragement.

PARTY SANG.

Burgess asked for the "Marseillaise," and the whole party broke out into the stirring strain of the French national anthem, which they sang sometimes for twenty minutes or so without stopping. Burgess soon recovered his spirits after this, but another trouble showed itself in the shape of muscular cramp in the region of the heart, caused, so Burgess thought, by the exertions of his over-arm action with his left arm. He swam warily for nearly three hours and made frequent inquiries as to his position and the time he would probably have to stay in the water. High tide at Grisnez was at 9:40 and the slack water was felt at 7:40. Thinking he was still many miles off, Burgess asked for twenty drops of champagne every hour, "and not another drop if I go down on my knees for it."

When informed that he was only a mile and a half off shore he brightened up very much and went away again with the words, "No champagne, then." Mr. Watson gave him a tabloid and some essence of peppermint, which seemed to ease him of his pain, and he went on again steadily.

POINTS OF THE SWIM.

Started from Dover, 11:15 a.m., Tuesday; landed two miles east of Cape Grisnez, 9:50 a.m., Wednesday; total time occuped, 22 hours 35 minutes; distance across the channel, 21 miles; Actual distance covered by Burgess, 60 miles; got over on three full tides and two part tides; cost of trying the swim for one season, $5000; value of Alexandra cuts, $1250.

WOLFFE FAILED.

The list of attempts to rival Capt. Webb's feat is a monument to pluck and skill. Over and over again have some of the swimmers tried, only to have success snatched away when it was almost in their grasp. Particularly notable are the efforts of Jabez Wolffe and Montague Holbein. Some of the most notable attempts have been:

1901—Aug. 24 and 25: Montague Holbein's first attempt. Starting from Capt. Grisnez, he swam to five miles of England, and gave up. In the water twelve hours forty-six minutes.

1902—July 31: Holbein started from France, and swam for twelve and a half hours, covering about thirty miles.

1902—Aug. 27 and 28: Holbein started from Cape Grisnez, and swam to within one mile of England.

1904—Sept. 7: Burgess's first attempt. Swam fifteen miles in eight hours in a rough sea, and gave up within six miles of France.

1905—July 28: Burgess swam to within four and a half miles of Calais. Was in the water for twelve and a half hours.

1905—Aug. 24: Miss A. Kellerman swam for six hours twenty-two minutes.

1906—July 18: Wolffe's first attempt. Swam for ten hours, and got within five miles of France.

1906—Aug. 30: Burgess swam and drifted forty-two miles in eighteen hours.

1907—Aug. 5: Wolffe was in the water fifteen and a half hours, covering forty miles and got within three-quarters of a mile from Cape Grisnez.

1907—Aug. 5: Heaton swam for ten and a half hours, and got within four miles of French coast.

1907—Sept. 16: Wolffe swam for eleven and a half hours and got within two miles of French coast.

1908—July 6: Wolffe swam for fourteen hours and got within three miles of France.

1908—Aug. 17-18: Burgess swam within one mile of Cape Grisnez, after swimming fifty miles in twenty hours.

1908—Sept. 19: Wolffe swam for nearly fifteen hours and got within 440 yards of French coast.

1908—Aug. 28: Heaton swam for seventeen hours, and got within one and a half miles of the French coast.

1911—July, 21-22: Wolffe started from French coast, swam for fifteen and a half hours, and reached within 800 yards of the English shore. Distance covered during swim thirty-three miles.

1911—Sept. 2-3: Wolffe swam for fourteen and a quarter hours. Started from Sangatte, and reached within a mile of St. Margaret's Bay.

FAITH IN ROSS.

From close observations and competition with two of the world's champions extending from 1905 to the present time, including such world's wonders as B. Keian and Beaurepare of Australia, C. M. Daniels, of the N.Y.A.C., Jarvis at one time the long-distance amateur champion of the world, and H. Taylor of Great Britain, Bud Goodwin the all powerful swimmer of the East. G. R. Hodgson of Canada Olympic, champion for the mile, 1908, and a host of other world renowned swimmers, I am firmly convinced Norman Ross is the one man in the world today who can swim the channel.

In watching him swim for the mile championship of America against Ludy Langer in 1916 at Ocean Park, I singled him out, notwithstanding he lost the race to Langer by a yard or so, as the coming swimmer at all distances from fifty yards up, my deductions for doing so being based on his wonderful physique, and powerful, yet even rythm action of the American crawl stroke. His records from that date would fill over a column, his recent success as a member of the American Expeditionary Force at the inter-Allied water carnival in Paris adding further laurels by scoring twenty points as against twenty-two points tallied collectively by the other contestants in the meet.

HAS ABILITY.

Competition was keen, having against him several men of international repute, such as Harold Hardwick and William Longworth, famous Australian champions. Ross's five victories in such wide ranging events as 100, 400, 800, 1500 free style, and 100-yard backstroke swims, with heats and finals run off in quick succession denote on his part all-around ability and stamina unparalled in the history of swimming.

Ross is a giant in size. He stands over six feet and weighs around 205 pounds in condition. Clean of muscle and supple, however, he handles himself with remarkable ease, particularly in the water, and is among our most graceful swimmers. He uses a noticably slow, powerful stroke, spanning the length of a seventy-five-foot pool with half a dozen arm drives; and, until a short while ago, he affected the four-beat single trudgen crawl exclusively. Recently, however, he has been experimenting with the six-beat double trudgen crawl. And it is not unlikely that he will adopt it, as it seems to suit him admirably.

The victory over the treacherous channel, does not depend entirely upon any particular stroke, although I am inclined to the opinion a steady crawl stroke, or the trudgen-crawl, has certain advantages over the strokes used by Capt. Webb, and Thomas Burgess.

The success of the swim depends mainly upon physique and bulldog tenacity, combined with a careful study of all the varying conditions, with the course navigated by an experienced pilot, with good weather prevailing. Given such conditions there is no reason why Ross should not be the third man in the world, to accomplish this great feat of indurance. He may not do it the first time, although that is not improbable, but with the luck of the tides with him and with his superhuman physique he should wrest the victory over the channel, for the honor of America, and set the fastest mark for the future swimmers of the world to go after.

AIDS FELLOW-JURIST.

Judge Bledsoe to Hear Cases in the Absence of Judge Trippet.

In the absence of Judge Trippet on his annual vacation, Judge Bledsoe will tomorrow hear the calendars of both departments of the Federal Court.

Among the matters to be disposed of is the extradition of John Bowman, who is wanted in Oklahoma, on the charge of violating the Mann white slave law. It is alleged that Bowman took Miss Pansy Martin, his sister-in-law, from Pushawka, Oklahoma, to Wichita and other Kansas points for an immoral purpose.

The objections of a number of creditors of Edward D. Silent, a former well-known business man of this city, to his discharge from bankruptcy will also be up for disposition by the court.

The Atterbury Challenge

The Atterbury invites the most intimate side-by-side comparison, with all other trucks. It welcomes a real analysis, one that goes down deep into its inner goodness and opens up it's hidden secrets.

It is the ultimate and final analysis of part for part, the chemistry of the metal in the axles, the machining of the gears and similar essential points, that tell the real reasons for Atterbury supremacy. But, after all, the history of Atterbury achievement is written in the record of its accomplishments. Neither time nor competition can erase that record.

Time tells.

No machine can bluff against the wear and tear of service.

Time tells.

The Atterbury welcomes the severest test of time.

Starting one week after the army's truck convoy over the Lincoln highway, this Autocar truck, one of the new 3½-ton models, is buzzing along on its way to the Coast. It is going to climb Pike's Peak and then come through San Francisco to Los Angeles.

A TOUR OF EDUCATION.

Motor Trucks to Travel Six States Showing Ability to Farmers.

An event unique in the history of automotive industry will be the national motor truck development tour, which will be run under the auspices of the National Association of Motor Truck Sales Managers.

This tour will leave Chicago August 4, and will visit six States before it finishes, October 4, at Milwaukee. In the course of visiting the six States it will cover 3000 miles through the rich farming section of the middle Northwest.

This tour will be participated in by twenty truck factories, each factory being limited to one entry. There are other interesting conditions about the entrants. The capacity range will be from one to two and a half tons. And furthermore, each truck must be equipped with pneumatic tires.

But the thing that distinguishes it perhaps more than the items above mentioned is that the tour is run solely with the idea in view of selling to the farmer the idea of motorization of his acreage. The entrants will not carry any specific advertising matter extolling the virtues of this or that particular truck. They will carry no literature other than that which has the O.K. of the National Association of Truck Sales Managers. And the literature that gets this O.K. will be literature that is for the good of the entire motor truck and farm industry. The tour will distribute several hundred thousand pamphlets in which the motorization of the farm will be discussed from every angle.

The tour will carry a United States naval band along throughout the entire tour. In addition to furnishing music the navy lads will do recruiting.

Not only will the tour participants pass out general literature discussing the advantages of the truck over the horse-drawn vehicle, but the individual trucks will give actual demonstrations to prove the economy in both money and time of the gasoline-driven vehicle. All types of bodies will be carried, and demonstrations will be arranged en route to carry loose hay for the farmers, pick up a load of live stock, wheat, oats or anything else they may wish to transport to the evelator or the city. Actual account will be kept of the mileage covered, the gasoline consumption, the oil used, character of the roads, etc.; and this will be compiled, given to the farmer, and also kept for accurate data on truck performance. The truck manufacturer realizes the necessity for the farmer speeding up production, even with the shortage of farm help.

A truck will carry a third more grain than a horse-drawn vehicle, it will make three round trips of eleven miles each way while the two-horse vehicle is covering the same ground once. It will displace the horse as surely as the horse did the ox. Further, the truck works as well at the end of ten hours as it did at the beginning. It does not sicken in the stable and die in a night; it is not so affected by noonday heat that it must rest during the heated period. Farm land is at a premium in America, and yet the horses on the farms consume the product of 135,000,000 acres yearly. That represents, in wheat, perhaps 2,000,000 bushels, as a conservative estimate. It is well known that it takes the product of five acres to support one horse. The average farm has not less than eight horses. This means forty unproductive acres. These facts have all been recognized. The farmers last year bought thousands of motor trucks. This year they will buy thousands more. And this tour will spread the propaganda of motorization of the farm. The United States government put its stamp of approval on this tour by furnishing the naval band.

The route briefly is: Chicago, Elgin, Rockford, Ill.; Dubuque, Cedar Rapids, Des Moines, Mason City, Sioux City, Iowa; Sioux Falls, Huron, Redfield, Aberdeen, S. D.; Jamestown, Bismarck, Minot, Devil's Lake, Fargo, N. D.; Sisseton, Brookings, S. D.; Tyler, Lamberton, Sleepy Eye, Mankato, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Winona, Minn.; La Crosse, Barabo, Janesville, Waukesha, Milwaukee, Wis. There are seventy citties on the route.

IT SIGNALS DIRECTIONS.

Dealers in automobile accessories are advising their customers to remember the requirements of the new motor law about signalling of intention to stop, turn or change direction. Records compiled by traffic officers show that many collisions are due to the failure of drivers of motor vehicles to properly signal their traffic indications.

Several dozen signalling devices are on the market, but only three have received certificates of approval from the State Motor Vehicle Department, as meeting the requirements of the new California law. One of these is the auto indicator safety signal, distributed on the Coast by Norman Cowan Company. This signal has no complicated attachments and works so accurately that a number of the men who made the official tests for the State have chosen this signal as equipment for their cars.

The "Stop" and "Go" device works automatically with the application of the foot brake and shows plainly on the rear in place of the usual tail light. The right and left turn are operated by a convenient hand lever.

Owners of closed cars and operators of large motor trucks, where the width of the seat or the load obscures the vision from the rear, must be equipped with the mechanical signal. The auto indicator signal is so simple in its mechanism and is so easily installed and works so accurately that it is meeting with great favor throughout the State.

CHOSE SOLID TIRE FOR HUSKY TRUCKS.

POSTOFFICE DEPARTMENT NAMES WELL-KNOWN FIRM TO PROVIDE RUBBER.

The Pacific Rubber Company, distributor of Polack solid truck tires, has just been apprised by the Polack Tire and Rubber Company of New York that the Postoffice Department at Washington has just awarded a contract for Polack equipment on all heavy duty trucks operated by that department throughout the country until the close of this year, according to L. S. Rounsvalle, secretary and treasurer of the Los Angeles concern.

For the first time since the Pacific Rubber Company was appointed distributor in Southern California and Arizona of Polack solid tires, a shipment commensurate with its needs are now on the way from the New York factory, stated Rounsvalle. "As soon as the carload reaches us we will be able to meet the requirements of dealers and individuals," he declared.

DISTINCTLY AMERICAN.

The observer was told the other night what the typical American animal was and he is interested enough in the discovery to pass it on to others. "It is the skunk," his informer told him, "for three reasons: First, the skunk is found only within the confines of America. Second, it has a star on its forehead and stripes running through its back. Third, it is like a typical American—if let alone it harms no one, if interfered with it fights to a standstill. That is, it fights until it stands still and the other fellow runs."—[Columbus Dispatch.

Busy With Artificial Flowers.

[A. P. FOREIGN CORRESPONDENCE.]

BERLIN, June 17.—A special telegram from Chemnitz reports the arrival there of the first American buyers who are placing orders for artificial flowers. A report from Vienna states that the fashion specialty shops there are placing liberal orders with English and French firms who are flooding the Austrian market with offers.

HEADLIGHT LAW TO BE ENFORCED.

You have about three weeks, Mr. Motorist, in which to meet the requirements of the new headlight law which went into effect on July 22.

Get busy, warns the Automobile Club of Southern California, and adjust your lights or adopt one of the lenses which has been approved by the State.

Yes, you can do your own adjusting, says the club's legal department, if you know what the requirements are, and if you don't know, get in touch with the club by letter or telephone and find out. You do not have to purchase one of the devices approved by the State. That is final.

But you do have to secure either maize, rib, moss, Florentine or standard prism glass and install it, then you have to meet the law requirements by proper adjustments or you will be arrested in about twenty days.

HELP SAILORS WITH YOUR CAR.

Every automobile owner, through the efforts of the Los Angeles Motor Car Dealers' Association, is going to be given an opportunity to entertain the visiting officers of the Pacific fleet with an auto ride next Sunday.

All you have to do, Mr. Motorist, is to call up the dealer of the car you own and tell him you will be ready to help on Sunday morning.

Each dealer will keep a list of those offering their cars, and, when complete, these lists will be turned over to the Automobile Club of Southern California, where final arrangements for the disposition of the cars will be made and the owners notified.

Family parties planning a Sunday trip are asked to include one or more naval officers. Hundreds of cars are needed, so be patriotic and offer yours.

TEMPORARY HOME MUST BE PICKED.

DEALERS FOR NEW LIGHT SIX WILL HAVE TO LOCATE UNTIL THINGS ARE READY.

Pending erection of the permanent home for the new Cleveland car, which will be distributed in Southern California by W. P. Herbert, it will be necessary to occupy a temporary location. Don Smith, sales manager for the new organization, is now busily engaged in obtaining this location and reports that he has several in view. One of those most favored is in the very heart of the automobile retail district, and if decided upon, will be convenient to everyone who has expressed interest in the car. Eventually the Herbert company will occupy a four-story building at the southeast corner of Flower and Eleventh streets.

Definite announcement of the specifications and selling price of the Cleveland has been made in the motor trade magazines of the country. It was not until about a week ago that the distributors who have been selected throughout the United States were informed as to what the price of the car will be at the factory. Photographs show that the Cleveland will be a very attractive addition to the lightweight, six-cylinder cars now on the market.

MOTOR TRAIN COMING SOON.

WONDERFUL GOOD ROADS BOOST BY THE ARMY IS TO ARRIVE SHORTLY.

When the transcontinental army motor convoy with forty-two trucks, and complement of other vehicles, crosses the mountains into California, it will be met by a large delegation of California motorists who will extend an official welcome. The convoy is headed by a standard army Cadillac staff car. A Cadillac searchlight chassis is in charge of the engineers.

The train, which started from the national capitol at Washington, will travel overland an estimated distance of approximately 3500 miles, finishing at the Presidio, San Francisco. This is one of the biggest good roads demonstrations yet attempted. But for the development of the Lincoln Highway idea it would be impossible to carry it out. Occurring just before the Townsend Highway bill for a $425,000,000 national highway programme comes up for passage in Congress it is one of the best recommendations which could possibly have been presented for the bill's passage.

MONTANA MAN IS GETTING MILEAGE.

An example of what a little care will do in the matter of using automobile tires is found in the experience of S. E. Crocker of Butte, Mont. He is using an Oakland car and is particularly careful that his tires are run at the proper inflation. He states that with just a little extra care the set of Goodyear tires now on his car have run 13,000 miles, and look good for many more miles.

TESTING PLUGS.

When a spark plug is suspected of not operating, remove it from the cylinder without disconnecting the wire terminal and laying the metal part of the plug on the engine. By turning the engine over slowly the electrical circuit will then be completed by the commutator and if the spark plug is working a spark will jump between the two points. If not, it is a good indication that the plug is foul and needs cleaning or else is short circuited and worthless.

KEEP THE CAR FROM THIEVES.

Put Private Marks on it and Foil Robbers.

Some Good Methods of Fooling Jitney Grabbers.

Distinctive Marking Sure to Bring Results.

If the average car owner were asked whether he could identify his own car under any given set of circumstances, his impulse would be to return an unqualified and indignant affirmative. The police of any of our larger cities would disagree with him just as unqualifiedly.

HARD TO TELL.

As a matter of fact, most car owners depend for identification on some scratch on the body, some broken screw in the chassis or some other equally uncertain factor. They do not stop to consider that our big manufacturers are turning out models in ten thousand lots that differ from each other in not the slightest discernible degree. By the time a successful automobile thief has run a stolen car through his "service station" it will puzzle the most careful owner on earth to identify his vehicle.

An instance in point is found in the recent experience of a car owner in a middle western city who lost his car, a touring model of a popular make, and after some three weeks of anxious waiting was summoned to police headquarters to see whether he could identify a vehicle answering to his description of his lost car.

ALL AFTER IT.

Arrived at the police station, he found a small group of other owners, who had assembled to try and identify the same car to see which he had been summoned. The hopeful owner had a number of marks by which he felt confident he could prove his ownership of the restored vehicle. There was a bent screw in one part of the chassis, a dent in one fender, a scratch of peculiar shape on the dash. The car with which he was confronted was undoubtedly of the same vintage as his lost boat, but, unhappily, it was painted a rich ultra-marine blue instead of the dark green that had graced his vehicle. The most earnest scrutiny failed to disclose any of the distinguishing marks on which he had relied. A slight chipping of the new enamel revealed the fact that it had been put on over a previous coat of the dark green that our friend had described.

A LUCKY ONE.

But two of the other assembled owners had put in bids for dark green cars and eventually one of them managed to identify the car by a chip in the gearset housing. The identification was not particularly convincing, but in the absence of anything better it served to give the car to the owner who had been able to describe the imperfection.

As a matter of fact, no car owner ought to depend on any such casual means of identification as slight imperfections that may have accrued during the operation of the vehicle. When the professional automobile thief steals a car he takes it to what amounts practically to a rebuilding factory. In many cases the entire mechanism is taken down and the different parts are redistributed with those from other cars of the same make and model to turn out what amount to new vehicles. Mechanical units are shuffled about so that a slight imperfection on one part means nothing except that that particular part once had a place on a certain car.

SAFE METHOD.

The only safe method of placing identification marks on a car is to place them on all the major parts of the mechanism. Perhaps the most satisfactory method of doing so is to place punch marks on the various units. All such marks should be put in places where they will not be readily discernible. For instance, on the inside of the axles, on the flywheel, on the upper side of the gearset housing. After the marks have been made they should be rubbed over with grease until they are as nearly indistinguishable as possible. The car owner can have a prick punch made with his initials on it in very fine type and with this it is possible to place identification marks on the various parts that will generally escape notice and yet remain permanently.

A GOOD IDEA.

One owner whom I know has had the upholstery of his front and rear seats lifted up and has tacked his card on the wooden framework of the seat. This is not at all because the thief would think to look in this location an identification mark of any

Another clever idea is to few small holes a mere fraction an inch into the framework given place, carefully from permanently located marks. Then fill these holes lead and smear the spot well grease. If there comes a time it is necessary to identify the is a simple matter to measure proper distance, scrape a the lead off and prove of the car.

"Built Up to a Standard Not Down to a Price"

We consider that we are fortunate in securing this line for this territory, for entering upon its fourteenth year of production there has not been one when the Dorris was not a complete success.

The Dorris fundamentals of valve-in-head motor, unit power plant and multiple disc clutch have been copied universally—a tribute to Dorris engineering. It is beautifully designed, luxuriously equipped and the class of construction of the highest type. You may ride in the Dorris as fast or as slow as you like.

It is a type of car that reflects refinement, distinction, efficiency and thorough dependability. As the factory output is limited, our quota must be in proportion.

Another clever idea is to bore a few small holes a mere fraction of an inch into the framework at a given place, carefully measured from permanently located landmarks. Then fill these holes with lead and smear the spot well with grease. If there comes a time when it is necessary to identify the car it is a simple matter to measure off the proper distance, scrape a little of the lead off and prove ownership of the car.

HINTS ON HOW TO CARE FOR RUBBER

Says Ed Harris, secretary of the Tire Construction Company: "Be sure your brakes are free to save your tires. A gripping brake will ruin a tire in no time. Don't let your oil flow on your tires, as this tends to separate the tire and rob it of half its mileage—oil and rubber are enemies and don't go together. Don't forget to keep your wheels true and in line."

KEEP OFF THE RAILS.

With nearly a million new drivers on the roads this year we may be excused for offering the suggestion that running on car tracks is a deadly habit, as regards the tires. The sharp pieces of steel that flake off from the tracks cut the rubber, and tear the tread, and cost the motorists of America many a dollar in honest tire wear every year. The Library, to stand in the center of a park comprising four square blocks. The library will be erected along circular designs adapted from the New York City Courts building.

The Community Little Theater, to mark the last unit in the three groups of architectural monuments and which will be used for productions of little plays for the public. The Community Little Theater will command a view of the library and library park.

A Parkway, linking Los Angeles boulevard with Figueroa boulevard, and which marks the southern boundary of the business district. Along this beautiful parkway, property values will greatly increase in value as it will be a most suitable location for clubs, hotels and apartment-houses which will be constructed along a uniform plan.

A wonderful boulevard system will entirely surround the entire project. Figueroa street, Sunset boulevard, Los Angeles street and Eleventh street will be transformed to wide, handsome boulevards and will tend to anchor the business district, preventing it from shifting as it has in the past.

Wilson Square—a beautiful park, named in honor of the President, and to be the greatest of the city's pleasure spots. In the center of the park will stand a great obelisk commemorating the Inner-Circle Civic Plan.

The Great Recreation Center—to be erected on Normal Hill and to be connected with Pershing Square by a parkway. At the Recreation Center will be a huge convention hall accommodating 15,000 people, which will be used for conventions, fairs, banquets and auto shows. A large opera stage will also grace the community center, to be used for the staging of operas and large scenic productions. Other features will be a music hall, for concerts, lec- res and entertainments, an art gallery for con- mporary art exhibits, and an open-air casino ith 3000 seats.

The Victory Fountain, to be raised in the center of Victory Park and to be a memorable shaft perpetuating the story of America's great victory in the world war, and commemorating the valorous sacrifices made by the American soldiers.

The City Hall, to be a magnificent monumental edifice, erected on the summit of a hill in the northern section of the proposed Inner-Circle Civic Plan, to add beauty to the skyline of Los Angeles and which will stand as a majestic temple of achievement commanding a superb view of the artistic structures within the entire beautifying plan. In this building will be located the council chambers and the executive offices of the Mayor.

The Administration Building, harmonizing with the architecture of the City Hall, adjacent to it, and where all the offices and departments pertaining to the administration of the civic affairs will be situated.

The Roman Baths, suggested by the his- old Roman baths of the pompous days of e and which now lie crumbling in ruins. The Roman Baths will be free to the public and will be conveniently located near the residential n of the poorer residents of the city. The s will be designed after the historic baths the Roman Empire with marble pools and tic columns and gardens.

The State Buildings, to be two in number, which will be erected by the State as California's part in permanently beautifying the city. In the State buildings will be housed the offices of the various commissions and tax offices.

The City Utilities Buildings, to be four in number, and which will be built along a unity plan. These structures will be erected in a row and will grace one of the many boulevards which will honeycomb the Civic Center.

The Greek Open-Air Theater, to nestle on the side of the hill on Sunset boulevard, north of the Plaza Church and where ancient Greek costume plays and Shakespeare dramas will be produced.

The Union Depot, to be situated northeast of the Plaza. All the trains entering the city will arrive at this mammoth depot and parkways will be so laid that the visitors to the city will pass through the heart of the Civic Center group of handsome buildings and beautiful parks to reach the business section.

The Garden Beautiful in Southern California.

INFORMATION BOTH PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC. BY ERNEST BRAUNTON.

THE Garden Beautiful editor has been spending a few days in the seductive climate of Santa Barbara, visiting all of her parks, some of her gardens and snapping views of her luxuriant sub-tropical vegetation. One cannot long linger in the balmy atmosphere of that section without involuntarily recalling Tennyson's lotus eaters:

"In the afternoon they came unto a land,
In which it seemed always afternoon.
All 'round the coast the languid air did swoon,
Breathing like one that hath a weary dream."

But it is not, as Tennyson's fabled realm, "a land of streams." For tell it not in Los Angeles, Santa Barbara is the driest city on the Pacific Coast, not only since July 1, but throughout the summer. But at present the gardens are lovely, from the quaint, old-fashioned make-believe gardens of the old mission to the supreme effort manifested in those of the millionaire colony out at Montecito. And Montecito, of thee I sing! For thirty-one years the writer has been visiting this charming valley with its many hills and canyons, and every year it seems fairer than before. It is fairer, too; for every year one or more ambitious home builders settle there after having visited the fairest of foreign lands, and each tries to produce a house and garden that is the sum total of all the good things seen abroad. This land of afternoon has lured the best and highest of the earth to settle there, for has not one statesman President the boss of the world, bought a home tract there? Here, too, men of giant affairs such as J. Ogden Armour are acquiring sites upon which to expend millions and where they expect to pass the sunset of their lives. The writer spent hours going over the Armour place of fifty-five acres of heavily wooded hill and canyon. Though improvements are still in a crude state, it is said some hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent there, but for what purpose the writer could not discover. No evidence of such expenditure is apparent and it may be but rumor. But the site is second to none in the world and here one day will a magnificent residence and garden be built, no doubt the finest in that section of California's most beautiful homes. Montecito is surely destined to possess more fine country homes, acres in extent, than any other section of California, for added to a land of great natural beauty is a climate acknowledged by all globe-trotters to be earth's finest. "All 'round the languid air did swoon."

Conifers Dying.

In some parts of California large borers are killing deodars and cedars. Lovely specimens of large Cedrus Deodara are succumbing to the activities of the pest. There is no way of getting rid of them by general treatment, each villain must be attacked and killed. The most successful treatment seems to be a hot wire, which would effectually dispose of any life. Find the lair and run a heated wire through the worm. As the hole he bores is no larger than is necessary for him, the wire never misses him. Some use a large can of distillate and squirt the hole full, but the wire method is better. This pest is very bad at Santa Barbara, but does not seem to have reached Los Angeles. If your conifers show the presence of these worms, get out your wire or we will be asking "wire" you not doing your duty.

Avocado Experiences.

A good many years ago the writer bought the first avocados that were offered for sale as budded trees. They were two in number and known as Taft No. 1, and Taft No. 2. What they are now called matters not. The first winter's frost cut them down to the ground and the roots did sprout. Since then he has had many trying experiences and now has stopped trying, either experiences or avocados. It is so much more fun to watch the other fellow. It is also lots of fun to raise seedlings, give them away, and watch results. Eleven years ago the writer planted two of his seedlings on the F. J. Hart place at Sierra Madre. In three years they bore well and were fifteen feet high. The fruits were as good in every way as the named parent, and the trees are now of immense size, but the variety is not a good one. The last budded tree the writer's garden received was of a good standard variety. It was four feet high but was larger in trunk two feet above the soil than at the surface—a strange fact. Slender as it was, it had no stake to stiffen it and it had been hauled about, the top swaying until the first four or six inches of trunk above the ball was discolored through the enforced flexibility and in one more day was black, though the top was green and leaves but little wilted. Of course the tree was dead on the lower few inches of trunk when received. However, it was planted, defoliated and heavily shaded, but in a few days the black had extended upward to the tips. A stake properly tied would have saved this tree. Two weeks later the roots were dug up for examination. Many sprouts had started below the bud but were weak and spindly. The roots were few and puny compared with the size of the tree and the seedling plant had been held in the first pot so long that the main roots were twisted like a corkscrew. The writer has them yet. This explained the weakly trunk, forced by water in rich soil. The ball was also not more than twenty pounds weight, much too small for such a large tree. The public is advised to look carefully at those offered for sale and buy none that are as herein described.

Avocado Dealers.

Every month readers of this page write for information on avocados, what varieties to buy, and where to buy them. The editor is not interested in the dealer's end of the matter and any dealer's name given carries with it no special recommendation. It is merely an opinion as to the reliability of the man or men. The writer never received a penny, directly or indirectly, from any of them and has no special friendship for any. There are a few, perhaps, and very few, who are not fair and square. There may be more who do not grow good stock, but this may come through ignorance of the best or the proper methods. The writer has now before him two letters regarding avocados, yes, three. Mention of one will suffice. It is from Chicago. The writer owns five acres near Los Angeles. He wishes to plant the tract to avocados, would know what varieties to plant and where to purchase them. To quote: "Hoping that when the trees are three or four years old they will support my family of four." Vain hope! They will not do it. But the writer is not asked to answer that phase of the question and does not presume to act as business adviser to correspondents.

The Indian Hawthorn.

In sandy soils quite alkaline a fine shrub is Raphiolepis Indica, the Indian Hawthorn, native to South China. Unlike the dwarf R. Umbellata, variety ovata, quite common, this newer species quickly makes a shrub six feet high. It flowers freely with attractive white flowers and some of the foliage is tinted with red, giving somewhat the appearance of eastern deciduous shrubs after a sharp frost. It seems not to be used in Los Angeles, but we should have it.

A Grand Hibiscus.

While at Santa Barbara, Ralph T. Stevens called the writer's attention to a grand old shrub now nearly obsolete in California, a good old stand-by of days long past! This is Hibiscus Heterophyllus. It has large flowers, three to four inches long and as much across the mouth, white, with a large crimson eye. It is a native of Australia and seems peculiarly at home in Southern California, flowering freely throughout the greater part of the year. The writer liked it so well that he "swiped" some seed pods.

Alkali in Shale.

A resident on Angeleno Heights states his garden has a subsoil of shale and at times he has found a white powdery deposit between the layers of shale. Avocados there have had die-back quite seriously and two have died. Around some trees, after soil dries, there is a whitish deposit on the surface. In places the shale is very hard and these places have been dynamited.

On the north side of Westlake Park, where there are similar hills above, no blue grass can be grown on account of the alkaline water coming out of the soil, although two drainage systems have been installed. Dynamiting spots in these hills will do little good unless dynamited or trenched so the alkali may be drained away. When holes are blown in the shale all the surrounding alkali is washed into these bowls and they are the poorest places that trees could be planted as they are but settling basins for alkali. Drain well first and then to save your trees apply liberally of gypsum, this will change your black alkali to a less injurious form.

Oregon's Great Co-operative Cheese-Making Association.

(The Tillamook County Creamery Association, composed of more than a score of co-operative cheese associations in the Tillamook Valley, ranks with some of the California growers' organizations as an example of effective co-operation upon the part of agricultural producers. Under the supervision of experts employed by the central organization, the various cheese plants scattered through the Tillamook country are making a product that is absolutely uniform and which under a common trade name has become famous throughout the United States.)

There are twenty-four of these clean, model cheese factories scattered through a radius of sixty miles in the Tillamook alley.

What of Capon Raising in California?

CAN IT BE MADE AN INDUSTRY? BY HENRY W. KRUCKEBERG.

IT IS somewhat doubtful if the raising of capons will ever be a wide practice among poultrymen in California. This is not so much from any obstacles of climate or conditions, but chiefly from the fact that the Mediterranean class of poultry (which predominates in this State) does not lend itself economically to capon production. The breeds that make the best capons are the heavy ones—Brahams, Dorkings, Sussex, Rocks, Wyandottes, etc. The Leghorns, Campines, Anconas and other of the egg-laying types do not produce a carcass of sufficient size.

The production of capons has never attained the distinction of a recognized industry in California; a few are grown here and there, but hardly in sufficient numbers to become a reliable source of supply, even for a few months of the year. This may, in large measure, explain its rather sporadic character; for we believe that if quality and supply were a dependable quantity that a profitable market might be worked up.

In the public mind there is some doubt as to just what a capon really is, many thinking that it is some particular breed or variety of chicken. Only recently the writer received a letter taking this ground. Irrespective of breed or variety a capon is merely an emasculated cockerel. The effect of such an operation on the bird is to render him docile, to impart to the meat a tenderness and flavor that is highly appreciated by epicures and lovers of good eating generally; it also tends to add weight, but not to the extent that many suppose. Capons are no new thing, having been recognized as a dainty morsel for centuries, as witness the phrase of the melancholy Jacques in Shakespeare's Seven Ages of Man in "As You Like It," as possessing a "good round belly with fat capon lined"—indicating a person that was well fed. And from that date to the present capons have been more or less a feature of good eating.

As already stated, the heavier breeds only, are used for this purpose, any of the American, Asiatic or English class being desirable, with possibly the Brahmas, Rocks, Dorkings and Sussex among the first choice. The operation is usually performed when the males are from six to eight weeks old, or when the sex characteristics become quite pronounced. After this period the operation is liable to become more hazardous.

Caponizing instruments are made by makers of surgical tools and may be obtained of the poultry-supply houses, together with complete instructions for operating. And while this is not over-difficult, it has, nevertheless, been our observation that but few people become proficient without some personal instruction from an experienced hand. A clear eye, a steady hand and a cool head will soon "catch on" and have no trouble. When possible, it is advisable for the novice who has ambitions to grow capons to engage the services of someone experienced in the operation before risking his birds in an effort to perform the operation himself. Young cockerels of the right age do not seem to suffer in being caponized; the wound, when the work is well done, heals quickly. A skilled hand at the game will caponize about forty birds per hour.

The market price for capons ranges much higher than for ordinary table poultry, in some instances being nearly double. With the large tourist travel in Southern California and the resort hotels, it has always seemed to the writer that capons should be one of the most profitable divisions of an enlightened poultry culture; and though preaching it off and on for twenty-five years, the situation apparently remains the same, viz., and uneven and sporadic supply which makes a corresponding uneven demand. Possibly the preponderance of the Mediterranean class of fowls in this State, negatives its widest development.

The Importance of Charcoal.

The following article on the chemical constituents of charcoal and its action on bird and animal life (appearing in the Australian Hen, a monthly magazine devoted to poultry culture) is on the whole one of the most intelligent we have ever read; indeed, this fact is our excuse for reproducing it in its entirety in these columns. Read it carefully, then cut it out for future reference:

"Charcoal in the morning mash is, perhaps, not the best form of use, but will purify inferior mouldy pollard or weevily wheat, or rather prevent injurious effect by absorbing all bad traits. Charcoal cures and prevents indigestion, sour crop and flatulence. Birds with free access to charcoal never have worms, and they will, from natural impulse, eat vast quantities of it, and they know their own needs if they can get to what Nature says they need better than all the experts. Barren hens fed charcoal ad lib will often prove fertile. Charcoal is very feeding and invaluable in topping off poultry as known to epicures, whitens and makes tender and preserves the flesh. It is a grand disinfectant, having the power to absorb all bad gases, attracting them as raw onions will. Charcoal will prevent liver disease and meningitis if regularly supplied, and keep all working parts in going order. It makes gunpowder and cures distemper, also makes drawing crayons. It floats on water through its porosity, and absorbs gases and poisonous vapors. All fetid gases from waste matter and putrification enter the pores of charcoal, there meet the oxygen from atmosphere and the noxious excreta are decomposed and rendered null. Charcoal absorbs gases of the stomach and intestines, also of the liquids and the solids therein. It will also remove coloring matter.

"It is the nearest approach to pure carbon, 44 lb. of carbonic acid gas, containing 12 lb. of carbon or charcoal. Coal, soot, coke, are all varieties with different degrees of purity, and fowls or dogs eat any of them under natural desire, dogs almost invariably having worms when seen to eat coal or coke, quite common. One authority says that the diamond is chemically identical with charcoal, the difference said to be that diamonds are pure carbon crystallized, while charcoal is amorphous or devoid of peculiar shape. Black, brittle, porous charcoal! In the bodies of animals carbon forms a large proportion of their weight, and in vegetables still more. About half the weight of dry wheat, hay, roots, etc., consist of carbon. Charcoal buried in earth will remain any length of time without symptom of decay, and is often used in various parts of the world to preserve timbers which have to be sunk in the earth, poles and wooden foundations which rot. It acts like sponge, and is particularly useful in absorbing ammonia 100 times its own weight in ammonia gas. It is used in hospitals as a disinfectant, absorbing and retaining noxious vapors, purifies water and is used in many filters, preserves meat and prevents it tainting in hot weather. It—but use charcoal "ad lib" wherever you can except charcoal fumes."

Barred Rock, one of the heavy breeds making good capons.

Chicken Thieves and Remedies.

The fact that one of our leading commercial poultry farmers is enlarging his plant and having constructed around it a double fence, affording the free passage of watch dogs without disturbing the fowls, shows the importance of guarding against chicken thieves, which are always more or less prevalent and seldom caught nor punished. To be sure, there is sufficient legislation to negative this crime, but its operation usually follows the crime instead of preceding it. No matter how stringent the law, crime will be practiced by the vicious; people who prefer to take long chances rather than earn a living by honest effort. In lieu of this we find in operation all sorts of safeguards to make the "raising" of fowl off of perches by the light of the rolling moon as difficult and hazardous as possible. But in spite of all precautions, chicken stealing is a regular occurence wherever poultry is grown in large numbers.

Allowing for the fact that poultry is usually the possession of people in moderate circumstances, the stealing of fowl invariably effects a real hardship to poultry breeders. Often the labor of a whole season is ruined by the robbing of poultry plants, especially if the stock is pure blooded and represents careful matings and the maintenance of blood lines. In other cases the loss is equally severe if the stolen birds represent heavy laying specimens. For the most part stolen poultry usually finds its way to the butcher, thus realizing to the thieves only a small portion of its real value. But how is the crime to be stopped?

To our way of thinking, apprehended chicken thieves are let off too easy by the courts. A penitentiary sentence is none too severe, while sixty days in jail is soon forgotten and the culprit is again at the game. Particularly is this true at the present time when chicken meat and breeding stock is ruling high. It has always seemed to the writer that owners of poultry are justified in resorting to harsh measures in the protection of their property; a dose of bird shot from the muzzle of a gun is none to severe for these midnight prowlers. One or two good watch dogs with a bite in their barks are often effective in preventing thieving operations; burglar alarms serve a purpose, and high fences strongly built act as a barrier to the entrance to interiors of chicken houses. The several poultry organizations can do some good work by offering liberal cash awards for the apprehension and conviction of chicken thieves, while the courts should "go the limit" in the punishment of these petty crimes. In the Petaluma districts thousands of poultry are stolen annually, with but few arrests; the same is relatively true of other localities. With the automobile as an accessory, often hundreds of fowl are "lifted" in a single haul. What is to be done about it? Every poultryman has a right to protect his property, even with a shotgun used effectively with the loss of limb and possibly of life to the unwelcome guest in his chicken house during the night. Real action is usually effective action.

Egg a Day for Everybody.

Our Canadian friends are evidently alive to the importance of publicity in the exploitation and increased sale of poultry products—a subject that has been more or less discussed in this department. At a late meeting of the Dominion Poultry Conference, held in Ottawa, the slogan adopted was "An Egg a Day" for every man, woman and child in Canada. That would certainly mean some eggs for the poultry farmers to produce, and if put into effect by an intelligent advertising campaign (showing the food value of eggs) might be consummated. Statistics bearing on the total consumption in the United States will not be available until the 1920 census, but to multiply our entire population by 365 (the total number of days to the year) will give some idea of what the consumption of an egg a day would amount to in volume of product as well as annual value. In England something has been accomplished along these lines, which affords some startling facts. According to Edward Brown (The Feathered World for June 13) in 1913 (the maximum year) the total consumption of eggs in the United Kingdom, home produced and imported, was 5089 millions, equal to 353,444 tons (with packages,) or 113 per head of the population. In 1918, owing to the reduction of imports, the consumption was estimated at 2818 millions, equal to 200,000 tons, or sixty-two per head of the population. An average consumption of an egg per day per head of population would mean 16,625 millions, equal to 1,154,000 tons (with packages,) if all were produced within the United Kingdom, the increase to meet such demand would be 981,000 tons, or 565 per cent. above the native production in 1918.

Reducing these figures to local conditions, if an advertising campaign increased the consumption of one egg per capita of population in Los Angeles, the annual increase would be over half a million hen fruit a day. To think of it is to realize its importance as a feasible proposition, and yet every kind of breakfast food is advertised, excepting the nutritious egg, the greatest of them all. Why is it? Is it because the poultrymen do not believe in their own business; or do they lack the faith and initiative to give it an honest trial?

Selling Youngsters.

This is indeed an age for specializing—it plainly says let the shoemaker make shoes. The day-old-chick business has grown by leaps and bounds, and now we find hatcheries specializing in eight to twelve weeks old youngsters at prices ranging from $1 per head and up, with a good healthy demand for their product. To our mind it is a good proposition for both seller and buyer. The risk of mortality with a bunch of youngsters "on their feet" is much less than with day-old-chicks, and besides it lessens care and labor on the part of the egg farmers and owners of family flocks to maintain and strengthen their flocks in this way. When once "on their feet," the birds require little care beyond being given wholesome food, good quarters and sanitary surroundings. But its chief advantage is that it allows the egg farmer to attend strictly to cultivating a good crop of hen fruit, and the backlotters are relieved of much anxiety and trouble in the care of young chicks. Poultrymen who are catering to this demand report splendid sales; indeed, quite a number are already "sold out."

That Cock Bird.

Though the breeding season is about over, and on the whole it is advisable to eliminate the cock bird from the hens, it is not always advisable to dispose of him by way of a family dinner. If he is a good specimen, typical of the breed, full of vim and dash, better keep him over for another breeding season; or, if that is inexpedient, advertise him for sale for breeding purposes. In this way he will realize a larger value than by being sent to the block. This practice is observed in other live stock operations, and merits consideration on the part of poultry breeders and fanciers.

FISH HEADS FOR POULTRY.

A simple and inexpensive substitute for meat scraps which, often, are hard to obtain at the average butcher shop, is to utilize fish heads in the poultry ration. Arrangements usually can be made with local fish dealers to save these heads, particularly if the poultryman will furnish buckets in which the refuse may be kept until he calls for them. As they come from the dealer's shop, the fish heads are tough and covered with heavy scales and gristle. However, underneath is fine tender meat which the hens relish keenly. The poultrymen can soften the coarse outer shell by boiling the fish head in water for five to ten minutes and then pouring off the water and throwing the fish heads in among the chickens. In many instances the dealers are glad to get rid of the fish heads, and on the basis of actual food value the poultry keeper can afford to pay 4 or 5 cents for a quart of fish heads which provide a satisfactory protein-containing food for his flock.

A remarkable instance of productivity in fowls is found in the record of ten White Leghorns hens at the Ohio Experiment Station, which have produced 10,000 eggs. Two of the hens are nine years old, six are eight years old, and two are five years of age.

J. R. Huddleston, the Blue Andalusian specialist, recently exported a breeding pen to Jose Antonio Garcia, Mexico City, Old Mexico.

FARM AND TRACTOR SECTION.

Devoted to the multiform agricultural interests of the great Southwest and issued every week with the world's biggest Sunday newspaper.

EDITED BY HAROLD M. FINLEY.

Communications from practical farmers, ranchers, stock raisers, poultrymen, gardeners and others engaged either in a large or small way in the vital work of food production are gladly received.

Good clear photographs of interesting farm and garden activities are always welcomed. The Los Angeles Times Farm and Tractor Section is the only farm journal in the west printing illustrations in the incomparable rotogravure process.

Great Opportunities.

ALTHOUGH the average farmer cannot increase his acreage as easily and as rapidly as he might desire, he has it in his power to enlarge his income by increasing the production of his farm. One of the ways for the land-locked farmer to make more money is to market more and better live stock. There is for many but a limited chance for expansion in the production of intensely grown crops, but there is a great opportunity, especially in the irrigated regions of the Southwest, for expansion in the production of all classes of live stock.

Some interesting data along these lines has been assembled by the Department of Agriculture. In a study of forty-two farms in Henry county, Illinois, it was found that the farms which kept the most live stock per acre yielded the most income, labor, outlay and results all being taken into consideration. This was in a section where the live-stock business had long been well established and where its possibilities had been generally tried out. In Southern California live-stock raising is only in the infancy of its development and its possibilities. When the products of the ranch can be fed into stock and marketed on the hoof the farmer in this part of the country, especially, is engaging in a business that is not in any danger of being overdone and in which there is room for more producers and greater production for an indefinite period.

The Valley of Plenty.

UNUSUAL production has been the rule in the irrigated arid regions since water was first turned onto desert. The praises of the great interior valleys, especially those given keen life by the great Colorado, have been sung for years. Yet the amazing record of production during the past year in one of these valleys, the Imperial basin, is such as to again provoke encomium. Crops in all irrigated regions of the West are better, this year of low rainfall records, than those of unirrigated areas. But the crown of Imperial is set this year with new gems.

It is not at all unlikely that, this year, Imperial Valley will show a greater production value per acre of any general farming section in the West or Middle West. Railroad officials have assembled figures of shipments from the valley thus far this year. Up to July 1, approximately $43,000,000 worth of products had been shipped from the valley. This includes most of last season's cotton crop, but not this year's tremendous milo production. Of course this is an increase over the production of any other year in Imperial's history. That is the usual thing.

The coast section of Southern California does not feel the full force of the valley's production, as fully 60 per cent. of what the farmers of the great basin raise rolls eastward. Imperial cotton, cantaloupes, live-stock, lettuce, except a small portion, travel eastward. Buyers from the Atlantic Coast to the eastern edge of the Rockies come to the valley and secure products. Los Angeles and San Diego are reaching out for these products, and with the installation of a cotton compress and the coming of more ship lines to the port of Los Angeles, a much greater share of Imperial Valley's products will roll westward.

Decline Threatened.

IF THE live-stock industry of the United States is not to suffer a decline, immediate steps must be taken to solve the grave problem presented by the recent drop in beef and lamb prices to the producer at a time when the consumer is denying himself meat because of its high price. This is an anomalous situation for which Congress is trying to find a remedy.

There is no longer necessity for meat conservation in this country. Europe needs our surplus pork, but is getting a large part of its beef and mutton by importations from South America and Australia. But the mistaken meat conservation idea seems to prevail largely with the consumer, or he is unable to buy as much as formerly. As a result there is stagnation in the beef and mutton market, and producers who sell their products at this time are confronted with the danger of heavy financial losses which would tend to restrict production and cause a serious shortage in future.

Soon after the war England, Italy and other European countries began buying their beef in Argentina and Australia, but turned to Ameria for pork and pork products. It is probable that there will be a market for all our surplus swine in Europe for some months to come. But the market for surplus beef must largely be found at home. How is this to be accomplished?

Unless beef and mutton consumption is increased in the United States, the advance made by cattle and sheep raisers during the war will be lost, production decreased, and high prices to the onusumer probably rule. Many cattle raised in response to the patriotic demand for meat production for the army and navy are now maturing, and if sold on a falling market, loss will result to the producer. Stockmen do not deserve to be penalized for their patriotism, but should be supported by the consuming public in an effort to restore consumption to the normal without delay.

SUMMER SESSION LECTURES.

Tuesday, August 5—"Citrus Insects and Their Control; Pomegranate Culture; Persimmon Culture; Artificial Ripening." Wednesday, August 6—"Fumigation of Citrus Trees; Rare Fruits Grown in Southern California." Thursday, August 7—"Citrus Culture in Foreign Lands; Rare Semi-tropical Fruits" (stereopticon lecture.)

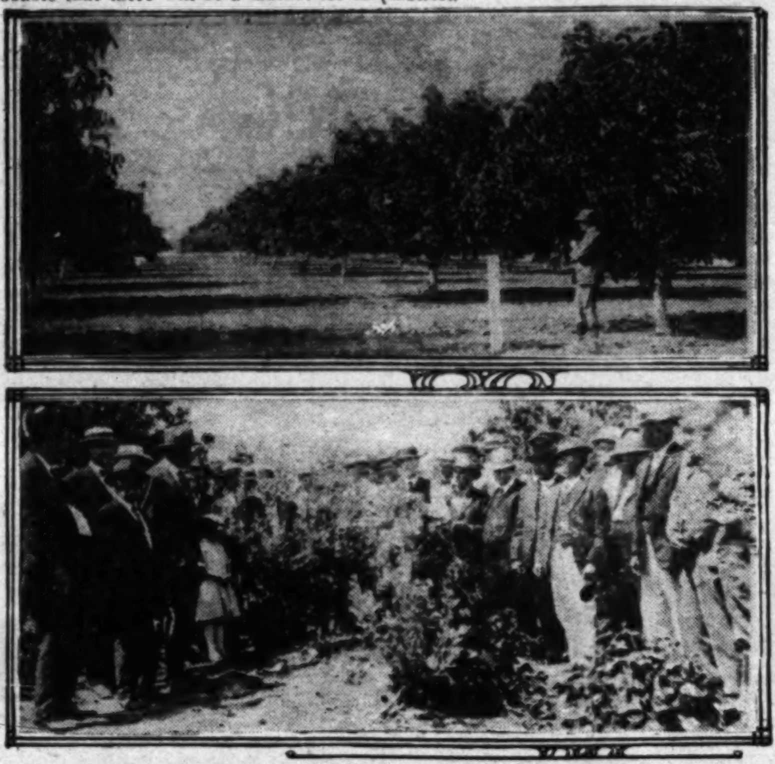
GARDENA VALLEY WOULD REPLACE GARDENS WITH CITRUS GROVES.

GARDENA.—To show the ranchers of the Gardena Valley the adaptability of its soil and climate for the growing of citrus and deciduous fruits, particularly lemons, oranges and walnuts, the Los Angeles County Farm Bureau conducted a tour of demonstration through the valley on July 18. Sixty ranchers took part in the trip and saw a vision of a valley of the future famous for its citrus products and nuts rather than for its strawberries, on which the Jap rancher now has a monopoly, its tomatoes, lettuce, cauliflowers and other truck garden products. The Farm Bureau was represented on the trip by W. S. Rosecrans, secretary; Robert W. Hodgson, farm adviser, and M. F. Shepherd, director of the Redondo-Torrance-Gardena-Moneta district.



Showing that Gardena Valley produces a diversity of crops.

Above is the walnut orchard of J. S. Stevens at Gardena; below, a group of ranchers examining a pineapple guava at the Boyd nursery in Lomita. Both photographs were taken on the occasion of the recent Farm Bureau trip through the valley, an excursion designed to show that the region can produce more than truck gardens.

When Dr. H. J. Webber, head of the citrus experiment station at Riverside, made a trip of inspection through the valley about a year ago he was impressed with the wonderful conditions prevailing there for the successful growing of citrus fruits. The soil and climatic conditions he pronounced excellent. With such favorable conditions, he was surprised to find that only a very small fraction of one per cent. of the available acreage in the valley was planted to citrus fruits. And this in further view of the fact that practically every experiment by ranchers in the valley in the growing of citrus fruits had proven remarkably successful.

According to Farm Bureau Secretary Rosecrans, who, incidentally, is one of the largest ranchers in the valley, there are in the district at least 65,000 acres of good farming land which could profitably be set to citrus and deciduous fruits. Only about 30 per cent. of this land is under intensive cultivation, and almost 60 per cent. of this is farmed by the little yellow men—ably assisted by all the women and children of their households. The Japanese population in the valley is increasing constantly. Practically all the land renters in the valley are Japanese who, although they pay a fair rental, comparatively speaking, do not pay sufficiently to give the owners of the land a good return on their investment.

It is partly to overcome a condition of affairs, which is turning the region over to an alien race and partly to show the owners of the land it will yield a good revenue if proper advantage is taken of the valley's soil and climate that a movement has been started to encourage the growing of citrus and deciduous fruits. This movement has the indorsement of the Fourth District Chambers of Commerce, a body composed of the civic organizations of Redondo Beach, Torrance, Gardena, Moneta, El Nido, Lomita, Hermosa Beach and other towns in the district. This endorsement, with the assistance of the Farm Bureau, is expected to yield good results in a short time.

THEY HAVE THE PROOF.

The first place visited on the demonstration tour was the nursery of William Boyle in Lomita. Mr. Boyle specializes in the growing of many varieties of semi-tropical fruits, particularly the feijoa sellowiana, more familiarly known as the pineapple guava, the custard apple, avocado, and other such varieties of fruit. All of his efforts have come up to his highest expectations, and many of his products have been exhibited at various places. His success in growing the pineapple guava has been particularly striking, the fruit weighing as much as five ounces each and being of an exceptionally good flavor. A test showed that these fruit contained 10 per cent. sugar.

The ranch of L. M. Pollock, another Lomita rancher who has been successful in the growing of avocados and oranges as well as other varieties of fruits, was also visited. Mr. Pollock has several six-year-old avocado trees on his ranch of the Taft and Dickenson variety, which, according to Mr. Hodgson, showed a remarkable growth and ranked with the best trees of this kind he has seen in Southern California. The fact that the avocado can be grown successfully in this district assures, in his estimation, the successful growing of lemons and oranges, which are considered a more hardy fruit. Mr. Pollock planted a row of evergreen trees around his ranch, which has proven an effective windbreak.

That walnuts can be grown successfully on a large scale is proven by the experience of J. S. Stevens, who has a ten-acre walnut ranch in Gardena. The trees on this ranch are all full grown and yielding a heavy and excellent crop. A visit through this ranch proved a revelation to many of the ranchers present on the trip.

The first man to grow lemons on a large scale in this district is A. Hasse of El Nido who also bears the distinction of being the first rancher to raise beans in the valley, which was eighteen years ago. Mr. Hasse stated that he was ridiculed by his fellow ranchers when he first announced that he was going in for bean raising, but that he came out successfully in this endeavor nevertheless. Now he is out to lead in a new field, the growing of lemons, and already has eighteen acres planted to this fruit. The trees are about a year old, very hardy in appearance, and more advanced in growth than trees of the same age in what is recognized as the lemon belt. Mr. Hasse, in addition to growing lemons, is also growing oranges and guavas very successfully.

SOIL CONDITIONS.

According to statements made by Mr. Hodgson, the soil in this vicinity shows a depth of from twenty-five to forty-three feet. This soil is of a sandy loam, rather rich for soil of this nature, and holds the moisture well. In some rare places the soil is what might be classed as hard pan, but even here it is of a nature that breaks up easily and is very soluble. Mr. Hodgson pronounced the soil conditions excellent for the growing of citrus and deciduous fruits, the water supply good, and said that from information he could glean from old ranchers, there was a surprisingly small frost hazard. The prevalence of wind in the valley was not great enough to injure the crops or the growth of the trees, he thought, as shown by the experience of the ranchers undertaking the growing of citrus and other fruits.

Apples have also been grown successfully in the valley. James Flannery and A. Matson, two El Nido ranchers, have gone into this business on a fairly large scale, and have been able to derive good returns. The fruit on these ranches is large and of a good flavor, in addition to being plentiful.

The Farm Bureau has decided to divide the Gardena Valley into two farm centers because of the large territory. One of these centers will comprise the Gardena-Moneta district and the other the Redondo-Torrance-Lomita district. The bureau trip has aroused no small amount of enthusiasm among the ranchers, who have been assured of the active assistance of the county farm organization in the carrying out of their plans.

THE STEEL GRAY FLEMISH GIANT AN EXCELLENT MARKET RABBIT.

BY JAMES ALDEN ROGERS.

INTENSE interest is being taken now in the development of giant rabbits, with the idea in mind of raising the largest amount of meat for the least amount of feed, the time of development being another vital consideration. At the last Los Angeles show the judge stated that this part of the United States led all other sections in the production of giant rabbits.

The Flemish giants are leaders in the heavy rabbit breeds. A well-developed Flemish giant will weigh from twelve to eighteen pounds. One weighing the maximum figure was recently exhibited by Wilson Bros., Los Angeles. The Belgian hares average seven or eight pounds at maturity, and the New Zealand reds two or three pounds more. The difference between the three breeds, however, lies principally in weight and color—the flesh is almost exactly similar in all three breeds.

The pretty steel-gray Flemish are very popular. The large ears are carried well erect—not like the English breeds—and the hind quarters well built and very large. The shoulders are massive and well meated, unlike those of most breeds. The rabbits are gentle and so quiet in their habits that they can be kept and bred in quarters where almost any other breed would be a failure. They seldom burrow, being contented in any clean, dry hutch.

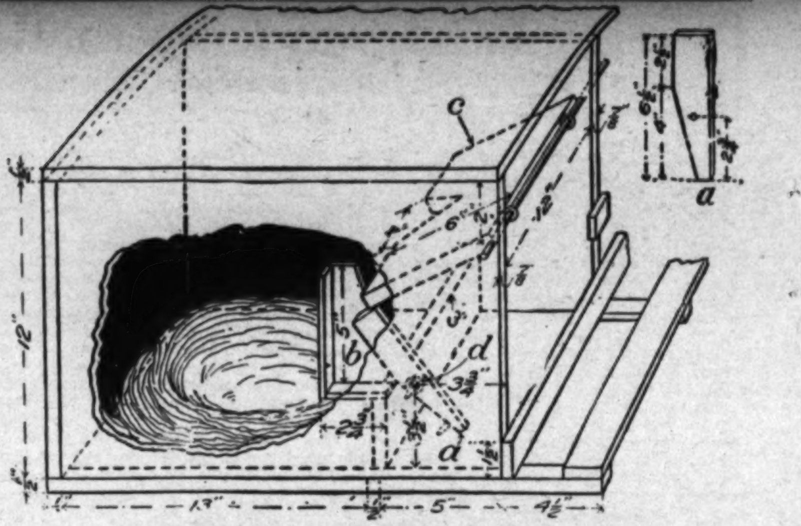
In the case of the Flemish giants, the time of gestation is about thirty-one days, a day or two longer than is required for other rabbits. The young are strong and grow rapidly. They begin to eat in less than three weeks from birth and thrive on almost anything that comes from the garden or grain field. They are perfectly hardy and good feeders. The mothers of this breed are careful and very rapid breeders, bringing to weaning time large litters of healthy youngsters.

The giants are in the front ranks for market purposes just now because of the extra three to six pounds of meat. A Flemish giant killed at three months of age should weigh three to four pounds dressed and is prime eating. But so great is the demand for giants for breeding purposes in the Southwest that few Flemish animals find their way to the table as fryers. When they do they command a premium because of their good size.

It costs about 25 cents to raise a rabbit to the age of three months. At that time it may be marketed at the rate of 35 to 40 cents per pound, and the pelts are also worth something, some rabbit-raisers getting 10 to 15 cents apiece for the steel-gray breeds. Compared with chicken-raising the points are in favor of the rabbits, it would seem, for the hares are very hardy and require inexpensive feed.

Hutches for the giants should be somewhat larger than those intended for other breeds. They should have at least twelve feet of floor space and a height of two feet. If there is plenty of room in the rabbitry it is best to have the hutches separate, but they are usually set in tiers or stacks, two or three high. Each hutch in the rank is complete in itself, so that its position may be shifted at any time.

A convenient indoor hutch is one six by two feet, with a movable partition, dividing off a third of the space at one end for a nest and sleeping chamber. The partition has a smooth hole to permit passage of the animals from one part to the other. The front of the hutch has two doors, one of wire netting, the other of wood. The wooden door opens to the sleeping chamber and should close tightly. It is best to use metal hinges for the doors. The partition may slide in a groove between the doors, or may be put in and taken out through one of the door openings.



Working drawing for simple trap-nest.

A SIMPLE TRAP NEST FOR POULTRYMEN.

The use of trap nests, says Alfred R. Lee, a Department of Agriculture poultry expert, is essential in breeding poultry for both egg production and exhibition, where pedigree records are used in selecting either the males or females, and has a place in mass selection for increasing egg production. Trap nests are of value in weeding out poor layers and increasing the average egg yield of a flock by selecting and breeding, but are not extensively used on account of the large amount of labor required to operate them. Some poultry breeders trap-nest their pullets during their first six months of laying and use this as a basis in selecting their breeders for egg production.

In Farmers' Bulletin No. 682, issued by the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, Mr. Lee describes how to make a simple trap nest. One trap nest, he says, should be provided for four or five hens kept in flocks of fifty or more, while more trap nests per hen are necessary in smaller flocks. The hens are banded with numbered bands, and a record is kept of their egg production. The nests should be visited at least three times daily, and preferably four or five times, frequent trips being especially necessary when the hens are laying freely and during hot weather.

To make a three-compartment nest, cut four seven-eighth-inch boards for ends and partitions, twelve inches wide by nineteen inches long, enough one-half-inch boards thirty-nine and one-half inches long, laid lengthwise, to cover the top, back and bottom, and one strip thirty-nine and one-half inches long and one and one-half inches wide for the front of the nests. Cut three pieces of one-half-inch boards twelve inches long and three inches high to insert in the nest to hold the nesting material away from the door.

Nail the top, back and bottom to the ends and partitions (see fig. 2,) insert the three-inch strips in the nests, and make the guard (b,) nailing it to the left side of the nest. Bore a hole in the catch (a) large enough so that the catch will move freely when screwed into position on the side. Place a washer on the screw between the catch and the side of the nest.

Make the doors (c) of seven-eighths-inch material, twelve inches by six inches, and cut a triangular notch in the center four inches wide. Put two screw eyes in the top of the doors and bore holes in the front of the nests two inches below the top (inside measurement,) through which a three-sixteenth-inch wire is run to support the doors.

Attach a narrow strip to the front of the nests for the hens to jump upon when entering the nests. Place a button or block of wood on the front of each partition to hold the door when the nest is closed.

If the nests are to be placed directly below the dripping board, a wire top should be used on the nest, except for a five-inch strip of wood on the front edge of the top to stiffen the nest.

Farm News of the Great Southwest.

DOWN-TO-DATE REPORTS FROM TIMES CORRESPONDENTS.

VAN NUYS.—Van Nuys will produce a revenue of over $2,500,000 this year, according to conservative estimates made by men in this community who are thoroughly familiar with the situation. The area on which this computation is based comprises about 20,000 acres. Segregated as to the various farming industries represented in this area, the estimates are as follows: Apricots, $150,000; peaches, $250,000; miscellaneous fruits, berries, melons, etc., $100,000; baby lima beans, $800,000; eggs and poultry, $500,000; tomatoes, $100,000; potatoes, $250,000; milk and dairy products, $250,000; sugar beets, $150,000; hogs, $100,000; alfalfa, $50,000; total, $2,700,000. Only the leading products are given in this estimate. Corn, milo maize and vegetables will greatly increase the total amount. The development, which has brought these 20,000 acres up to this high degree of productivity from the barley fields of nine years ago, is one of the most marvelous in the annals of Southern California.

"DROP" CUTS CROP.

REDLANDS.—Orange growers and shippers of the Redlands district have been busy the past week checking up carefully on the groves to determine the extent of the "June drop," which as usual extended into July, and they find, according to a leading shipper, that what promised to be a bumper crop of navels has been cut down to probably an 80 per cent. crop. It is believed that the coming navel crop here (Redlands is essentially a navel district) will be as large if not larger than the one shipped this year. Shippers also look for almost as good prices as have prevailed the past season. There is still a small drop on the navels but the greater percentage of the groves that have had the best of care have almost as much fruit as the trees should handle. The groves that have been neglected to any extent have as usual suffered more and will not have much more than half a crop. Recently the drop has been heaviest in the Valencia groves and from reports that come from the district west of here, where there are more Valencias, the crop will be much lighter than the one now being marketed. The sweets and the seedlings show less of a drop than any of the other varieties, and as they come at a season of a year when prices are usually high, the growers of these fruits are optimistic. There have been reports that the Valencia groves would not have much more than half a crop in some sections.

PHENOMENAL YIELD.

SANTA MONICA.—Few persons can boast of as high returns per acre from an agricultural crop as can J. F. Harrod of 1443 Yale street, this city. Mr. Harrod of the fall of 1917 planted two town lots each 48x187 feet, or approximately two-fifths of an acre, to the monstrous Bush Lima bean. It lived through the winter very well and started bearing in the spring of 1918 at least one month earlier than any of the current season's lima crop. The first picking was made June 24 and the last December 14, when the crop was practically gone. Between these two dates Mr. Harrod gathered and sold 6174½ pounds or more than three tons of beans from this two-fifths of an acre. The total cash received from the crop amounted to $273.94, which is at the rate of $684.85 per acre. This is believed to be a record for returns per acre from city lot gardening in this section. What makes the performance all the more remarkable is the fact that the beans were raised without any irrigation whatever. For labor involved this crop certainly promises to return more per acre than almost any other crop attempted in this section. About all that Mr. Harrod did was to cultivate the land occasionally until the vines began to meet, when all that was necessary was to gather the beans.

NEW BERRY GROWN.

LAMANDA PARK.—A new berry known as the Chinese gooseberry is being propagated at the Coolidge Nursery a short distance north of Lamanda Park and those who have tasted it are confident it will come to be an important producer. The berry is borne on a large and heavy vine with a blossom very like the passion flower. The fruit is russet brown and about the size of an ordinary egg. The seeds are small and soft and easily removed. The acid of the berry has a distinctive flavor making it suitable for pies, jams, jellies and sauces. The vines are prolific bearers. Another importation from the same country is the Chinese haw. This fruit resembles in a general way the haw of the Middle West but is as large as a small crab apple and is borne on a small tree or shrub. It has a better flavor than the ordinary haw and makes a delicious jelly. It is one of the commercial fruits of China and is expected to take equally well here.

WATER A LIFE GIVER.

VAN NUYS.—The value of irrigation water as a life giver to crops was never more clearly demonstrated than during the present season. Unirrigated hay this season in most cases failed to amount to anything averaging less than a half ton to the acre while on irrigated ground three tons and better was not at all uncommon. The same relation was noticed with irrigated potatoes as against non-irrigated stock. In every case the irrigation was shown to pay. And with the bush lima or baby lima as it is called the same relation is now to be seen. Where the fields have been well irrigated crop prospects are exceedingly bright; on dry-farmed lands but little can be expected. In fact the irrigated beans in this vicinity are reported by those in a position to know as by far the best looking beans in the State.

NAVEL OUTLOOK BETTER.

PORTERVILLE.—According to W. E. Sprott, secretary and manager of the Tulare County Citrus Fruit Exchange, the compiled reports of the navel orange outlook for all parts of the State show the Porterville district alone as reporting a probably larger output than for the season of 1918. According to Mr. Sprott's figures, which are necessarily only estimates at this period, the total consignments from this section this year will be fully 10 per cent. greater than last season. The Valencia crop promises to be one of the heaviest on record, as does the grapefruit crop. Lemons are setting heavy crops of fruit and the outlook is encouraging, although up to the present no careful estimates have been completed.

PEACH MEN STOP SELLING.

FRESNO.—The announcement has been made by the California Peach Growers, Inc., that a large number of orders were booked for the 1919 crop during the past month, and that no further sales will be made on the original price list until definite figures are at hand as to the season's dried-fruit output. It is pointed out that the price last season was comparatively low when considered with other fruits, and that this year it is intended to keep the price level for dried peaches on a parity with other California fruits. Last season the total output of dried peaches was 16,000 tons. This year the crop is a difficult one to estimate, but most packers have placed it at 25,000 tons.

HODGSON AT SIERRA MADRE.

SIERRA MADRE.—A very interesting citrus pruning demonstration was held here recently by the Lamanda Park farm center, Farm Adviser Hodgson manipulating the pruning shears and giving the growers and pruners gathered his ideas on the best methods of pruning. So much interest was manifested in this meeting, and the attendance was so great, that a new farm center may be formed here early in the fall. Sierra Madre is part of the Lamanda Park center district.

GOOD HAY CROP.

SAUGUS.—In spite of a dry winter season and general reports of poor hay crops, farmers in this section are reporting a better hay crop than last year. Port Miller, newly elected farm bureau director, reports nearly seventy tons of hay where last year he obtained nearer forty. Many hay fields are reported as going a ton and a half to the acre.

FIRE DESTROYS CANNERY.

RIVERSIDE.—A fire of unknown origin destroyed the greater part of the building and stock of the Arlington cannery July 24. The loss amounting to $70,000 is partly covered by insurance. Two hundred workers have been thrown out of employment. The fruit consigned to the Arlington cannery has been taken over by the Riverside Canning Company.

WATERMELON ACREAGE LESS.

VAN NUYS.—Van Nuys watermelons, which are considered the finest flavored among those reaching Los Angeles, are now being marketed. They are bringing the best price in years, and the growers look for a very profitable season. The melon acreage this year is not as large in this section as in former years, so there is not much fear of an overcrowded market. The season will continue for several months.

MARKET DICTATES TYPE OF HOGS FOR THE BREEDER AND FEEDER.

BY F. H. SCRIBNER.

SOME years ago any of the big markets would readily handle the prime heavy hog weighing from 350 to 500 pounds. They wanted lard then; it was the main product of the pork packing industry and it figured largely in the export trade. "Clear backs" and "clear bellies" were more common expressions in those days.

The perfection attained in the manufacture of vegetable oils has cut the lard demade very largely, and only when the lard market is strong will the packers pay a premium for the strictly heavy hog today. Then, too, the popularity of pork as a meat has increased greatly. This has created a demand for better quality in pork cuts, for younger, sweeter meat with less fat. People are economizing on pork as well as other meats, and when they buy pork chops, they want the small ones, such as can be cut from a young, medium-weight hog. These and other factors have brought about a change on the big market. Today the lighter weights usually rule and the "prime medium butcher" a young, mature, smooth, highly finished hog weighing from 220 to 280 pounds, is the best hog for the market, butcher hogs weighing right at 250 pounds representing the packer's ideal.

This class of hogs is more satisfactory to the feeder also. He has found that it is no longer profitable to carry his hogs until they are one and one-half to two years old before turning them off, feed and all other factors in finishing being too costly in these days. He has found also that young animals of the proper type make faster gains at a small cost, and with proper feeding can be pushed to a quicker and better finish. The money invested can be turned oftener, and the risk of carrying over, with the possibility of loss through infectious diseases, is eliminated.

Little pigs can sometimes be marketed at a profit, but the roaster market is very limited, and the price received these days for young thrifty pigs for fattening purposes practically eliminates this class. Light hogs weighing from sixty to 125 pounds are never profitable. Their meat is unsuitable for packing, as it contains too much water to please the packer, and he will not pay what they are worth to the farmer to feed out.

BREED FOR THE BLOCK.

The ultimate end of every porker is the block. No matter what class the market puts him in, he is required to furnish a maximum of choice cuts with the least possible water. High dressing per cent. means quality and finish. To get these, the correct form and type are essential.

All profitable meat makers possess a great similarity in build. A good pork conformation includes exactly the same general points as those of a profitable steer, or a good fat wether. In the hog, as is other meat producing animals, we look for a short broad back, thick wide loin, deep broad well-filled hams, and a straight underline. Good breeding gives this desirable conformation. The "feed cross" produces the finish.

PURE BRED OR SCRUB.

The pure bred sire has been developed along certain lines and characteristics, and they become so fixed in him that he breeds to a certainty, and his offspring has the faculty to turn corn, forage crops and byproducts into pork in the shortest possible time. From the good individuals representing the leading breeds, we get the type that is crowding the "razor back" out of existence. Good blood tells in the hog lot, just as much as in the dairy barn or sheep fold.

It has been demonstrated beyond question that there is little or no profit in feeding exclusive corn rations to growing pigs, but when fed in connection with green forages such as alfalfa, rape, rye, etc., it enables hogs to make quicker, cheaper and larger gains than by any other method.

Pure bred sows for the production of profitable market hogs are unnecessary and just as much pork can be made from a herd of good grade sows, provided they are mated with a pure bred boar, as such a sire will imprint his own characteristics indelibly upon his litters. He represents the differences between years of hog growing success or failure and by his continuous use upon grade sows, it will take but a short time to make the herd equal to pure breds in the ability to get big gains and quick finish.

PASTURE ROTATION CHECKS HOG CHOLERA.

Thorough disinfection of hog houses and roation of pasture help wonderfully in keeping down hog cholera. Last year a large number of swine were infected by being pastured on impregnated alfalfa and other standing forage. Especially on farms where hog cholera has occurred should this precaution of rotation be carried out.

It would seem that the application of chemical disinfectants is not always dependable. Many of the alfalfa and grass fields of the State have been used for pasturing hogs for ten or more consecutive year and the fundamental laws of swine hygiene have been disregarded in this procedure.

THE GROWING MENACE OF THE BEAN WEEVIL IN CALIFORNIA.

BY A. O. LARSON,

U. S. Bureau of Entomology, Alhambra Station.

BEANS are often seriously damaged in storage and in the fields by weevils. Bean weevils, however, are not new pests. They belong to a class of insects that cause the farmers and merchants a loss of many millions of dollars annually.

Few people realize the fact that the bean weevils have forced the farmers of many sections—as in the coastal regions of the Middle Atlantic States—to discontinue the production on a commercial scale of this valuable food crop, and to turn their attention to other crops. The bean weevils have been one of the chief factors in discouraging the production of beans south of the latitude of New York, except in the higher altitudes, So serious is the attack in the warmer sections of this country that dried beans for seed and for food are grown mostly in the more Northern States and California. Last year California produced more beans than any other five States combined. Last year the weevil injury was greater in California than it has ever been before and amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Bean culture is growing in California. Large quantities of limas, pinks and black eyes are sold in all our Southern States. Throughout the South in the past, it has been the belief among brokers and retail merchants that California grown peas and beans are immune to weevil attack. This belief has been of great value to the California growers, but the situation appears to be changing, for the complaints from various southern centers all indicate that unless California growers and warehouse men wake up and give heed to the control of weevils either by fumigation, the heat process, or by certain changes in their cultural methods, their market in the South is going to be injured quite materially. This increase in infectation of California beans is probably due to a continued disregard of weevil activities.

While beans will always suffer from weevil attacks, unless an unanticipated co-operation among growers and merchants can be developed for the suppression of conditions favorable to weevil increase, there is no reason why the great losses at present sustained in storage need be tolerated if those interested will inform themselves regarding the habits of these weevils and the methods for their control. (Farmers Bulletin No. 983, United States Department of Agriculture gives a very comprehensive discussion of this subject.)

Injury to the beans is usually unobserved until after the crop has been in storage for several months. Many believe that after the crop has been harvested it needs no more attention. Seeds put away at time of harvest are sometimes not examined again until the following planting season when they are found to be "weevily" or "buggy" and very badly damaged. Small growers often put away beans, for winter use, in jars or other tight containers only to find then unfit for food in a few months, often being full of holes and honeycombed by the grubs of the weevil. Wonder is expressed that beans, apparently in good condition when put away, and kept well covered should later become "weevily." Because this frequently occurs, a belief is quite prevalent that bean and pea weevils develop spontaneously from the germ of the seed. Some people believe that all beans will become weevily if left long enough even if there are no signs of life in them when put away. The following facts will show that there is no foundation for such a belief.

LIFE OF THE WEEVIL.

Weevils like many other insects pass through several marked changes in form and habit before reaching maturity. The adult winged weevil that is seen crawling about among the seeds is the parent insect. Many of these parent weevils fly from the store house to the fields where beans are growing. As the bean pods are developing the mother weevils lay whitish eggs on or within the pods. These eggs are so small that they are seldom noticed. In a few days they hatch into tiny white grubs which burrow into the bean, making only very small holes. At this time the beans are soft and as they harden the wounds made by the little grubs heal up without leaving visible scars. In the horse beans very distinct scars are left.

The beans develop more rapidly than the grubs do so that at the time of harvesting they appear to be in perfect condition. However, the grubs develop—the rapidity depending upon the temperature at which the beans are kept—becoming fully grown and then pupate or go into a resting stage preparatory to coming out as the parent weevil.

While resting in the cavity made in the beans they develop wings, legs and hard mandibles or jaws and change color but do not eat. After becoming fully matured the adults cut small round holes in the skin of the bean and crawl out. Pea weevils usually stay inside the pea until after planting time and have only one generation each year but the bean weevils have several generations each year—the number depending upon the temperature. They lay eggs on the dry beans in storage and these eggs hatch and bore tiny holes, which can be seen with a magnifying glass, into the beans where they develop.

There are several different kinds of bean weevils but their life histories are much the same. The one which causes the most injury in California—the common bean weevil—is called Bruchus obtectus. It is brownish gray in color and only about one-eighth of an inch long.

SOME PRECAUTIONS.

There are several different kinds of bean dies that can be applied to kill the weevil grubs in the beans growing in the field but there are a number of remedies that may be applied to lessen the abundance of weevils and to prevent them from causing injury or damage in storage. Any remedy that lessens the number of weevils present in the field has a direct effect upon the number of weevils to be fought in storage and vice versa. It helps to:

(1.) Practice clean culture. In gathering the crop care should be taken to leave no portion of it in the field because seeds scattered on the ground or left in scattered pods on dried vines can carry the pest over winter and furnish a supply of weevils the following summer.

(2.) Harvest as soon as possible. The beans should be threshed at the earliest possible moment in order that they may be more easily and cheaply treated to keep the weevil grubs from maturing into adults. Many adult weevils emerge in late fall. Early harvest and early treatment would prevent their subsequent injury.

(3.) Plant only seeds free from infestation. If seeds are planted which contain weevils, the adults emerge and add their number to those in the field that may have migrated from the place of storage. To plant weevily beans only invites a "buggy" crop.

Weevils may be killed in storage by fumigation with a number of materials such as (GS2) carbon disulphid, carbon tetrachloride (CCl4) or hydrocyanic acid gas. They may also be killed by heat.

For the warehouse carbon disulphid or hydrocyanic acid gas give the best results but must be used with care as the former will explode if used in the presence of fire, and the latter is deadly poison. (For fumigation see Farmers' Bulletin No. 799.)

Those having only a few beans can heat them in an oven to 120 or 140 deg. Fahrenheit for a few hours thereby killing all weevil grubs and eggs.

Care should be taken that they do not become infested again after treatment. This makes it necessary to examine the beans at short intervals.

GRAINS BARRED OUT.

The United States government, acting through the Department of Agriculture under the plant quarantine act of August 20, 1912, has promulgated regulations absolutely forbidding importations of seed or paddy rice, and, except under strict supervision, importation of all species and varieties of wheat, oats and rye in the raw, uncleaned or unprocessed state from Italy, France, Germany, Belgium, Great Britain, Ireland, India, Japan, Brazil and Australia. This action is taken because of the danger of further introduction into the United States of the destructive plant diseases known as flag smut and take-all. The quarantine becomes effective August 15, 1919. It is unimportant as affecting commercial importations, because normally the grains mentioned are not imported into this country in quantity. Its object is to control and safeguard the occasional entry of such grains, either as minor commercial importations or for seeding purposes.

TUBERCULIN TEST IS ACCURATE, RELIABLE.

Appearances often deceive when the prospective buyer of a cow "sizes up" the animal he is contemplating adding to his herd. The chief consideration, after ascertaining the age and production performance of the cow, is to find whether she has tuberculosis. The presence of this disease cannot be told by merely looking at a cow. Nor can a physical examination detect the disease. The only method recognized by eminent authorities is the tuberculin test, applied by a trained and skilled operator. Tuberculin is the most accurate diagnostic agent known to science.

Many fine herds of cattle which were a delight to look upon have been found to be extensively affected with tuberculosis. These healthy appearing animals, if they had been allowed to live, would have spread the disease to other cattle and swine and possibly to human beings. In almost every case, where the animals react to the tuberculin test, extensive lesions were found in their bodies.

A strong movement for the eradication of tuberculosis among cattle has been placed on foot by the Federal government, co-operating with State authorities. A recent law prohibits the interstate shipment of cattle not found to be free from tuberculosis. Under recent legislation the national and State governments pay part of the value of cattle slaughtered after they have been found to be infected.

Selecting Dairy Cows.

which is unique, and I believe it is the most accurate method ever devised. He watchs the flow of blood, and buys the cows with the evenest and strongest pulsations of blood. This man has purchased thousands of dairy cows in his thirty-six years' experience, and is one of the most successful dairymen in California It takes close observation and power of discrimination to apply this method, but I am convinced that it will pay dairymen to cultivate these faculties.

CONFORMATION.

It is a well established fact that milk is produced from the elements carried to the udder by the blood. it seems reasonable, therefore, that the quantity of milk produced depends largely on the amount of blood which circulates through the udder. It is also self evident that a large flow of blood indicates that the digestive organs are functioning properly, and that the heart is strong. Both of these are very important assets in milk production, and in transmitting vigor to the offspring of the cow.

The conformation of a dairy animal is as important as the proper construction of a building. An architect would not construct a skyscraper on the same lines or of the same materials as he would a greenhouse. An engineer would not build a steam locomotive of the same type or of the same strength of materials as he would an automobile engine. A horseman would not choose a Percheron horse to enter a running race.

These things are self evident. It is true that the skyscraper and the greenhouse are both made of concrete, steel and glass—the locomotive and automobile engine are both made of metal, and the Percheron and running horse are both flesh and blood, but each is made for a specific purpose. Their component parts are so constructed to withstand the strains and to perform the functions necessary to do their particular kind of work.

So it is with cattle. There are two distinct purposes in raising cattle; one is to produce beef, and the other is to produce milk. No one animal can produce the maximum of both beef and milk. Some cows, it is true, will produce a very good quantity of milk, and when dry will take on flesh quite rapidly. But there has never been, nor will there ever be, a cow that will produce over 100 pounds of milk per day, and later, when killed, dress out as efficiently and produce as high a quality of beef, as the good Shorthorn, Hereford of Angus.

Beef cattle should have a quiet disposition, bordering on loginess. They should be large with heavy bones, should take on weight easily, and the cows should have small udders and give only milk enough to raise a calf.

Dairy cattle should have a more active disposition, even bordering on nervousness. They should have many characteristics in common with beef cattle, such as a wide head, large heart girth and good spring of rib, but should have small bones, large udders and give large quantities of milk for long periods of time.

BUCK PAUL TAMARIX BACK IN SOUTHLAND.

It was with a great deal of regret among Toggenburg goat breeders that the buck, Paul Tamarix, 957, was sold to parties in Santa Barbara two years ago, and therefore is not easily available for breeding service to breeders in this section

Paul Tamarix was a very popular buck among breeders in Eagle Rock, Pasadena and Los Angeles, as his doe kids are almost without exception very heavy milkers. In fact, he was so popular that a number of breeders were making preparations to ship their does to Santa Barbara to be bred, when L. A. Rhodes of Pasadena learned that breeders from Indiana were negotiating for his purchase. Mr. Rhodes immediately exercised an option which he held on Paul Tamarix and bought him back, but owing to the fact that he could not keep a buck in that section of the city where he lives, he sold the buck to C. W. Ward of Huntington Park.

Toggenburg kids

Sired by Paul Tamarix No. 957, owned by the "W." Toggenburg Goat Ranch, Huntington Park, Cal.

Paul Tamarix is a son of Mr. Heintz's noted buck, Chieftain 281, which died some time ago, and his grand dam was a daughter of the noted doe, Fannette, and the great sire Bismarck. It will be seen that he has inherited great production blood. From the heavy production of his daughter it is evident that he transmits this desirable quality to his offspring. Among his daughters are Vanda, who gave over six quarts of milk; Manda, who gave five quarts, and Paula, who gave five quarts with her first kid.

HIGH-CLASS BULLS FOR SALE

His grand-dam has 30.62 lbs. butter in 7 days to her credit. The grand-dam also has a yearly record of 832 lbs. butter. Sir Abbie De Kol is 15 months old, splendidly marked, three-quarters white and of fine type.

King Alcartra Prilly Mercedes

PROMISING STANDS OF FETERITA GROWN.

More progress in securing good stands of feterita is reported this year by farmers in the interior valleys, and some of those who have been successful enthusiastically state that feterita is the greatest of all the sorghums grown for grain.

Growing feterita is a business all by itself, as one farmer said. When a good stand is secured, the yields are more often heavier than those of other grain sorghums than otherwise, and the grain is not attacked to such an extent by birds as are other varieties of sorghum. Moreover, feterita is now known to be a valuable article of human diet as well as a food for animals, and in some respects it is more excellent than Indian corn for either purpose. Feterita, it has been discovered, makes delicious pancakes and muffins, and a factory is being established at Coachella, Cal., to make breakfast food of it.

Eight years ago feterita was practically unknown in California and Arizona. It had been grown experimentally in the Middle West, but the stands were so uncertain that dwarf milo and others of the Durra family displaced it in the corn belt fields. It was introduced into the Imperial Valley several years ago, and its history in that great, fertile basin is similar to the history of trials in Kansas; farmers reported good stands one year and bad the next, and the majority of grain farmers in the valley turned to milo as the better crop. But some of the Imperial and Palo Verde farmers were persistent; they tried various methods of seeding and care, and, discovered that planting at a shallower depth than with milo resulted in uniform stands. Farmers nearer the coast have profited by the experience of the Imperial grain raisers. The latter have also discovered that it is better to plant feterita a little later than the milos or the kaffirs, and have laid down their seed in a warm moist seed-bed in June rather than in May. Some of the farmers of the Chino-Wineville district follow barley with feterita and get a good stand.

Feterita, like the other grain sorghums, produces a ton to a ton and a half of threshed grain to the acre with three irrigations—two after planting—and without other care. It is extremely drought resistant, and has brought a good crop in regions where there are twelve inches of rainfall and a lot of sunshine without irrigation. Feterita is rather tall, moderately leafy and early maturing. It does not produce as heavy a crop of silage as the sweet sorghums or even milo, but it is chiefly grown for its grain. Average production of stalks for silage is ten tons per acre.

In trials with feterita at Davis, Cal., in 1913, the University of California college of agriculture specialists found that the yield of this grain was greater than the other thirteen grain sorghums tried. In three succeeding years dwarf milo, standard milo and shallu produced slightly greater yields, but it was noted that the lessened yields of feterita were due to an inferior stand, and not to individual stalk production.

In variety trials with various sorghums at Davis it was found that the loss of the feterita grain from attacks by birds and from shattering was 40 per cent., much less than the other eight varieties tested, including milo.

United States Department of Agriculture grain specialists found, during trials in Kansas, that feterita was second in protein content of any of the grains tried, among which were milo, dwarf milo, blackhull kaffir, red kaffir, shallu and Indian corn. The feterita contained 14.15 per cent. protein, Indian corn 10.30 per cent., dwarf milo 12.63 per cent., and blackhull kaffir 14.18 per cent., a fraction greater than the feterita. But the blackhull kaffir was found to be inferior as to yield.

RULE FOR MEASURING HAY IN THE STACK.

At this season of the year farmers very often have need of some fairly accurate method of measuring loose hay in the stack. Particularly is this true at the present time, when baling costs are so high as to almost make it prohibitive in many cases. Scales are scarce in many rural sections.

The rule for measuring hay in the stack varies according to the length of time the hay has been stacked, the kind and quality of the hay, and the character of the stack.

With alfalfa hay which has been stacked under thirty days, it is usual to compute an eight-foot cube, or 512 cubic feet, as a ton. When the hay has been stacked five or six months, usually a seven and a half foot cube, or 422 cubic feet, is calculated for a ton. In old, finely settled stacks, it is usual to allow a seven-foot cube, or 343 cubic feet, as a ton. The volume of mow is readily secured by multiplying together the length, width and height.

There are different methods for measuring hay in the stack, depending upon the shape of the stack and also upon its size. With a long stack or rick, the usual method is to throw a line over the stack, measuring the distance in feet from the bottom of the stack on one side to the bottom on the other; add to this the average width of the stack in feet, divide this sum by four (which gives one side of the square) and multiply the quotient by itself and this product by the length of the stack in feet. This will give the number of cubic feet in the stack, which may be divided by 512, 422 or 343, in order to find the number of tons. For small, low ricks, the rule is to subtract the width from the "over," divide by two, multiply by the width, and multiply the product by the length, dividing the result by the number of cubic feet in a ton.

There is no established rule for measuring round stacks, but this one will approximate the contents of a stack of ordinary conical form: Find the circumference at or above the base of "bulge" at a height that will average the base from there to the ground; find the vertical height of the measured circumference from the ground, and the slant height from the measured circumference to the top of the stack, taking all measurements in feet. Multiply the circumference by itself and divide by 100 and multiply by 8, then multiply the result by the height of the base, plus one-third of the slant height of top. The hay in a round stack is comparatively loose, hence a greater number of feet should be allowed for a ton—with well-settled hay, probably 512 cubic feet.

The rules given may also be used in measuring any kind of hay, or cane or kaffir fodder, but with cane or kafir only approximate results may be secured by stack measurements, because the fodder is apt to vary greatly in weight according to the moisture it contains.

LAST OF RAISIN CROP.

FRESNO.—The last of the 1918 crop of raisins has been sold, according to report made by the California Associated Raisin Company. The final sales came earlier than expected and present indications are that the last of the contract shipments will have been made by early in August. Clearing up of the crop at this early date guarantees the best market conditions for the coming season, despite the fact that all market factors are agreed there is in prospect the heaviest tonnage of raisins ever known in this State.

THREE CHIEF FACTORS IN THE SELECTION OF COW FOR DAIRY

BY H. S. HOARD.

THE theory that "Pigs is Pigs," and "Cows is Cows," may be sufficient for a humorous story, but we have learned by experience that it is not a good axiom in successful dairying.

In selecting cows for a dairy there are two main features to be considered; first, the production ability, and, second, the breeding qualities of the animals.

There are three factors which are of main importance in judging cows, viz: heredity, health and conformation. There is a great deal of dispute as to which of these three is the most essential. It is my belief that they are all of equal importance, and that, after an investigation of each animal is made, a decision should be arrived at based on the percentage of excellence of these three factors in the makeup of the animals examined.

HEREDITY.

It is a well known law of reproduction that like produces like. So it is important to learn as much as possible about the parents and grandparents of each animal. In the case of grade dairy cows, this is more or less difficult to ascertain, unless the parents or grand parents are living, and are in the same vicinity. Since organization of cow testing associations, it is easier to learn something about the producing ability of the individual and her ancestors, if they are in herds where testing has been carried on for any great length of time.

Which of these herds have tuberculosis?

It is almost impossible to tell from the appearance of a cow whether or not they have the dread disease. Above, a herd which reacted to the euberculin test, every animal proving to be infected; below, a herd at the United States Soldiers' Home, Washington, D. C., found free from the germs.

In the case of registered animals, we can follow back the pedigree or "family tree," and in most cases get a much better idea of the production ability of the ancestors.

The producing ability, however, is not the only thing to be considered in the investigation of ancestors, as the conformation of the cow is of equal importance. This last, of course, is best judged by seeing the animals themselves. However, good pictures, if available, will give a fairly good idea of the ancestors.

A great deal of study should be put on the ancestry when the animals are to be used for breeding purposes. Too much reliance must not be placed on the records of production which are given out by the various breed associations, as in many cases the ancestors were not given the proper attention, and the records made do not show the maximum producing ability of the animals. It is well to find out not only about the immediate ancestors, but also look up the production records of the sisters of the ancestors in the first four generations.

If the general average production of these ancestors and their sisters is high, even though one or two of the immediate ancestors is not high, it is well to assume that her record may have been made under adverse circumstances, and that her daughters will probably be heavy producers.

HEALTH.

Under this sub-head I include freedom from disease, constitution and vigor.

The diseases to which dairy cows are most prone are abortion and tuberculosis. Abortion is hard to detect, without the use of the abortion test, and this test is not very commonly used, nor is it considered reliable by all authorities. It is, however, one safeguard which can be used when purchasing high priced animals.

It is well to see the last calf of the cow being purchased, and, if possible, get a history of the calves dropped by each animal purchased. The reliability of the seller is a large factor in determining whether the animals have abortion or not.

Tuberculosis can not be told by observation except in very rare cases. I have seen cows so afflicted with tuberculosis that it was surprising that their internal organs held together, and yet they appeared fat and sleek.

The tuberculin test is the only method of knowing exactly whether the animals are free from tuberculosis or not, and this test is not always accurate in the case of animals badly affected with the disease. Even though an animal does not react, if she looks suspicious, it is well not to purchase her.

The vigor and constitution of animals is usually determined by the size of the heart girth. This indicates great lung capacity and a large heart.

One successful dairyman of my acquaintance has a method of determining vigor

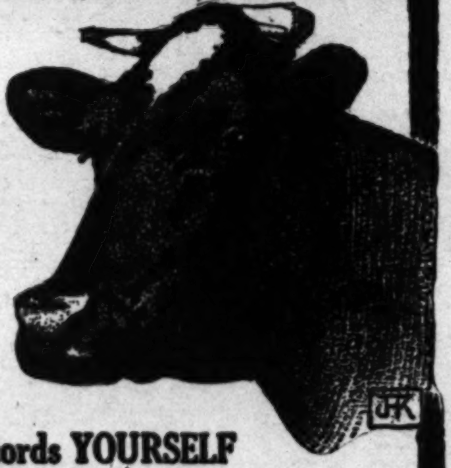
Record Holstein

This four-year-old is first of all HEALTHY. Her record shows it. Her yearly production record is 30,230.2 lbs. milk and 1,111.56 lbs. butterfat. Surprising results are possible if a dairy cow's condition is kept perfect.



Go After Records YOURSELF

Production records of dairy cows are not just to read about—they are distinctly worth trying for, this year more than ever.

The fact is, the health condition of most dairy cows is decidedly lowered, especially during the winter and spring months. They need some medicinal aid to keep their digestive and genital organs in proper working condition, and to enable them to throw off disease.

KOW-KURE, besides being invaluable in the treatment of Abortion, Retained Afterbirth, Scours, Barrenness, Bunches, etc., is also a great PREVENTIVE of disease—a conditioner that works on scientific principles. It strikes at the seat of ailments peculiar to cows. By raising the health standard, it directly aids nature in increasing the milk flow.

Use KOW-KURE this winter to keep your cows healthy and then compare your milk records with other seasons. KOW-KURE can be bought of feed dealers and druggists; 60c. and $1.20 packages.

BRED SOW SALE

SANTA BARBARA, CALIF.

The First Pacific Coast Sale

OF

HAMPSHIRES

In announcing this sale of Hampshire boars, bred sows and gilts, which will afford the buying public of this State the first opportunity to purchase at public auction Hampshire breeding stock, it is not out of place to make a brief statement concerning the herd from which the offering is drawn. When I determined to establish a herd of pure-bred swine, I had absolutely no prejudice as to any breed. What I wanted was the breed that would make me the most money for the feed and labor expended. I therefore conducted a most careful investigation of all the leading breeds. I took no one man's word. I talked to hundreds of successful hog men. I took up the question with the leading packers. While all did not agree, the majority of opinion thus gained led me to select the Hampshire. Once having determined on the breed, I made equally as searching investigation of the most popular blood lines of the breed—the lines of breeding that the records indicated were producing the most desirable types. I then set about assembling a herd that represented these blood lines to the highest degree. The question of price did not enter into the selection. I wanted the best and was willing to pay for them. I have never had cause to regret my selections and through this sale I am certain that I will find ample justification. My hogs have proven money makers for me and I know that they will prove equally profitable to others. I take pleasure in inviting you to attend this sale. FRANCIS T. UNDERHILL.

Draper's Ladoo 69927	Gen. Allen's Counterpart 64733	Admiral Blythdale 67481

The above boars represent the best boars that I could find within the breed, that were for sale. Several of the above boars represent investments running into four figures. They are not only right so far as the blood lines are concerned, but they are right individually. They have the size, bone and quality essential for profitable hogs, and they perhaps represent as valuable collection of sires as will be found in any one establishment. The sow offering is either sired by or bred to the above boars. A number of sows are distinct show ring prospects, all are valuable herd material that can go into any herd in the West and make good. There never was a time when the hog business was on a sounder basis than it is at present. With prices higher than ever before, and likely to stay up for a number of years owing to the world's shortage of pork and pork products, no man need hesitate to enter the business, and no man can afford to handle any except the most profitable kind—the kind that we have catalogued for this offering. KEEP THE GARDEN WELL CULTIVATED.

BY ARTHUR E. HENDERLEY.

In the California midsummer the gardener's enthusiasm is likely to drop from blood heat to zero. But hot weather is favorable to plant growth, provided some shade is afforded the leafy plants, such as lettuce, spinach and kale, and under no circumstances should the vegetable gardeners slacken cultivation, irrigation and protection work in the vital period when neighbors are taking vacations. The late culture of spring planted crops is the most important operation in gardening. When the immature vegetables are needing the maximum amount of plant food, the greatest care should be taken that they be given proper cultural treatment.

This is what is generally termed a dry year—that is, the rainfall is below normal. Gardens usually brought to harvest successfully without the aid of irrigation are this year suffering from drought. It is disturbing to see the many fields of corn, potatoes and other crops which are drying up for the want of a little water and a little attention. If water is not available (it is cheap at whatever price the water company sets at this time of the year) the bad effects of drought can be largely taken care of by consistent cultivation. Break up the surface layer of soil with a hand or horse-drawn cultivator, hoe or rake, and form a fine mulch on the surface, thus holding the water in the soil around the roots. Cultivation should be repeated once in every ten days. It is surprising how much drought some garden crops can endure if they are consistently cultivated.

When the garden is irrigated, it should be given a thorough application of water, enough to soak the soil to a considerable depth. Light sprinklings do little work: the top inch or two of soil is wet and the roots remain dry. Follow each irrigation with a cultivation as soon as possible.

One feature of gardening in Southern California that is usually given little attention is the proper protection of certain plants from the too ardent sun of July, August and part of September. There is no question but that the sun is too hot in these months for certain crops.

Head lettuce that has not reached maturity should be protected from the sun's rays by tacking muslin or burlap over a frame to shade the plants. The burlap should be about eighteen inches wide, and should be placed about a foot over the tops of the plants. The same frame can be used to shade spinach, cabbage or celery plants.

Tomatoes may become scalded or sunburnt unless they are protected from the sun, especially the Earliana or other scanty-foliaged early varieties. One gardener in Long Beach raises larger and more perfect tomatoes by building a lath shade over his fruit. Care should be taken, however, to properly prune out branches, if the stand, owing to over-irrigation or fertilization, is luxuriant. Tomatoes tied to stakes, and planted eighteen inches apart and two and one-half to three feet in the row do not generally need shade. Tomatoes which lie on the ground get sunburned before those which are not. An additional advantage of tying tomatoes to stakes is that they can be cultivated throughout the season more easily, and better.

Have a continuous supply of vegetables throughout the summer and fall. This is accomplished by successive plantings, and no time is as good as the present for seeding the second crop of green corn, Irish potatoes, peas, snap beans, pole limas, beets, lettuce, turnips, carrots and onions. It is best not to plant the vegetables in the same rows as they occupied in the spring garden. In this way the gardener can fool the pests and add to the fertility of his soil.

When planting sweet corn and potatoes, be sure and have the seed in moist soil below the surface mulch. This also applies to string beans. Plantings of string beans made during the first days of August are liable to be the most profitable, as they find a ready sale at advanced prices on the market before frost.

Do not allow weeds to get a start, and especially to go to seed, as they will cause trouble in late fall or spring. The weeds also harbor obnoxious insects.

The city gardener is prone to substitute irrigation for cultivation, an impossible substitution. The plants need air and plant food as well as water.

As soon as the green corn is harvested, pull up the stalks, which are useful as fodder to your neighbor's or your own horse or cow, if you have one, or cut them up into short lengths for the chickens.

Do not let the cucumber plants go more than four or five days without water and cultivation, both of which is vital to normal growth of this plant.

Train the squash, pumpkins, muskmelons and watermelons up on the fence, or tie the vines to nails on the side of the shed with a southern exposure and enjoy an increased yield.

Problem which walnut growers are facing.

Broken limbs are plentiful in walnut orchards this year of heavy yields. Horticulturists believe that the walnut tree should be so trained that each limb will bear its full proportion of nuts, and they urge that forcing of the trees while young, spacing the trees too far apart, and maintaining the "central leader" type of pruning may cause the limbs to break if wiring or propping is not resorted to.

VAN NUYS.—The peach crop in Van Nuys is generally good this year and the quality promises to be excellent. George Hanna, who has been prominent in valley affairs ever since the tract was opened, has an orchard containing thirty acres of peaches. He recently sold the crop for $7500. Another man sold the fruit from seventeen acres, on the trees, and received a check for $3700. Other growers are receiving like amounts, the prices ranging, according to variety, from $60 to $100 a ton. The results this year will greatly stimulate the planting of more orchards next spring, both of apricots and peaches. They are also affecting the market values of fruit lands and orchards.

HOW THE STEEL FARM HORSE HAS REVOLUTIONIZED DRY FARMING.

BY H. A. CRAFTS.

THE practicability of dry farming was long since thoroughly demonstrated in Colorado, Western Kansas and Nebraska. But dry farming implied study, hard work, close attention and general good management to be made profitable. Consequently it did not appeal to the great mass of farmers, who liked to do things in the good old way.

The practice of dry farming was founded upon the theory of deep plowing, and a thorough working of the plowed land. This process implied much labor and expense. The demand for team work was insistent. Dry farming pulled on the horses and mules with a heavy strain.

Herein lay the chief burden of difficulty. The drain upon horse flesh was excessive. It not only wore out the farm horse, but it required the maximum of feed and care.

In California dry farming has been of a fundamental nature. The rainless summer made the State unique in this phase of farm operation. Even in the most arid regions of the Rocky Mountain belt there are sporadic summer rains; sudden thunder showers, and sometimes quite protracted rain storms, and these help out wonderfully in the science and art of dry farming.

When the summer rain comes in the Middle West it catches the dry farmer just right; his cultivated fields are in a fine condition of tilth, and consequently they are in just the right condition to receive and absorb every drop of moisture that may fall upon them.

Not so with dry farming in California. Here the dry farmer must, of necessity, depend wholly upon the surplus moisture which falls during the late autumn, winter and early spring.

But the California climate is such that the farmer may farm all winter; whereas the land of the dry farmer of the East is frozen up solid and covered with snow for about four months of the colder part of the year.

ENTER THE TRACTOR.

And now enters upon the stage of agriculture the farm tractor which makes dry farming much easier and more practicable and profitable than ever. Weak and fallible flesh and blood in the shape of both man and team are at once eliminated from the problem, and the powerful forces of gas and steel, and human skill and ingenuity come to the relief of the over-worked farmer. It solves the problem of dry farming, both for the farmer of California and of the East.

The farm tractor, hitched to a gang of heavy plows, rips up the stubborn soil regardless of ancient plow sole, gravel bed or any other ordinary obstacle. Then follows the clod crusher, the disc horrow, the roller, the cultivator, and all of those tools which are calculated to lighten up and pulverize the soil.

Here we have a proposition that perfects the seed bed, and at the same time prepares the field in the best shape possible to receive, absorb and hold all moisture which a kind Providence has a mind to send along.

In California the farm tractor again enables the farmer to do his fall and winter plowing at the earliest possible moment after harvest, and to do it in the shortest possible time, thus permitting the sowing and planting to be done in good season to receive the rains and derive the best results from them.

TRACTOR COMES IN HANDY ON WOOD LOT.

In order to have the wood properly dried before cool weather, this is a good time to cut up the winter's wood on the farm. Many places have small eucalyptus plots, and farms in many sections have white oaks and other native trees, some of which may be spared for firewood. Windbreaks, too, sometimes need to be thinned, and uprooted trees cut up. In turning trees into proper length billets for the cooking or heating stove the tractor comes into beneficial use.

Buzz-saw outfits for cutting firewood are built in a variety of sizes and styles. The size and style best suited to a particular place will depend mostly on the character and amount of wood to be cut, the power available for running it and the number of men to be used on the work. The saw blades are made in sizes from twelve inches or less up to thirty-six inches in diameter and the frames are of corresponding size and strength. The tables for holding the wood as it is pushed against the saw blade, are of two general types, the tilting or swinging table and the rolling or sliding table.

The saw blade provided should be of ample size to cut through, at one operation, the largest pieces of wood commonly handled. Blades of from twenty-four to thirty inches in diameter are the most popular sizes. A twenty-four inch blade will cut a stick as much as nine inches in diameter, and a thirty-inch blade will handle logs up to one foot thick.

The speed at which the saw blade is run is another important factor. The peripheral speed (the rate at which the saw teeth travel) recommended is between 8000 and 10,000 feet per minute, which makes about 1200 revolutions per minute for a thirty-inch blade and about 1500 for a twenty-four inch blade. The operator should know the speed at which his engine runs and should be sure that the pulley on the saw is of the right size to give the proper speed. Too low speed will make quick, clean cutting impossible and the high speed will require excessive power.

Generally, the small tilting table is preferable for cutting cordwood or small short pieces and the rolling table for wood of large dimensions.

There is an element of danger which should always be borne in mind when using a circular-saw machine. Every saw table should have a guard to prevent the hand or arm coming in contact with the blade while moving the wood on the table. A piece of wood that comes in contact with the saw teeth at any time except when it is on the table in the proper position for cutting will likely be thrown from the saw with sufficient force to injure a man. Running saw blades at excessive speeds often causes them to burst and other accidents result from carelessness. It is always well to remember "Beware of a buzz-saw."

A circular-saw outfit can be operated with a wide range of power, and a large majority of the gasoline engines found on farms may be used for this purpose, as well as the average tractor. The actual power required depends on the size and kind of the wood to be sawed, the rate at which it is fed to the saw and to a certain extent on the condition of the saw blades.

Ordinarily not less than a four horsepower engine should be used for a circular saw and for heavier wood a six horsepower engine is preferred. A still larger engine can be used but the fuel cost will be somewhat greater. However, if the governor is adjusted correctly the load will determine to a certain extent the fuel consumption.

FEEDING THE PIGS.

Construct a feed trough for pigs in such a fashion that the porkers cannot get their feet into it. This will lessen the possibility of crowding. Young pigs should be given their feed in such a way that each individual pig will get its share.

KNOCKS IN MOTOR, AND WHAT THEY MEAN.

It is bad policy to run a tractor after a knock or a pound is heard. The machine should be laid up until the cause is determined. Most common causes of knocking are: (1.) Spark lever advanced too far. (2.) Too rich a mixture of fuel and air. (3.) Carbon deposit in cylinders. (4.) Loose tappets on connecting rods. (5.) Loose bearings.

When the motor has a tendency to heat up quickly, the knocking is usually due to carbon in the cylinders. The carbon causes preignition.

When a push rod or loose connecting rod tappet causes the knocking, a light tapping sound which increases with the speed will be heard. This is easily remedied by removing the proper plate and filling the tappets until a good bearing is secured. The knock of a main bearing is a dull, heavy knock. If a bearing knock is continued for any length of time it is liable to flatten the crank pin, making the fitting of a new bearing very difficult. The refitting of a main bearing is a more serious matter, and sometimes requires the "taking down" of the engine. Some tractors, however, are so constructed that the main bearings can be removed and refitted after a side plate is removed.

Keeping a machine in good repair and well oiled not only increases its efficiency, but lessens the power required in using it.

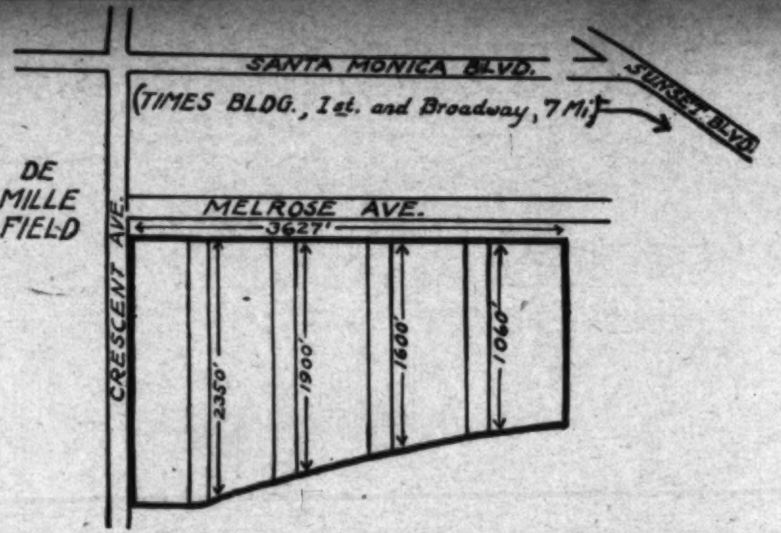
BIG TRACTOR SHOW TO DISPLAY VERY LATEST IN FARM MACHINES.

HOW the American farmer is being aided to greater production by a highly efficient combination of engineering brains, gasoline and steel will be portrayed at one of the largest exhibitions of farm power machines ever gathered at one spot, at the fourth annual Southern California tractor demonstration, to be held on a half-section of land opposite De Mille aviation field, Hollywood, September 16 to 21, inclusive.

The Traction Engine and Implement Dealers' Association of Southern California held the busiest and most exciting meeting in its history on July 25 at the Alexandria Hotel. Dealers in tractors, implements and accessories keenly vied with each other for display and demonstration space at the show.

From the present outlook it appears that the show will be fully 25 per cent. bigger and vastly more interesting and instructive than the successful event last year. A tract of land containing approximately 300 acres on the southeast corner of Crescent and Melrose avenues, Hollywood, has been selected for the demonstration. The soil in this field is not quite so heavy as that at La Brea and Wilshire, the site of last year's show, and it is excellently located near the Santa Monica car line and is easily accessible by Wilshire and Santa Monica boulevards.



Hollywood Field selected for the Fourth Annual Tractor Demonstration.

It is probable that possible uses of the airplane in agriculture will be investigated at the meet. The tractor field is opposite the De Mille aviation field, and steps are being taken to secure the use of aviators and machines for the tests.

More than a score of tractors new to this territory will be seen for the first time at the meet. Tractor manufacturers all over the country, realizing that Southern California, because of the intensive and seasonal character of the agriculture of this region, demands more tractors than any other section west of the Rockies, are hastening to make reservations to show their wares.

At the last meeting of the Tractor Dealers' Association drawings were held for display and demonstration space. Twenty-five firms paid $300 each and competed in a drawing for their lots. Word was received from a dozen more dealers that their checks were on the way. Within a month it is believed that three score firms will be on the list of exhibitors, and that nearly a million dollars' worth of farm machinery, tools and accessories will be on display or at work.

The following firms were in on the first drawing for space and chose their lots in the order named:

W. L. Hughson Company, Ruddle & Menillo, Bruce Mitchell, A. F. George & Co., Motors Equipment and Tractor Company, Los Angeles Auto Tractor Company, Bean Spray Pump Company, Washburn Bros., Community Manufacturing Company, International Harvester Company, Knapp Tractor Company, Oliver Chilled Plow Works, Avery Company, Holt Manufacturing Company, C. L. Best Company, F. T. Briles, Advance-Rumley Company, Samson Sales Company, California Moline Plow Company, Union Tool Company, William Gregory & Sons, Smith Bros. and E. P. Bosbyshell & Co., representatives of B. Hayman Company, and the Killefer Manufacturing Company were present and secured space for exhibits.

The field selected is irregular in shape because of a swale at the southeastern end of the half-section of land secured. The field has a frontage of 3627 feet on Melrose avenue and 2450 feet on Crescent avenue. The implement and accessories tents will be placed along the Crescent avenue side of the field, while the tractor lots will front on four streets running at right angles with Melrose avenue. The longest of these streets is 2350 feet in length.

EVERY TOOL IN PLACE.

Farm tools and materials should be kept in their proper places. If they all haven't a place, one should be provided for each. Do not keep all sizes of bolts and screws mixed together in a single receptacle, but fit up suitable boxes or bins, properly marked, so that the supplies may be accessible on short notice.

Heider

11 Years Actual Field Work

FOR eleven years America's leading power farmers have used the Heider in every kind of tractor work. Heider principles have been tested by time and found to be absolutely correct.

No Gears to Strip

With the Heider Drive the power is taken directly from the flywheel by two large metal discs at either side—one to go ahead, the other for reverse. No jerking, no vibration, no gears to strip. Tractor always in "mesh." Seven speeds forward and reverse, all with one motor speed and one lever for traction or belt.

Model D 9-16 With Rock Island No. 9 Power Lift Plow Attached. One-Man Outfit.

15 to 20% Fewer Parts

The fewer the parts through which the power has to travel, the more power delivered at drawbar or belt. Heider Tractor's simple construction does away with 15 to 20 per cent of parts. It does away with clutch, transmission gears and bevel gears. This leaves the maximum power for pulling plows and harrows, for hauling loads, for every farm job—with less fuel and less upkeep expense.

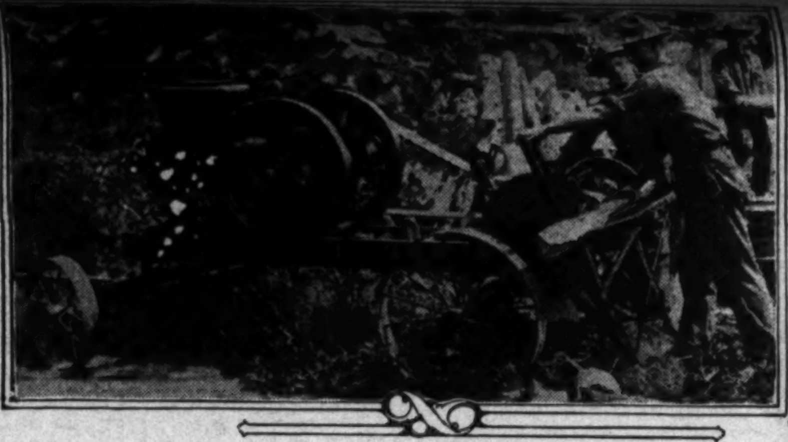
A HIGH-PRODUCING RANCH IN THE MIDST OF FINE SUBURBAN HOMES.



The gas engine beats the old sawbuck style.

HOUGH almost surrounded by beautiful home places, and already partly included in the city of Los Angeles, the immense Santa Monica Mountain Park ranch finds the music of the bean thresher more sweet than the ring of the carpenter's hammer in the bustling residence subdivision and clings to old-time rural ways. Incidentally, high agricultural production continues to be the chief aim of its owners.

In a beautiful setting, stretching from the sea to the ranges rimming the San Fernando Valley, and from the upper reaches of Topango Canyon almost to the Los Angeles Country Club, this ranch comprises 22,500 acres, of which 6000 acres produces citrus fruits, beans, hay and meat in abundance. Records of production are accurately kept; system rules on every hand, and each unit of the work must show its worth or go.

This ranch has been extensively and intensively farmed for many years, and each year sees great improvements. There are at the present time 600 acres in lima beans. Over 300 acres of barley hay was harvested this spring, and 4000 acres on the extreme north side of the ranch in the hills is leased to a packing company which maintains large herds of sheep thereon.

But the pride of the ranch is the lemon grove of 100 acres, planted on a slope reaching down into Santa Monica Canyon from the hills. This lemon grove is thriving, a good producer of excellent fruit, is farmed along scientific lines, and is being extended. There are forty acres of trees five to six years old, sixty acres of three-year-old trees, and sixty more acres is being prepared for planting to Eureka lemons. Nick Seltzer is in charge of this development of the ranch operations. There are also small plots of loquats and avocadoes.

The ranch is owned by the Santa Monica Mountain Park Company of which Arthur H. Fleming of Pasadena is president, Robert C. Gillis of Los Angeles, head of the Santa Monica Land and Water Company, vice-president; C. L. Bundy, Santa Monica, manager, and Harrison Lewis, Los Angeles, superintendent.

Complete organization rules on the ranch. During the dry season the ranch rangers patrol mountains, foothills and canyons, on the lookout for incipient fires. Caterpillars and other large tractors pull modern bean threshers in the season, when the number of ranch hands mounts to four score. There are about thirty head of work stock, and many saddle horses, but the latter are another story, a story within a story.

A dozen tenants have leases of acreages of from twenty to forty acres in the canyons, including Rustic, Sepulveda, Kenter and Mandeville canyons. One of the most picturesque mountain roads in Southern California is that running through the Mandeville Canyon from Santa Monica Canyon to the San Fernando Valley.

For the comfort of the ranch folk, a flock of White Leghorn fowls, and a half dozen Holsteins and Jerseys are kept. The ranch also has its own vegetable gardens. One of the wonders of the ranch is its commissary department, presided over by Mrs. Anna Colbert, whose cooking makes every hand who works on the place a friend for life. Each ranch worker has his individual sleeping room. There is also a club room with showers. Each department has a foreman, under the general foreman, Charles Shaub.

The pretty San Vicente rancho, owned by Adelaide Gillis McCormick, daughter of Robert C. Gillis, is a small portion of the Santa Monica Mountain Park ranch, a ranch within a ranch. It is devoted to the raising of fine saddle horses. It bears the name of the original Spanish grant, and is well known among horse lovers in California. For seven years it has produced, with few exceptions, the finest saddle horses in California.

In 1912, six registered Kentucky saddle horses were brought to the ranch, to be used as pleasure horses only. But through the suggestion of friends interested in the Sacramento State fair, the horses were exhibited there that year. The appearance of the San Vicente Rancho gaited saddle horses annually thereafter gave a high standard to this feature of State event. The best Missouri and Kentucky judges have stated, in fact that the horses from these stables had nothing to fear in southern and eastern horse shows.

Every year the San Vicente horses have won the prize at the State Fair for the best stallion with three of his get. They have also won, each year, with the exception of 1918, the trophy given by the American Saddle Horse Breeders' Association for the best stallion or mare three years old or under.

The ranch has many State championships to its credit, and has the honor of having won the Hotel St. Francis trophy offered for the best type of saddle horse at the Panama-Pacific International Exposition.

This year, the San Vicente Rancho offered for sale many of its greatest show horses, and representatives from its stables are now owned by former competitors, and these will continue to be exhibited at the State Fair and horse shows in Los Angeles, Santa Barbara, San Francisco and other places. Meanwhile there is in training at San Vicente Rancho a promising string of youngsters to take their places.

THE MANY AND VARIED USES OF THE GAS ENGINE ON THE FARM.

BY ARTHUR L. DAHL.

POWER is the constant need of the farmer. This applies not only to his fields, where horse or tractor power is required to perform all varieties of crop operations, but to the farm house, stable or workshop. On the average farm there are always tools to sharpen, feed to grind, butter to churn, clothes to wash, and a score or more of jobs requiring power, and for these small, but important and time-consuming jobs there is nothing to equal the gas engine.

The modern gas engine has kept pace with its big brother, the tractor, and has developed into a compact, simple and easily handled source of power for a wide range of uses. Gas engines can be bought in all sizes and with practically any power rating required, from the one and one-half horse-power machine for small jobs up to engines capable of operating the heaviest machinery on the farm, such as shredders, shellers, grain separators and for heavy sawing.

The tractor motor is largely used for belt work, and while excellent results are thus obtained, it is not always convenient to use the tractor for stationary work, especially where small power is required, and the fuel consumption of the heavier engine does not warrant its use for jobs where a lighter engine would do. As the first cost of a portable light gas engine is not great, and with good care they will last for a long time, farms big enough to have a variety of power jobs will find it good business to add one to their equipment. On a number of farms of moderate size it has been found desirable to have several gas engines of various sizes, to do specific pieces of work. For instance, a one-horse-power engine is used to operate the equipment for the family washing; another four-horse-power engine is used to do the light work about the farm, such as pumping water, grinding feed, sawing wood, etc., while the heavier work is done with the tractor motor.

COST IS ECONOMICAL.

The original cost of a gas engine is not great, as the smaller engines of about one and one-half horse power can be bought for about $60, a three-horse-power engine for $100, a six-horse-power engine for $180, and so on. Practically all gas engines up to eight-horse-power ratings are light enough to be carried by two men. A four-horse-power engine will weigh in the neighborhood of 190 pounds, and an eight-horse-power engine about 320 pounds. A gas engine of twenty-horse-power will weigh about 1200 pounds, or sixty pounds to each horse power.

Machines up to four horse power will do a wide range of belt work, including the running of a cream separator, washing machine, or pumping water for the home. Attached to a corn binder or a potato-digging machine, it will soon pay for itself.

An engine of eight-horse-power rating will furnish ample power for all medium jobs on a farm, including the operation of hay presses, corn pickers or a buzz-saw. A machine of fifteen-horse-power rating will do for the heavier farm jobs, such as ensilage cutters, large feed grinders and small threshers.

For orchard spraying gas engines are almost essential. The largest and best sprayers are equipped with gas engines, which furnish a high, continuous pressure. Several types of engines are used, some of which are two-cycle and some four-cycle. On account of the variable load which the spraying engine must carry, a four-cycle engine is preferable, and since they are usually better understood, give better satisfaction. The water-cooled engine is a little less liable to injury through heating, but the best types of air-cooled engines are satisfactory if given careful attention. The engine should be as light and compact as possible, and should be of sufficient horse power to carry its load without overworking. Usually from one-and-one-half to four-horse-power engines are used for spraying purposes. The instructions sent with the engines should be studied and only good oil and fuel should be used.

WHY ENGINES BALK.

As the average farmer's knowledge of mechanical things is limited, and he is apt to be confused in attempting to diagnose engine troubles, the following list of the ordinary causes of an engine failing to run correctly has been furnished by an engine expert:

(1.) Broken battery wires or poor connections.

(2.) Weak batteries or incorrect wiring.

(3.) Poor adjustment of the coil trembler.

(4.) Soot on spark plug or firing device.

(5.) Gasoline not turned on, or mixed with water or kerosene.

(6.) Dirt in pipes, preventing gas from entering cylinder.

(7.) Too much or too little gasoline or air.

(8.) Loss of compression due to leaky valves, lack of lubricating oil, broken or worn cylinder rings.

(9.) Soot-clogged muffler.

If the operator has studied the engine carefully when it was in proper adjustment he will be able to detect any defects in wiring and keep all parts clean and in good condition. The charge may at first give some bother, but he should soon learn to adjust it without difficulty by keeping in mind the following points: Black smoke from the exhaust indicates too much gasoline or too little air; a sharp explosion and a sharp or acid smell of the exhaust indicates too much air or too little gasoline; white smoke indicates too much cylinder oil. Usually when the engine is to be started after standing some time, a rich charge is obtained by placing a cover over the air inlet as the engine is cranked. The engine should be stopped by opening the switch, not by shutting off the gasoline, so that after the charge is once adjusted it need not ordinarily be changed during the job in hand.

A large percentage of repair expenses is due to insufficient or improper lubrication. In many cases the owners of gas engines use grades of oil entirely unsuited to their engines. Practically every manufacturer of gas engines will gladly furnish a list of approved brands and grades of oil that have been tested and found suitable to the engine in question, and which can be obtained practically anywhere in the country.

USE ENOUGH OIL.

It is very unwise to use too little oil. While too much oil is scarcely better than too little, a little experience will teach the operator the correct amount to use. If too much oil is used in the cylinder it will cause carbon deposits, followed by loss of power, overheating and preignition. Heavy bluish smoke from the exhaust indicates that the cylinder is getting too much oil, but it is usually advisable to furnish enough to give at least a slight trace of bluish smoke.

If the cylinder is oiled from the crank case by the splash system, the lubricant being used over and over again, the oil should be examined frequently, and as soon as it becomes badly discolored or very thin, it should be drained out and new oil substituted. Filling the crank case with kerosene after draining out old oil, and then running the engine a few minutes without load, in order to remove dirt and carbon from bearings and other parts, is frequently recommended by manufacturers. After such rinsing the engine should not be run at full speed or under load until the new oil has had ample time to reach all bearings. The dirty oil drained off may be filtered and used for oiling other farm machines, but it should not be used again in the cylinder.

STUDY THE TROUBLE.

It is always wise to remember that for a gas engine to run it is necessary to have a compressed mixture of vaporized fuel (generally gasoline or kerosene) and air in proper proportions, which is exploded by a hot spark while the mixture is under compression. The spark should occur slightly before full compression, except in starting, when it should occur just after full compression has been passed.

When an engine refuses to start, the trouble will, with a very few exceptions, be due to some interruption of the supply of the proper mixtures of gas and air, or to a failure of the electrical system which furnishes the spark to fire the compressed mixture. It seldom happens that both systems are at fault at the same time, so the first thing to do is to find out whether one of these systems has ceased to work properly.

The ignition system, on the whole, is more often the cause of trouble than is the fuel system, and it is usually advisable to test this first unless, on account of the construction of the particular engine, it is easier to make tests for troubles with the mixture supply.

With all engines using spark plugs it is comparatively easy to ascertain whether the ignition system is working properly. By removing the plug it can be ascertained whether the insulating material on the inside of the plug is not coated with carbon and the points are properly spaced. One thirty-second of an inch is about the right space for most systems where a dry battery is used. This is about equal to the thickness of a worn dime. A wider gap will often make starting difficult, especially where the spark is rather weak or where a high tension magneto is used. Next, reattach the wire and lay the plug so that the metal base touches the engine casting, while the end of the wire and the metal tip of the plug are at least half an inch from any metal part connected with the engine and in such a position that the points are visible while cranking the engine. Then turn over the engine a few times and note whether a spark jumps across the space between the points. It is not sufficient, however, to ascertain if there is a spark. It must be hot enough to fire the compressed charge in the cylinder. If the spark is a heavy blue, or a bluish-white, or a faint yellow color, it is probably all right. If very thin and greenish, or showing red, the chances are it is too weak to fire the charge.

WATCH THE SPARK.

In order to ascertain just how much of a spark is necessary with each kind of ignition system, it is desirable to observe the distance the spark will jump when the engine is working properly.

When an examination has shown that a good spark is being obtained at the right time, the next step is to see whether the engine is receiving the proper mixture of fuel and air. Many carburetors are made so that it is easy to remove the cover and see whether there is gasoline in the bowl, and where this is possible it is the easiest way to determine whether the fuel supply is all right up to this point. If there is no fuel in the carburetor, either the tank is empty or there is some obstruction in the pipe line between the tank and the carburetor. The mixture should be tested to see if it is gasoline or kerosene, for water sometimes enters the system as a result of condensation of moisture on the side of the gasoline tank, which runs down and settles in the fuel tank at the lowest points. Where strainers or settling chambers are provided, these should be drained and cleaned frequently.

It is not enough merely to have fuel in the carburetor; it must be mixed with the proper amount of air as it is drawn into the combustion chamber. It sometimes happens that the needle valve is closed or stopped with dirt, and that while there is fuel in the carburetor, none can get into the combustion chamber. If the engine has a petcock leading into the combustion chamber, by opening this and cranking the engine a few times one can tell by smelling the escaping air whether gasoline is entering the chamber. The same result can be obtained by smelling the exhaust when the engine is turned over, or by removing a spark plug, closing the hole during the suction stroke and opening it during the compression stroke.

It sometimes happens that too rich a mixture of fuel and air enters the combustion chamber, which is practically as bad as no fuel at all, as the rich mixture can not be exploded by the spark. This does not often happen with a cold engine, but is liable to occur with a warm one. There are several ways of overcoming this difficulty. Closing the needle valve and cranking the engine a few times will remove the rich mixture quickly and replace it with pure air. Removing a spark plug or opening a petcock leading into the combustion chamber and then cranking the engine slowly a few times may answer the purpose.

Snapped at the National Tractor Demonstration at Wichita, Kan.

The photographs were taken by W. L. Cleveland, Los Angeles tractor man, who acted as special correspondent for the Farm and Tractor Section of The Times at the big show and whose account of the event appeared in last Sunday's issue. The panorama shows a bit of the gigantic demonstration field on the opening day. The smallest tractor on the grounds is shown in the lower photograph. This midget, a diminutive "tank" operated by a motor such as is attached to bicycles, was driven with lines and attracted a great deal of attention.

Evolution and Revolution in Fumigation Practice.

BY ROBERT W. HODGSON.

MORE than a quarter century ago California gave to the world a new and entirely revolutionary method for fighting citrus insect pests—fumigation with hydrocyanic acid gas. And that method during the past twenty-five years has saved growers in this State many millions of dollars; in fact, it has made the raising of citrus fruits not only possible but profitable in sections where formerly scale infestation was so bad as to make the profitable growing of this class of fruits impossible.

The story of the development of this method of insect control is one of constant improvement in technique from a relatively simple but dangerous operation to the present highly technical and specialized but comparatively safe business.

To Dr. A. W. Morrill belongs the credit for the origination of the method of using canvas tents thrown over infested trees to confine hydrocyanic acid gas liberated underneath and to effectively dispose of insect pests. In the earlier days of the industry the old-time hoop tent gave excellent results with the smaller trees, but great difficulty was experienced in handling the old seedling trees, thirty to forty feet in height. This led to the development of derricks mounted on trucks and hauled about through the orchards to lift the tents from one tree to the next. It was not long, however, before the present improved method of "pulling" tents by the use of long poles was introduced, with a decided saving in time and labor. Only recently, with the scarcity and consequent high price of labor, has come the use of one man and a horse to "pull" tents in place of the two men formerly used. Although not yet in common use, this method promises to reduce costs still farther. So from the very beginning there has ever been a gradual development in the purely mechanical methods of handling the tents.

GAS GENERATION.

Methods of gas generation, however, have not changed so rapidly at least until quite recently. After once becoming standardized, until perhaps some six or eight years ago, methods of gas generation had changed but little. The earliest efforts at fumigation were by means of a machine which generated the gas outside the tent and conveyed it to the trees by means of a hose. Not proving satisfactory on account of many imperfections, it was not long until the standard pot method came into vogue. This method consisted of mixing water and sulfuric acid in an earthern vessel or pot set under the tent, into which was dropped a measured amount of potassium cyanide, which later was replaced by sodium cyanide in weighed briquets, which somewhat simplified the use of the dosage schedule, cutting out the necessity of weighing the cyanide. For many years such was the standard method of gas generation; in fact, this method has been in current use in certain sections until within the last year or two.

Some six or eight years ago the Owl fumigating machine appeared on the market. This was a reversion to the original method of machine generation, but with imperfections in the old machine overcome, it proved quite satisfactory. Soon came the Braun cyanofumer which rapidly displaced its predecessor and which has remained the standard machine until the present season. These machines in essence are simply appliances charged with sulfuric acid in one chamber and dissolved cyanide in another. Measured amounts of the two are mixed in the gas chamber, resulting in the immediate expulsion of a definite amount of gas which is conducted under the tent by means of a hose.

SOME NEW MACHINES.

During the past year or two there has been a rather revolutionary development in fumigation practice, namely, the use of the liquid hydrocyanic acid gas introduced into the tents by means of an atomizer pump. The first machine of this character to be placed on the market was that put out by the Dingle Brothers of Los Angeles, and which was more particularly the result of the labors of William Dingle. Although the original machine had a number of rather serious defects, the improved models leave little to be desired in the way of safety and efficiency. More recently the Braun company has invaded the field and is now introducing a machine known as the applicator, designed to use a special brand of liquid gas put up by them.

Although liquid hydrocyanic acid gas has been known to chemists for many years, on account of its supposed dangerous character, until recently but little work has been done with it. Upon more careful research, however, chemists have shown that although when impure it is more poisonous than most other known gases and explosives, when pure and when certain precautions are followed it is comparatively safe for the average workman to handle. The liquid gas is a colorless liquid much like water, but much lighter, and having a boiling point of only 80. It is rather unstable and decomposes readily under certain conditions of light and heat to form the gas. The impure article is explosive under certain conditions, but the pure article, if kept in steel containers, is relatively safe to handle.

Its method of manufacture is not complicated. The gas is generated in a huge generator by the use of sulfuric acid and sodium cyanide and is conducted through pipes to flues surrounded by a cylinder containing cold brine solution. Here it is condensed to a liquid at a low pressure and is drawn off. It is then purified further by distillation which separates the water from the gas. It is then put up in steel drums containing fifteen to sixteen gallons, which are sealed and ready for use. The principal liquid gas generating plant at the present time is located at Azusa. In 1917, only twelve and one-half gallons of the liquid were recovered from 200 pounds of the cyanide. Last season slightly better than fourteen gallons were recovered of a theoretically possible eighteen and one-half gallons. At the present time even better results are being obtained, liquid gas of a 97 per cent. purity not being uncommon.

The Braun Cyanofumer has been a standard apparatus for many years.

Dingle Brothers' liquid gas machine. Atomizer at left; filler at right. The photograph was taken during a fumigation demonstration at Covina last year.

The Dingle machine, in its improved form, consists primarily of two hand pumps mounted on a platform. One pump is used to withdraw a measured amount of the liquid, as determined on a scale, from the supply tank and to force this amount into a brass coil. The second forces this liquid, together with air, through a delivery pipe tipped with several atomizer nozzles placed under the tree. The liquid is thus forced into the tent as a fine mist which instantly vaporizes and fills the tent. The Braun machine operates on very much the same principle.

EFFICIENCY SHOWN.

During the past year or two extensive researches on the killing efficiency of the liquid gas have been carried on by Prof. H. J. Quagle of the Citrus Experiment Station and R. S. Woglum of the Tropical and Subtropical Fruit Insect Investigation, Bureau of Entomology, United States Department of Agriculture. Both of these investigators have obtained very satisfactory results with the liquid gas, finding that when practically pure it gives a higher efficiency than gas generated by any other method. Commercial fumigators in general are very favorably disposed toward the new method. At a recent meeting of fumigators and experts at the instance of Horticultural Commissioner H. J. Ryan of Los Angeles county, the opinion was general that the new methods bid fair to rapidly supplant all others.

A number of decided advantages are claimed for the new method among which may be mentioned:

(1.) Burning of the tents, the most important factor in the depreciation of a fumigating outfit, is reduced to an absolute minimum. With the old method and the cyanofumer tent, burning has always been an important item, annually amounting to a large sum.

(2.) With the new method there is no residue left to dispose of, as all the residue is taken care of at the generating plant. This is a very important item as this residue is very poisonous and constitutes a menace to both plant and animal life. Every year a number of trees are killed by fumigation residue and occasionally deaths of children occur from the same cause. Moreover, there is a county ordinance against dumping the residue along public highways, which, with the aversion of growers to having it dumped in the orchard, has made the problem of its disposal a difficult one. This is all done away with by the new method.

(3.) There is no dissolving of chemicals during the day, preparatory to fumigation at night. This reduces the labor involved.

(4.) There is no carting of chemicals through the field, a material reduction in labor costs.

(5.) The machine can be carried by hand, no horse being necessary, accomplishing another reduction in labor costs.

(6.) The new method results in a more efficient kill in the lower part of the tree, where the larger per cent. of the scale are usually to be found.

(7.) The liquid gas is found to give between 15 and 20 per cent. greater killing efficiency than an equivalent amount of cyanide and acid.

On the whole the new method gives every promise of being a decided step forward in fumigation practice, being not only more efficient, but decidedly less expensive.

BEES FIND FORAGE AMONG BEAN ROWS.

BY L. C. FORD.

Beans are proving the salvation of many an apiary this year, the blossoms providing nectar for a second flow of honey. Many bee men are moving their colonies to the bean fields, where the workers will find nectar for weeks to come.

The beekeeper who moves his colonies every summer is trying to make a real success of his apiary. To stop working because of lack of bloom is the plan that leads to loss and discouragement and, despite the high prices and excellent market for both wax and honey, many California bee men are becoming discouraged and are threatening to quit the business on account of a lack of forage.

The lack of late spring rains this year caused a short blossoming season for many nectar-producing plants and many colonies are now without bloom to work on.

Thousands of acres of beans are now beginning to blossom and enterprising bee men are moving their colonies to the beanfields, unless fortunate enough to be located favorably. A small fee, usually not more than 50 cents a hive, and less in large numbers, is charged by the owner of the beanfields. In return, the apiarist has his frames filled with an excellent quality of honey, which he can market this fall at a good price.

Beehives are easily moved by auto truck or trailer, without the trouble frequently encountered when horses are used, and excited bees get on the rampage and sting unmercifully. Moving is often done at night, the hives being closed with wire netting and the bees finding themselves in welcome fields of bloom when they set sail in the morning.

This combination of beans and bees is proving especially popular in the San Fernando Valley, where the beans stretch in great fields between the orchards. The bean growers have taken quite kindly to the idea of adding to their revenue without adding to the season's expenses. It is the day of the by-product, and even the nectar of the lowly bean blossom is being converted into revenue.

THE FARM BUREAU.

The more we observe the work of county farm bureaus and comprehend their opportunities, the more convinced we are that agriculture can be best served through such agencies. If every county in the United States were to form a bureau and secure a membership of the leading farmers of the county, guided by officers who would be willing to devote some time to its welfare and then urge the selection of some one to act as the county agent, there would be no end to what such an organization could do for the promotion of better systems of farming, of better marketing, and of better rural life. When every county shall have a well organized bureau and in every State these bureaus are federated into the State organization and these again into a Federal organization, the farmer will not have to look constantly to Congress or the State for assistance in conducting his affairs. Under such an organization co-operative enterprises of all kinds would flourish and agriculture would be organized.

It is to be regretted thatthe farmers of this country do not fully appreciate what they can accomplish for themselves under our government if they will but organize and be ready to cast their lots with one another. A few States have organized; New York, Illinois, Iowa and others are beginning to organize. Also, a few States prominent in agriculture have so far made no attempt to form farm bureaus. Wisconsin is one of them. It seems rather strange that a State so well organized agriculturally should be so slow in adopting the county farm bureau, for through such an organization every phase of agriculture in the county may be cared for and its development stimulated. Milk producers' associations, breed associations and cow testing associations are splendid in themselves but these are units working separately and are not uniting with other branches of agriculture. The county farm bureau will unite these separate organizations and then agriculture will work as a unit.—[Heard's Dairyman.

TRAINING SQUASH.

Those who garden intensively would do well to remember that the squash vines like to climb and not crawl along the ground. If there is a fence or a building within reach, allow the vine to practice its cleanly habit of climbing by supporting it every two or feet by means of lightly tied rope or stout string which may be fastened to nails driven into the fence or wall. The vines are strong enough to support the squash.

Trees Bowed Low Under Enormous Walnut Crop.

BY WAYNE GOBLE.

SANTA ANA.—It isn't "dollars to doughnuts" any longer. Doughnuts aren't in it as compared with the English walnuts this year, and one could almost say that "walnuts is dollars," for the crop now on the walnut trees of Southern California is a sight to behold. There need be no walnut-less days in the United States after this crop is harvested, that is certain, because there will be enough to go 'round—and a prices probably less than those of the wa period.

Have you seen them? Just stop alongside almost any walnut grove, glance up the side of the tree, and see if you can count the nuts glistening in the sun. It can't be done, for never before were there so many first-class nuts on the trees as now, and certainly unfortunate is that grower, if any, who does not see his profits mounting to new levels.

The trees are literally groaning under the weight of their crops. Go anywhere in the walnut belt, see the props under the trees and talk with the growers, and you'll be convinced that the prospective 1919 walnut crop is the banner crop of all. There may be short crops of beans and barley and beets on unirrigated lands, but of walnuts there is no shortage.

Many of the lower limbs of the trees are weighted clear down to the ground with their heavy loads of nuts and foliage, and it is no uncommon sight to see large limbs which could not bear up under their burdens and which have crashed to the ground. Cultivating under the low-hanging branches is no "snap," as can be testified by Ralph Lewis, young son of a Santa Ana grower, shown in an accompanying photograph just emerging from the "wilds," where he has to hug his tractor in order to keep his seat and often leaves his hat hanging in the branches behind.

Another picture shows one of Harry Lewis's 16-year-old trees on East First street, Santa Ana, rent by the weight of its own crop. Most of the nuts on this tree are near maturity and can probably be harvested along with the rest of the crop this fall. This scene is on the main Los Angeles-to-San Diego State highway.

SHIPPING OUTLOOK.

The association at Santa Ana, which is the largest initial walnut shipping point in the world, expects to pack and ship this year a million dollars' worth of walnuts, a third of the entire Orange county crop, which it is estimated will return approximately three million dollars to growers, a heretofore unheard of figure.

The crop now on the trees is 105 per cent. of normal, and 30 per cent. greater than last year's production, when the Santa Ana association shipped 1200 tons of Diamond brand nuts and 245 tons of culls, which brought a revenue to growers of $750,000.

On account of the high prices, last year set a new record for walnut returns; but this year's big crop will outshine them all. While it is expected the price will be slightly lower than last year, probably around 25 cents, the shipments will be much greater, with consequently greater returns.

Some single trees in the Santa Ana district, it is predicted, will produce over $100 worth of nuts this year, and the average value of the crop from mature trees is expected to be approximately $400 an acre. Considering the small amount of work required in the walnut groves, costing about $20 per acre per year for cultivating and harvesting, it may be figured that the net profit to be enjoyed by growers this season, with consequent greater prosperity for Southern California, will be most gratifying.

CROP IS UNIFORM.

A feature of the situation this year is that the heavy crop is practically uniform throughout the entire walnut belt. Heretofore, one grove might be heavily loaded with nuts while another near by would have only a light crop. Not so this year, however, when nearly every tree in nearly every grove is bearing more nuts of fine quality than ever before, regardless of its age.

The associations at Orange, San Juan Capistrano, Irvine, Garden Grove, Anaheim, Fullerton and La Habra are all preparing to handle more nuts than in any previous year, and when the harvesting season begins the latter part of September many workers, both men and women, will be required to pick, haul, and pack the crop.

"The drop this year was very light and we look for a greater-than-normal crop," said O. H. Burke, secretary of the Santa Ana association recently. "Growers are dusting for aphis and are also conducting experiments, which promise to be successful, with a worm-eradicating dust which we hope will totally eliminate the worm pest which increased the amount of culls last year very considerably."

The worm dusting has proven successful as regards the pest, but in some cases, when not done at the proper time, has resulted in damage to trees. Particularly is this so when the dusting has been done on damp, foggy mornings. This has caused burning of the leaves and one Santa Ana grower estimates his grove was damaged several hundred dollars in this manner. "When any more dusting is necessary it will be done on a dry day," this grower declared. The nuts on the burned trees, however, appear to be filling nicely with white meat, and unless next year's buds were burned, it may be that no appreciable damage will result from improper dusting.

PACKING HOUSE READY.

The Santa Ana association's new packing house is being made ready for handling the bumper crop now hanging on the trees, and in addition to packing and shipping, the Diamond brand nuts will also be the headquarters for cull cracking operations in Orange county. The cracking plant was first put in operation last year, when 489,000 pounds of culls of the Santa Ana association were cracked. These culls returned 16½ cents per pound net to the grower, and $26,000 was paid out in wages to women employed during the late fall and winter cracking season. Three years ago growers considered themselves lucky to get five cents a pound for their culls.

This year, with the plant in thorough working order, the Santa Ana association will not only crack its own culls, but has placed its plant at the disposal of other Orange county associations not large enough at present to maintain cracking plants. A contract has already been signed whereby the Irvine association's culls will be cracked in Santa Ana, and it is expected that similar contracts will be entered into with other near-by associations. Heretofore the Orange county cull walnuts have been sent to the central association's cracking plant in Los Angeles.

COUNCIL APPROVES CONSOLIDATION ACT.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted at the recent meeting of the California Dairy Council at San Francisco:

"Whereas, the Legislature at the last session passed an act, which becomes law on July 22 next, consolidating various of the State's farming activities and creating a Department of Agriculture and,

"Whereas, one division of said department is designated as the Division of Animal Industry, and will have control of the entire dairy and live stock industries of the State and enforce all laws and regulations relating thereto formerly administered by the State Veterinary, the State Dairy Bureau, the Cattle Protection Board and Stallion Registration Board, and,

"Whereas, the welfare of the dairy and live stock industries is of vital importance to the State and such welfare is dependent upon an efficient and impartial administration of the laws and regulations aforesaid,

"Now therefore be it resolved by California Dairy Council that it hereby endorses the objects desired to be achieved by this consolidation looking toward economy in the administration of law, together with greater efficiency, and that it hereby supports this new department and particularly the Division of Animal Industry, and

"Be it further resolved that California Dairy Council believes that in taking up this important work every effort should be made to create as strong a division as is consistent with law, with as strong a personnel as may be secured, and that wherever possible the inspecting force, which must hereafter make animal as well as dairy and manufacturing inspection, should be composed of men with technical training and a thorough knowledge of the laws relating to their duties."

THE AMIABLE TRACTOR.

Among the things a tractor will not do are the following:

Kick the stall all night and keep the folks awake.

Bite, balk or run away, or shy at a loose scrap of paper.

Break out of the barn at night and eat up the neighbor's crops.

Lie down in the wrong spot in the barnyard and roll over, necessitating an hour's currying.

Get the colic, cough, heaves, spavin or windgall.

Snort in your ear or whisk its tail in your face.

"Haw" when you yell "Gee," and vice versa.

Up and die just as the heaviest work is coming on

A Hard Trade.

"I F I HAVE succeeded, I have deserved success; for I have worked hard at my trade," said Robert Louis Stevenson.

It is noticeable that nearly all the really great writers speak of their work as their "trade." Kipling calls it that, and there are very many others who have done the same.

It is, perhaps, only the would-be writers, or the mediocre, who speak of their work as a "profession" or an "art," although it is an art and the highest of all arts.

But, since it is true that writers sell the products of their labors in the market places, as other traders and venders do, they are certainly men of trade whatever else they may be. Anyway, we like to hear a writer call his work his trade. It is a word that has a good, honest ring to it.

So, regarding literature as a trade, is it an easy or a hard trade?

No doubt another kind of tradesman would think it easy to write, and that the successful writer makes a living easily. Nothing, however, could be farther from the truth.

Every writer who has won the laurel crown of fame has testified, some time or other, to the overwhelming weariness of his labors. Not all of them were as bitter as Carlyle about it, it is true, but old "Tammas" came pretty nearly speaking for them all when after finishing his "French Revolution," he said:

"I have felt in a general way as if I should like never to write any line more in the world. Oh, that literature had never been devised. Then, perhaps, were I a living man, and not a half-dead, enchanted, specter-haunted nondescript. . . . This day I must begin writing again. I return, not like a warrior to his battlefield, but like a galley slave scourged back by the whip of necessity. Surely, in a few years I shall either get out of this dreadful state by some alleviation, or else die and sink under it."

Unquestionably every writer who "works hard at his trade" has felt like that many and many a time. And yet, who would not suffer all that, and more, to leave behind him one entrancing page that men will read as long as the world lasts?

It is worth all the cruelties it involves to immortalize oneself in literature.

Hence, since there will happily always be those who will endure the suffering, it may help all such to know what Charles A. Dana once said are the three books best to read in preparation for a literary career. He said it in the hearing of a California newspaper man who worked, years ago, on the New York Sun.

"Read the Bible for illumination, knowledge and power," said Dana; "'Gulliver's Travels' for detail, and Robert Louis Stevenson for style."

The opinion given by Dana is perhaps as good an answer as any to that eternal question. Any man or woman who will make a study of the Bible, and who will analyze "Gulliver's Travels" and sing Robert Louis Stevenson into his heart, will become a good writer provided there is also natural talent to start with.

But, oh, it is a hard trade. To work at it for bread and butter is a wearisome thing. It is back-breaking and nerve-wracking, and it wears out the very soul of a man.

It were better, perhaps, to be a good blacksmith.

Everyman's Burden.

THERE seems to be placed on the shoulders of most men at birth an inevitable burden from which there is no escape, and from which, perhaps, no escape should be asked or sought.

It is the burden of rearing his young, as the eagle rears its young; and to bear that burden without hope of ever transferring it to the shoulders of his offspring.

There are and have been and always will be exceptions to this apparent rule, of course, but exceptions in anything do not matter. They do not count.

A man marries, and children are born to him. He cares for them through infancy and childhood, he clothes and feeds them and sends them to school. He does it in happiness and with a vast joy that there never have been words to describe. But, sometimes, he makes the mistake of believing that whe nthese children grow up they will still cling to him and be his support and the staff of his age.

His children will not do that. They will, instead, do as he has done. They will marry and rear children of their own, and he will find that he cannot depend on them for support, for the reason that they have acquired and taken upon themselves cares and burdens of their own, just as he did before them.

Wherefore, it were well for a man when he strikes out upon the high road of life and leaves the rooftree of his father behind him, to plan to see it through to the end on his own responsibilities and endeavors.

It is the way of life. It is all a part of the Great Plan.

LITTLE GRAY WATER

Little Gray Water, my heart is with you
In the loop of the hills where the lone heron feeds,
Where your cloak is a cloud with a lining of blue,
And your lover a wind riding over the reeds.

Little Gray Water, I know that you know
Where the teal and the black duck are dreaming at noon,
And the way of the wistful wild geese as they go
Through the haze of the hills to keep tryst with the moon.

Little Gray Water, folks say and they say
That the homing hill-shepherd, benighted, has heard
A song in the reeds, 'twixt the dawn and the day,
That was never the song of a breeze or a bird.

But I know you so silent, so silent and still,
And so proud of your trust that you'll never betray
What the fairies that gather from Grundiston Hill
Tell the stars before morning to witch them away.

Finding Out.

THE people of the southern part of California may not realize the full importance of the establishment of the State University in Los Angeles. As we understand it, one can now secure the full benefit of the university without being compelled to go to Berkeley.

California has one of the greatest of all the State universities. It has long been noted for the exceptional ability of its teachers. A man or woman educated by these teachers has no favors to ask from any others on earth.

Education is merely the finding out of things. It is the exploration of unknown countries of the mind. And all the joys that the explorer of physical places knows is with whomever seeks an education.

California is wonderful in that it does so many things and does them all so well. It builds not only great highways for travel but it also builds great schools.

His Royal Highness.

THEY tell us that the Prince of Wales, who is soon to visit the United States, is a clean-cut, wholesome, likeable young fellow. If nothing happens to prevent, he will some day succeed his father on the throne of the British Empire with all the prestige that goes with the job, and with about as much power in his hands as the constable of El Monte has.

A lot of folks will have an opportunity to talk to this young fellow when he comes, and we should try to give him a taste of true democracy without any of the frills.

Let us see whether he will stand to be called by his first name or even as "mister," instead of demanding to be addressed as "Royal Highness." If he will stand for it, then we shall be among those to wait on the sidewalk and cheer like blazes when he goes by.

"Royal Highness!" Wouldn't that rattle your slats! As Gen. Otis used to say, Huh!

Good Versus Evil.

IN ALL the legends and traditions of the ancient peoples, handed down from father to son through the countless ages, God's mysterious plan of placing the good and evil together on this earth has been recognized.

It is plain that it was and is God's plan to place both forces side by side that they may fight it out between them, and that, in that way, we are left to ourselves to work out our own salvation, to conquer or to fall as it may be for us to decide.

The same plan runs through the whole animal, and through even the vegetable, kingdom. The forces are in clash everywhere.

If you will study your own little garden you will see these forces waging relentless and ceaseless warfare, the one upon the other. You plant a seed to grow a bush or a tree or a bed of lettuce. Immediately that you do so, insects and bugs attack the plants and continue to do it. In a day they would destroy the plants were it not that birds and frogs and bats sweep down on the insects both by day and by night, devouring them.

So, if God permits the evil forces to attack your industry and your hopes, He also sends the forces of good to help you fight them off.

It is the same way among men themselves. The forces of evil, tireless and sinister as they are, are not yet so tireless and so persisting as are the forces for good. Religion fights harder than its enemies fight, the peace officer is more daring and braver than the murderer, the thief and the outlaw.

After all, weak as we are and futile as it seems we are at best, God must be pleased to see that in the long run we are true to the trust reposed in us. The battle waged for the good is by far the stronger and the braver battle.

Take it all in all, we think the human race is not a failure but a stupendous success.

Legs Next.

WE HAVE a friend who once had so much time on his hands that he didn't know what to do with, that he went and read Darwin and other writers on the subject of Evolution. And he told us that men are descended from monkeys, which is not so hard to believe when you think of some men. And the reason men no longer have tails is because they do not need them now since they have ceased to live in trees as they used to do in the old times.

Now, if it be true that man shed his tail because he no longer had any use for it, it follows, logically, that he will next shed his legs, for the time is certainly near when he won't have the slightest use for legs.

It is only the unusual man who makes even a bluff at walking any more. Every man has an automobile of some kind, and most men have two or three automobiles. Then there are the street cars and other vehicles for carrying people from place to place, not to speak of elevators in hotels and business buildings, clubs, and even in private homes.

We look to see the time come when a man will have the floors of his house on wheels so that he will not even have to walk to bed.

And when this time comes there is at least one industry that is going to go "busted," as sure as you live, and that is the beach resort industry. The beaches without legs will have lost their main and principal attractions.

We suppose it will seem strange and odd for a while, but it must have seemed funny, too, when men quit wearing tails. No doubt they felt lost for a long time and kept reaching around for them. And it will be the same way when we doff our legs. But we will get used to that, also.

Well, there's one thing that we shall be glad of then. There won't be any corns on our feet to bother us.

Job and a Garden.

JUST five years ago, a man who had a good job, as jobs go, decided that he would also have a garden. He lived on the average sized lot in the suburbs, but he bought the lot next to him so that he would have more room to grow things. He traveled to his job on the street car, paying 5 cents for the ride each way, morning and evening.

Now the fruit trees, the vines, the berry bushes and things that he planted five years ago are bearing. And the consequences are that when the huckster pulls up to his neighbor's door and soaks said neighbor all kinds of high prices for berries, fruit and nuts, not to speak of vegetables, it does not concern the man who planted his two lots to trees and berry bushes five years ago.

This man spends little or none of the money he gets from his job to buy things to eat. The money he gets from his job is all "velvet," as they say. His neighbor spends all the money he gets from his job, just to buy things to eat.

Isn't it beyond belief that it is so hard to pound the idea of this thing into the head of the average man who works at a job to make a living?

Procrastination.

THERE are bad habits enough, the Lord knows, but we think the worst of them all is the habit of procrastination. To have a thing to do, and to keep putting it off—we stack up trouble for ourselves every time we do it.

When a man gets up in the morning, he should think of what he has to do that day, and then he should pick out the things that are most disagreeable and do them first. It is the best plan in the world. And the result of it is that soon there are no disagreeable things left.

Care of the Body.

relaxed, and he is more susceptible to the force of gravitation in the pelvis.

"If a person has been addicted to sexual excess, his prostate is especially weakened, and he is far more liable to congestion from gravitation than one who has been temperate.

"If a person has been intemperate in his eating or drinking, he has also weakened the resisting powers against gravitation in his prostate, as well as other parts of the body.

"From this general discussion, it can at once be seen why at least 90 per cent. of men past 40 years of age have a pathological prostrate."

To this I add that no case of prostatitis, rupture, piles or falling of the womb can be permanently cured, so long as there is gas pressure in the intestines, from fermenting food, caused by wrong diet. Dr. White recognizes this, and his ideas on diet are sound. He says:

"In general, my advice to every patient is to lean toward a vegetarian diet—vegetables, nuts and fruit. As a rule, an overnourished person requires fruit, while a nervous person requires vegetables. Do not wonder whether this or that will agree. If in doubt, do not eat what you wonder about.

"As a rule, nearly every one eats too much sugar and bread. Many cases of dyspepsia can be cured by prohibiting the use of both. Although bread is known as the 'staff of life,' it is in reality often a club.

"If you are grouchy and out of sorts, do not eat. Food to the angry man is a poison . . . I am of the opinion that no one would have any prostatic disease if he ate and lived correctly. . . . In treating prostatic disease and impotency, it is of the utmost importance that the patient does not touch alcoholic liquors or tobacco in any form, and that he does not take coffee, tea, chocolate or cocoa, and that he cuts out granulated sugar and everything made from it, as well as everything made from white, or 'new process' flour. The sooner physicians learn these few salient points and put them into practice, the sooner they will begin to have greater success in treating prostatic disease and impotency."

In regard to surgical operations on the prostate, the author says:

"I do not claim that surgery is useless in the handling of prostatic diseases, but I do claim that the majority of all operative procedures upon the prostate result disastrously. When the prostate has become so diseased that a radical operation is really necessary, the prognosis is very bad.

"Physicians are supposed to have the welfare of their patients in mind when outlining any method of treatment, and before recommending a patient to have an operation they should ask themselves whether they would advise the same performed on themselves, or their dear ones.

"Often an operation upon the prostate makes death a little easier, and in a few cases it adds a year or two to the patient's existence, but the majority of those whom I have met that have been operated upon, have said that they wished they had died before they had the operation undertaken. Surgery of the prostate, at the very best, is a dangerous procedure, and should be advised only as a last resort."

This book of 450 pages is primarily intended for workers. It contains many cases, also testimonials from medical men and medical journals. It is handsomely printed and bound.

X-Ray Examinations.

FOLLOWING is from the Philosophy of Health:

"Ten weeks ago a lady applied to me for treatment for tuberculosis pulmonaris. She brought some large skiagraph pictures of her lungs. So important were these pictures (she had been educated to believe) that she insisted on my looking at them—insisted so long that, at last, to break the spell of their influence on her mind, I said: 'Damn your X-ray! It is you I want to examine. The X-ray cannot tell me what made you sick. It knows nothing of your habits. It can tell me nothing of your disposition, your emotions. It cannot inform me of your thoughts, beliefs, sorrows, happiness, hopes, expectations—your secretions and excretions. It cannot tell me anything, for it is a dead shadow—is not now, nor ever has been, a living entity.'

"It took this woman six weeks to evolve a smile, so fatally poisoned was her mind by the story that the doctors read in her X-ray pictures. It took me six weeks to kill their influence on her mind.

"She said yesterday, as she bade me good-by: 'I'll keep the X-ray pictures as souvenirs of my five years with medical superstition.'

"This woman was of gouty diathesis, and could not be made to develop tuberculosis, or her five years of treatment for tuberculosis would have developed in her the disease"

Oiling the Body.

FOR thousands of years the oiling of the body has been valued in Oriental countries, as a most helpful hygienic measure. The passage in the Epistle of St. James: "Is any among you sick Let him call for the elders of the church: and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord," does not refer to the mere making of the sign of a cross on the forehead, with a finger dipped in oil, but to the hygienic custom of oiling the whole body. Costly oils, mixed with perfumes, were used for this purpose by the rich.

Inunction is an exceedingly valuable therapeutic measure. It has been far too much overlooked in modern times. It increases the activity of the skin and diminishes susceptibility to cold. By equalizing the temperature it has great power in allaying fever. It soothes the nervous system, produces sleep, lessens the frequency of the pulse, also the thirst. The pulse may be reduced from 120 to 90 in a few hours, after a few applications of the oil. It is also very serviceable in lowering the temperature in typhoid and typhus fevers, pneumonia, and all febrile disorders.

Any light vegetable or mineral oil may be used. Personally, I have for several years used, with much satisfaction, St. James's oil, a local product.

Inunction is most effectively employed after a warm bath.

"Tender" Meat.

YOUR epicure calls for "tender" meat. When an animal is in health, the flesh is firm and tough. Immediately after death decomposition sets in. That makes the flesh tender. Following is from "Good Health:"

The process of ripening is nothing less than a process of decay. The changes which take place in a piece of beef hung in a butcher's stock room are precisely the same as those which take place in a dead cow or pig in the fence corner of a pasture lot. A dead animal decays, whether buried in the ground or displayed in a butcher shop. The idea that 'ripening' is rotting, as applied to meat, is not appetizing, but it is nevertheless the truth."

As an aggravating example of civilized imbecility, I point, without pride, to the digging up of expensive newly-laid asphalt pavements.

SAN PEDRO'S CITY ON STILTS.

BY CARL CLAUSEN.

WHEN the seeker for the picturesque in Southern California has exhausted the conventional megaphone sights, when he has visited Mount Wilson, the orange groves, the foothills, Catalina Island and the beaches, he has still something worth while coming to him if he is of a venturesome spirit and does not scorn to leave the beaten track in search of diversion.

The City on Stilts! Ever hear of it? No? Come along then, and let me show you. The round trip will cost you but 75 cents in coin of the realm, so put on your overalls and khaki skirt and take the Pacific Electric car to San Pedro—and don't forget your camera or you'll be sorry

Get off at the Fifth street boat landing in San Pedro and take the 5 cent ferry across to Terminal Island. When you step off the ferry, walk down the wharf to your left about 300 yards and, presto, you are in the midst of the City on Stilts, or to be more explicit the city built on piles driven into the bay.

Many years ago the government put in a bulkhead of heavy timbers along this water front as far as Dead Man's Island. When it was completed, squatters were given permission to drive piles into the bay within six feet of the bulkhead, and build homes upon the piles and dwell therein rent free. The only stipulation was the six-foot space to be left clear in the event of repairs to the bulkhead becoming necessary. A great many squatters took advantage of Uncle Sam's generosity and began erecting houses. Some of them have dwelt there for twenty years, rent free.

When the city of Los Angeles took over the San Pedro Harbor, the squatter's rights were respected, and except for a nominal yearly property tax, the dwellers of this marine city have never known the terrors of the landlord's visit. The first of the month passes by as uneventful for them as it does for the man who carries his blankets on the open road, with the additional assurance that no small town constable is lurking around the corner.

Of late the Japanese have seized upon the little city as their own, and if you wish to see the Nipponese in as near his native habitat as you'll find him anywhere outside the realm of peach blossoms it is here right before your eyes. You are used to watching him in the market gardens and berry patches or in the small shops on East First street. But in the City on Stilts you'll get a new angle on this little courteous alien and his home life.

Bits of Beauty and Color in this Strange Place.

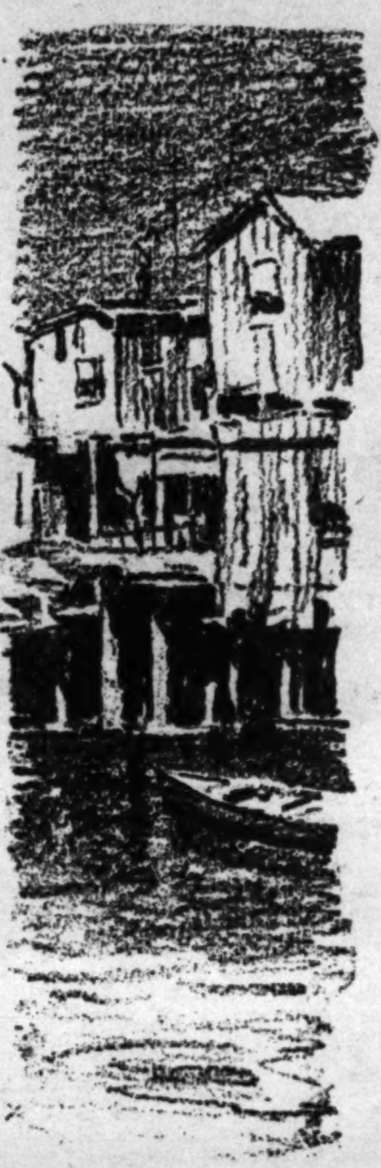
NARROW board walks wind in and out among the houses. Turning a corner, you unexpectedly come across a secluded niche with boxes of flowering chrysanthemums and nasturtiums, a miniature garden of Semiramis with the nasturtiums trailing down the barnacled piling to the surface of the water. The effect is charming and odd.

The architecture of the houses would bring joy to the heart of a builder of cities. The original pioneers used any kind of material their fancy or pocketbook dictated, and the result is startling and naive. Here a modest battens and board cottage innocent of paint, sports a highly ornamented front door of carved teakwood, salvaged from some ship whose bones have come to rest in our port; another cottage has leaded window sashes with glass in all the colors of the rainbow, a third has a roof borrowed from a ship's cabin—with the cleats of the lifeboat lashings still nailed upon it, and wash lines of gaily colored underwear flapping in the breeze.

There are two grocery stores in this City on Stilts, and one small store where fishing lines, nets, twine, hooks, etc., are sold. The main street is an imposing thoroughfare about twelve feet wide shaded by the roofs of the verandas beneath which the women gossip and discuss the latest fashions in kimonos and hair combs.

Afraid of Being Legislated Out of Existence.

I WAS there to see and listen. They craned their necks out of windows and around corners to watch this child among them takin' notes and, faith, they knew he'd print it. At first I was received with no little suspicion, but it was soon cleared away when I assured them I was no politician. It seems that politicians are looked askance upon here, because much legislation and contemplated legislation has been afoot of late years to dispossess the citizens of their squatter's rights, as harbor frontage is now being measured in dollars instead of rods.



One young daughter of the Mikado's realm graciously showed me the interior of her humble abode. The furnishings were delightful and naive. A massive brass bed, Alexandria style, with the most wonderful bedspread in all the colors of the rainbow, Stickley mission furniture, a gas range that would have made a June bride green with envy and the walls decorated with Japanese prints and, glory be, over the dining-room table, a picture of Custer's Last Fight by a well known distillery artist!

If there is one thing the Japanese prides himself upon it is on keeping abreast or a little ahead of the times, and the ancestral slab of wood with the bamboo pillow has beaten an ignominious retreat before the fluff mattress and box springs. But for all that, he is here in the City on Stilts as primitively courteous and debonair in his denim overalls as he is at home in the silk robe and grass sandals of his ancestors.

The reason for the eagerness of the Japanese in grasping occidental customs and making them his own is no doubt due to the fact that in his native country he had reached the limits of development under his old ideals and organization. Contact with new sources of life gave impetus to his awakening spirit, already aroused in curiosity and wonder at what he had heard and seen of us occidentals.

Living, as he does, in our midst it would seem that we have some claim to know what we are talking about, when we make laws against him, but I sometimes think that we are unjustly prejudiced.

A Vindication of the Japanese as a Saver.

THE great hue and cry is that he can underbid us in the labor market, that he can live on what you and I would starve to death on. Instead of this being an axiom of guilt I think it rather clears him before the courts of humanity. If a man by frugality and temperance, by close attention to business has succeeded in developing so great an efficiency as to be a dangerous competitor to his more luxury loving brothers, he certainly deserves a certain amount of credit. Our prejudice against such a man is an admission of our own lack of efficiency. Certain it is that physically and morally the Japanese is at heart our equal, so his habits or diet would seem to be a vindication of his mode of living rather than otherwise.

To the women at least of this marine city, life flows on like an idyl. They sit about in groups with their sewing, laughing and chatting, listening to the drowsy staccato of the tides that sing their children to sleep.

A few whites still dwell in the City on Stilts, and one or two Mexican families. Everybody seems to be on friendly, democratic terms. The prejudice of race and caste has no place here for all are gloriously poor, with one or two exceptions, like the little lady with the brass bed and Custer's Fight, and even she confided to me in a burst of confidence that there was still half a dozen installments due on her lares and penates—if one may use the term.

About two years ago a very destructive fire came near wiping out the city. Some said it was caused by spontaneous combustion in a pile of tarred fishing nets, others aver that it was of incendiary origin. Be that as it may, the little picturesque community came near being wiped off the map, and only the efficiency of the water front fire department saved it from utter destruction.

The inhabitants of San Pedro seem to view the City on Stilts with suspicion. While crossing on the ferry I asked a young mechanic the directions of how to get there and tried to get some advance information from him, regarding the place. He looked at me suspiciously.

"It's a fine place to stay away from," was his caustic observation, "unless you want to leave feet first."

Received Courteously in the Little City Over the Sea.

HIS sinister remark illustrates the ignorance of the uninitiated rather well. Not only was I welcomed everywhere I went about the little settlement, but the dwellers to the last man were eager to show me anything I wished to see and courteous to the 'nth degree.

They knew I did not come out of idle curiosity. I was not merely an onlooker. They felt that I wanted to know them and learn their ways, and they were quick to appreciate genuine interest and sympathy. They had found a way to play the game of life inexpensively and were proud of it.

I couldn't help comparing their simple life with the complicated existence of us city dwellers, and I began feeling sorry for myself and envying their lot.

I was standing on the board walk overlooking the little boat harbor when a low craft slipped out between the pilings beneath me. In the stern stood a silent Charon with a face like a withered apple, guiding his boat out of the shadows. He returned my greeting gravely.

It is a peculiar fact that the Japanese fisherman always lives in villages with a well defined home life. His Italian, Austrian and Scandinavian brother of the sea is a nomad. His ship is his castle, but the Japanese prefers a more solid basis of existence. He is by nature an agriculturist. His field may be a two by four flower box, or a laboriously erected bit of terrace on barren soil, but without some sort of vegetation to cheer his soul and fuss over he'd be miserable.

A Place to Forget the Foolish Worries of Life.

THERE is a friendly spirit about this little community that makes you feel at home at once. Your footfalls on the planks of the quiet alleyways give back soft reply. The afternoon breeze sifts over you fresh odors of the sea, of kelp and brine and tarred rope. The seagulls perch upon the ridge poles of the houses—they too are friendly, unafraid. You stroll about odd corners sketching and making notes, feeling very content. It is so peaceful here that you forget that there is a world outside where men crowd each other to the curb and sweat in factories and cheat and lie, a world where women array themselves in showy garments and paint their faces, a world where youth grovels in senility at 20, and old age gambols through its second childhood in gilded grills.

The day passes and the sun sinks. Lingeringly you leave this peaceful little community where everything is so quiet and friendly. The darkness gathers. You hasten homeward with the silent shimmering moon rocked in wake of the ferry boat, thankful that there is a new-coined day to spend on the morrow.

The Gourock Belle.

In the auld toon o' Gourock
Dwells a lass like a sourock
  Whas manners are distant and dim,
Should you try to approach
It's "How dare you encroach!"
  She'll spurn all your efforts with vim.

Frae her auld dirty closse
With its cobble stones mossy
  I'm sure nae ten miles has she been.
But she thinks she is neat
With all graces complete—
  God help 's, she's the worst I hae seen.

In her talk there's a sneevil,
She's got een like the deevil,
  A face that's as dirty as sin.
God help any young man
She may catch if she can,
  I'm sure he'll be sarely taen in.

THINGS FOR EVERY HOUSEKEEPER.

MANY fruits delicious in flavor, such as strawberries and pineapples, if used alone, will not make a firm jelly, because they lack pectin. Pectin is the substance in fruits that causes the juice to "jell." If pectin is added to their juice, a firm jelly, with the color and flavor of the fruit selected, can be made.

Pectin in large quantities can be obtained from oranges and grape fruit skins. Cut or scrape the yellow rind from the peel. Put the white portion through the food chopper and weigh. For each pound add two pounds of water and four teaspoons of lemon juice. Mix thoroughly and allow it to stand fifteen minutes. Add two pounds more of water, boil ten minutes and let stand over night.

Next morning boil ten minutes and allow to cool. Press to remove juice and then drain juice through a flannel bag. If not desired for immediate use, boil and seal while hot.

For jelly, use equal parts of the pectin extract and the desired fruit juice. Boil, add sugar and continue as with any jelly.

STEPS IN JELLY MAKING.

Wash the fruits, remove stems and cut large fruits into pieces. With berries, grapes and currants, add one cup of water for each pound of fruit. For apples, quinces and other hard fruits, add three cups of water to each pound of sliced fruit. Cook until tender. Fruit juices flow more freely when heated.

As soon as the fruit is tender the liquid should be squeezed into a cheesecloth and allowed to drip without pressure through a flannel jelly bag. If the fruit is overcooked, a cloudy jelly is apt to result. After cooling the juice to room temperature, test it to determine the amount of sugar necessary for the pectin present.

Most housekeepers have their own tests by which they determine how much sugar to use in proportion to the juices and just how long the juice and sugar should be boiled. For those who wish a more accurate test the following is suggested:

Take a convenient quantity of fruit juice, heat nearly or quite to boiling, add epsom salts and stir to dissolve. As the solution becomes nearly saturated pectin separates, rising to the top of the liquid as a compact layer, over a perfectly clear liquid. By using a straight-sided tumbler or other deep glass vessel, the thickness of the layer of pectin can be measured, if desired, with a rule. At any rate the comparative amount of pectin can be accurately judged by observation.

QUANTITY OF JUICE FOR JELLY.

Do not attempt to cook a large quantity of the juice at one time over a slow flame. A shallow depth of juice cooked rapidly gives a jelly with better color and consistency.

When the proportion of sugar to juice has been determined, measure the fruit juice and place over the fire to cook. When the juice begins to boil add the sugar immediately and stir until the sugar is dissolved. When the sugar is added at this time there is less danger of crystals forming. After the sugar is dissolved cook the juice as rapidly as possible. Long cooking tends to darken the product and to destroy the pectin which will cause the jelly to be less firm.

No definite temperature can be given for the finished jelly. The best means of determining when it is finished is to test it with a spoon or paddle. Dip the spoon in the boiling mass, remove, cool by moving it back and forth for a few seconds and then allow the jelly to drip from it. As long as there is sirup present it will run from the spoon. When the jelly point is heached it will break from the spoon in flakes or sheets. Remove from the fire immediately and skim. Skimming at this time saves waste. After skimming pour at once into hot sterilized glasses and set aside to cool. Cool as rapidly as possible.

Place glasses away from flies and where dust, which may give contamination with mold, will not reach it. When the jelly is cold cover with melted paraffin. By running a pointed stick around the egde of the glass while the paraffin is still hot a better seal can be obtained. Store jelly in a cool, dark and dry place. Jelly deteriorates in texture, color and flavor if stored for a long period of time.

HOMEMADE CANNERS SATISFACTORY.

Use a wash boiler or some large vessel with a tight-fitting top. Place in bottom a false bottom of wood for jars to rest on. Put sufficient water in boiler to cover jars. Water must be warm when jars are put in.

If fractional processing is used, boil jars for one hour on each of three successive days. Remove and seal tightly at end of each processing period. Loosen covers each time before processing. For very young peas, forty-five minutes each day will be sufficient.

Where only one period of boiling is used, boil partially sealed jars steadily for three hours in a hot-water bath.

Be sure with either procedure that the water is boiling hard before beginning to count time. When the steam pressure cooker is employed, live steam should be escaping from petcock before beginning to count the time needed for processing.

When processing is finished, cool the jars, test for leaks, and store in a cool, dry place. Hermetic sealing jars can not be used with the fractional or intermittent sterilization.

[The following directions may be used with dewberries, blackberries, Logan blackberries, raspberries, strawberries and currants:

PUT UP BERRIES.

Pack as closely as possible, without crushing, in a jar which has been boiled for fifteen minutes. When the jar is full of fruit, fill with a sirup made as sweet as the individual taste desires. Sirups vary from two cups of sugar in four parts of water to thirteen cups of sugar in four quarts of water. A richer color and flavor will be obtained by using berry juice instead of water in making the sirup.

Remove the rubber from the hot soda solution in which it has been soaked (one tablespoon of cooking soda to one quart of hot water) and put on jar. Put top, which has been boiled, in place. Partially screw on screw tops, and with glass tops, put one bail in position.

Place jars on the false bottom of wood in a commercial hot water bath canner or in a wash boiler or lard can. Have sufficient water to cover the jars, or if the cover fits tightly on the vessel used for boiling the jars, water to the shoulders of the jars will be sufficient. Boil pint jars ten minutes and quart jars twelve minutes. Remove jars, tighten covers and place upside down (except vacuum-type jars) in a place free from drafts to test for leaks. If a jar leaks remove rubber, put a new wet one in position and boil jar fifteen minutes more. Store in a cool, dark, dry place.

HOW TO MAKE JAM.

Any variety of fruit may be used for jams and pastes. For variety, different fruits may be combined into one jam. A mild and a tart combination is usually best. Strawberries and pineapples, peaches and pineapples, raspberries and currants, are all excellent jam combinations.

Jams should be cooked rapidly in a porcelain-lined vessel and should be stirred with a wooden spoon or paddle. Almost constant stirring is necessary to prevent burning. The amount of sugar employed in making jam is a matter of choice. About three-fourths as much sugar as berries is the most common proportion, but with fruits which are rich in natural sugars less may be used.

When the mixture has boiled to the proper consistency, place the jam in jelly glasses or pint containers. These should have been boiled for fifteen minutes before filling. Pour hot melted paraffin over the surface when the jam is cool. If the jam is placed in pint containers, screw on boiled top immediately after the jar is filled.

MARMALADES.

Marmalades require fruit which has pectin. When finished, the fruit should appear in small pieces throughout the jellylike mixture. For marmalade, prepare the fruit, cut in small pieces or slices (if large fruits are used) and boil in a sirup until the whole mass is of a jelly consistency. It may be put into jelly glasses or pint jars.

FRUIT PASTES DELIGHTFUL.

THE KU KLUX OF THE SAGE.

BY EDWIN L. SAVIN.

UPON the still, warm, marvelously transparent air, like a huge flat crystal permeated by the low sun's steady beams, beats a multitudinous chorus. Through the waist-high sage, like a school of porpoises through a gray-green sea, stream 3000 sheep, making for their nightly bedding-ground.

The bleatings, pitched in every key, unite in a mighty melody, the evening hymn of the sheep-range. Over the wide column of close, surging, whitish backs floats a golden dust-cloud of pollen from the ripening brush.

Behind, his black sheep-dog darting from flank to flank in busy glee, turning in the stragglers and urging on the rear, trudges, staff in hand, Chris—just Dutch Chris, the herder.

A small figure, overalled and ragged, he is, amid this far-reaching expanse of brush and sky. Occasionally the herder's voice rises in paternal authority, admonishing his charges.

"Hi! Ya, turn 'em., Kitty! Dot's right. Bite dot ol' brown-legged ewe! Bite her! She always makin' troubles. Hey, dere! You ol' one-ear! Ya, I mean you. You better get back in dere, 'fore I coom. G'wan, you ol' fool. I ain't got your baby. If you can't keep track your own childer you ought to lose 'em. Coyote find 'em for you! Here, Kitty! Oder side now. More fools want bitin'. Bite dere tails plenty, by golly! Dot'll do, now. Coom in! Dot's enough."

Around about, as far as vision may cover, stretch sage and sky; the sky interrupted by naught until cut by the encircling horizon of mesas and white-seamed crests; the sage rolling in long billows, interrupted here and there by rim-rock masses like breakers, and by a few scattered cedars like specks of dark foam.

Before one of these cedars, stark and lightning splintered, Chris has halted, to read and to scratch his head.

DEAD LINE NOTICE
To Sheep Men

Notice is hereby given that everything south of a line extending from the mouth of Willow creek to the forks of the old government road is cattle country, and that this Dead Line is going to be enforced.

Herders who take their sheep across will be dealt with accordingly.

COMMITTEE.

Chris scratched his head, while his woolly folk wandered on.

"I don' know," he said. "Dis is somet'ings new. I don' know what dey mean. I don' see no dead line. I don' see no line at all. Nobody tells me noddings. I drive my sheeps t'rough by dis trail las' year. Boss say take same trail dis year; so I mus' go on wit' dem. I don' want no troubles; but Meester Boss say go on, and I go!"

Wherewith Chris followed his sheep and dismissed the notice from his contented mind.

The sun, a crimson globe, has set; the west is golden, the zenith is pink, the east is dark blue, when clamorous all, trotting, walking, jostling, gathered thus by man and dog from their long day's meandering in aspen and sage, the shaggy horde poar from the last brush upon the flat assigned to them. Carrying tenderly in his arms a weakling lamb too exhausted to walk, Chris also enters.

"Dere," he addresses, depositing it. "Now you find a mammy to 'tend to you. I ain't your daddy!"

He looks reflectively, fatherly, over the turbulent mass, as it swirls and baas upon the bedding-ground. Yellow eyes, white-lashed and uncanny, but shrewd, meet his faded blue ones. The sheep estimate him perfectly. They estimate his pretended fierceness when he raises that staff which never descends upon them; when he throws those stones which never hit; when he sends Kitty at them—Kitty, who nips but never draws blood, for dog is like master.

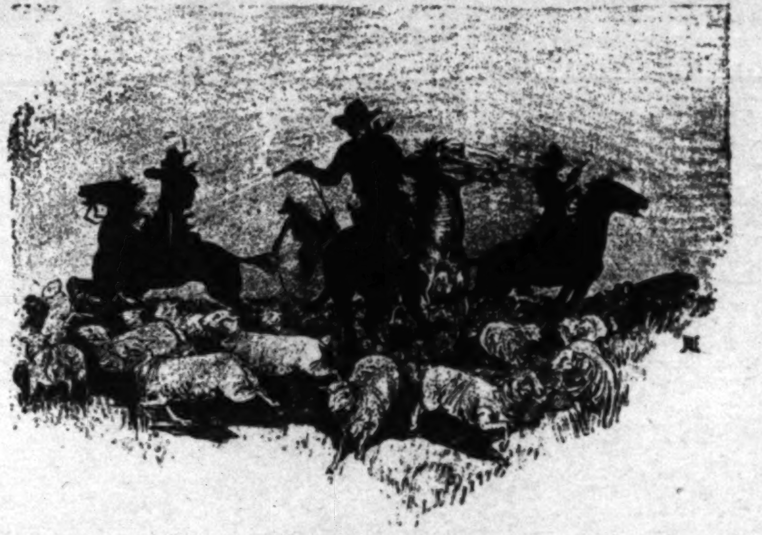
And Chris understands them, in turn. He knows every ewe and wether; he knows the lambs better than do their mothers; he counts every nose in the 3000 and their children. They are his family; he, their only protector, guide and counselor.

The band is settling to the bedding-ground; but from the main body of elders squads of frolicsome lambkins, in single file like urchins at "follow my leader," are continually scampering out, circling through the adjacent sage and returning.

Chris, leaning upon his staff, smiles patronizingly under his grime.

"Dose leetle lambs, dey got to play," he tells Kitty. "Never too tired to play!"

Kitty, after an instant of bright-eyed attention, satisfied with the evening's work, heads for the dingy tent, to throw herself flat, with dripping tongue, there by the canvas wall. Chris presently follows. The short twilight has waned, rapidly retreating westward before the advancing dusk, skirmish line of the host of night. The mesas are touched with high lights, but the sagy billows are dimming, and in the sky the brighter stars are twinkling. A chill drifts upon the purple and misty air; somewhere a coyote yaps.



Hubbub of shouts and bleats and baas and laughter and quick reports from rifle and six-shooter.

For Chris there is much to do. He must bring a pail of water from the boggy spring in the swale near by, where aspens and willows are clustered like palms in an oasis. He must make his fire in the little sheet-iron stove and put his coffee pot on to boil. He must mix his dough for bread, and peel his potatoes, and cut his mutton from the carcass denied to blowflies by its wrapping of tarpaulin. He must light his lantern.

With flaps open so that he may listen the better, sitting cross-legged upon his tumbled bed, his table the ground and an upturned box, he eats his supper. Between mouthfuls he pauses, to listen yet more closely—perhaps, with an exclamation, to hasten out, lest some fatuous mother, not having found her lamb in the medley, should strike off upon the back trail into the dangerous brush.

II.

By Chris's battered German silver watch, which he wound noisily, it was 10 o'clock. He had washed the dishes and had finished his pipe. The tent-flaps were drawn and tied, for the air had waxed penetrating. Kitty, the dog, her last bone gnawed and swallowed, slipped silently in and crept behind the warm stove.

Night, watched by the twinkling stars and a gibbous moon, had invested mesaland. Upon the bedding-ground the uproar of bellowing wethers, calling ewes and complaining lambs had abated to a mere murmur as wether grumbled at wether, mother ewe recounted to mother ewe and lambkin babbled querulously in its sleep.

Within the tent Chris yawned, wiped his eyes, laid aside a tattered paper through which he had been laboriously spelling, and removed his shoes. He must be up at 4 in the morning, since at the first ray of sun those uneasy charges of his would be heading away, to graze, and he must point them aright

He stowed his rusty brogans by his bed, turned back the soiled quilts, crawled in and, reaching for the lantern, blew out the flame.

With a grunt he adjusted himself. Behind the stove, still warm with its ashes, Kitty sighed luxuriously. Outside, upon the bedding-ground, lay compact the sheep, only a fidgety one now and then standing, to turn about and compose itself again. Not a sound was to be heard. Apparently nature's night had mantled the broad range with its peace, bidding hoof, paw and foot to rest, preparing for another day.

The moon climbed steadily higher, and sage and mesa were wanly illumined. Upon the bedding-ground not even a lambkin whimpered. Within the tent Chris snored gutturally; but Kitty growled. She growled again, and Chris awoke.

"Vas?" he addressed drowsily. "Shut oop! Go to sleep, Kitty."

Having attracted her master's attention, Kitty, with another low protest, backed out from behind the stove, where quarters were narrow, and at the tent doorway stuck her nose through a crack in the flaps. She sniffed the night air with long inspiration and again growled. She whined.

"Want to go out?" queried Chris. "Vas is it? Some ol' coyote? I don't schmell noddings. Well, wait a minute! I untie a place for you."

But here, with sundry grunts and groans, he had staggered in his stockinged feet from bed to door, for accomplishing his indulgent purpose, Kitty had burrowed through and was outside. Here her throaty indignation waxed to a continuous rumble; and Chris, at last more aroused than annoyed, opened the flaps on his own account, to poke his tousled head between, and listen.

A coyote; perhaps a wolf; possibly a slinking bob-cat, or even a lion traveling afar for a chance mutton. None of these did Chris fear, and he would have willingly gone after them in the night time with a club alone to defend his flock. He listened.

"Shut oop!" he ordered to Kitty. "I can't hear anyt'ing but you."

He listened. Upon his ears, as keen as were his eyes by day, fell a faint jingle.

"Dot is a loose horse, or somebody rides," he commented. "A horse dot got away, mebbe. I don' see why somebody rides this time o' night. Coom in, Kitty! We don' care, anyhow."

But Kitty refused to come. Instead, she vanished amid the dimness, her growls floating back as she proceeded on. From the bedding-ground a wether, like a sentinel, hoarsely bleated. The jingling was more pronounced; there was more than one horse.

Sheep were rising to their feet; Kitty's reconnaissance was disturbing them. There reached Chris a murmur of human voices, a gay laugh, renewed jingle of stirrup and bridle. He strained his eyes, but a mist hung over the sage, nebulous in the half moonshine, and he could distinguish nothing beyond the hummocky backs of his charges.

"Horses and peoples, too," communed Chris. "Mebbe so dey coom for my sheep! Mebbe dey pass by. Where is dot dog? She make troubles. We stay quiet in our tent. Dey say take my sheep out, I take dem out in the morning; I cannot take dem out tonight. Where is dot dog? I don' want troubles."

Kitty was back. Bristling, growling, tail between legs, she crept in through the flaps and sought a far corner of the tent. The jingling was near; a horse stumbled and a man swore. Whoever they were, they rode carelessly, even defiantly.

"Where are the woollies, anyway?" asked somebody.

"Here they are. See the tent?"

A vague group of moving forms could be decried traversing the sage and approaching. The sheep were astir, bleating questioningly. Chris cautiously withdrew his head and closed the flaps.

"I schleep," he vouschafed sagely. "Den, when dey wake me, I know noddings; only I take my sheep out in the morning if dey say so."

"Hey, you Dutch mutton! Come out! We're goin' to have a barbecue for yuh!" hailed a voice, amid laughter.

Chris softly stole, on ungainly all-fours, to his bed and covered himself with the quilts.

"Sh! Shut oop!" he bade in a whisper to his dog.

Trembling, Kitty crawled beside him. The animal's prescience was more exact than the man's.

Without, the voices swelled in sharp, reckless adjurations.

"Spread out, boys!"

"Don't mistake me for a sheep, anybody!"

"All right? Give it to 'em, now! Give 'em their dose!"

"Smoke the Dutchman out, too!"

In barking, staccato uproar suddenly burst upon the night, drowning the querulous murmurings of the alarmed flock, hoot and yell, and volley merging with volley of gun shots. The erstwhile peace was rent by noise infernal—hubbub of shouts and bleats and oaths and laughter and quick reports from rifle and six-shooter.

Clip! Clip! Spat! a score of bullets ripped through the dingy tent, thudded on boxes and clinked against the stove.

"Mein Gott!" muttered Chris, hugging close his flat bed. "Dey pile oop my sheeps! Mebbe dey shoot me. But dey pile oop my sheeps!"

His teeth chattered; he groveled, shuddering, weak as water, harkening to the clamor outside. What could he do? He was alone, and according to all hearsay those devil cowboys would as soon kill him as kill ewe or wether. In fact, they rated him below his sheep. Seven or eight miles distant was another band of Circle K sheep, with two herders; but even if they knew about the attack, those Mexicans would not cross in succor. No, they had their own bacon to save. A thousand miles away were the owners of the flock. Chris was alone.

Thud of blows, shrill bleatings, panting, clump of horses' hoofs, exclamations, an occasional shot, persisted; the bloody work was going on.

"Ain't that Dutchman awake yet" demanded a voice.

"He's a sound sleeper, ain't he" responded another.

"Mebbe we combed his hair."

"No, he's shamming. Rouse him out, boys. He's missing the fun."

Bang! bang, bang, bang! The bullets hissed through the tent once more. One burned a welt across the cowering herder's thigh, and Kitty, on the further side of him, yelped in fright or pain.

"Mein Gott! I get out of dis," muttered Chris.

A rage filled him; his German spirit was pricked into being. Crawling, followed by Kitty, he grasped the rusted single-barrel shotgun which was his armament against buzzards and coyotes. Head down, he bolted from the tent running blindly. A riotous shout greeted him.

"Here he is!"

"Here's the Dutch—"

"Get his dog, boys!'

Rifle and revolver rang sharply; Kitty uttered another piteous yelp, collapsed and lay motionless. Arm over his brow, as if for a shield, Chris plunged on and dived to hands and knees in the friendly sage.

"Took to the brush!" jeered voices. "Finish his sheep, boys!"

Through all the sage around about, and back and forth upon the stricken bedding-ground, were running the helpless, bewildered sheep. Ewe, wether and lamb lifted high their plaints in appeal and agony. The salty scent of warm blood was in the heavy air. The moon's ghostly light revealed short pursuits, rising and falling clubs, kicking whitish forms.

It was a very saturnalia of wanton method, which consists simply in a course of sweating in a vapor bath, such as may easily be carried out in any Turkish or Russian bath establishment or at home. This has been demonstrated over and over again in this country, in France, in England, and in India, and has never failed to cure, even advanced cases.

Dogs will go mad when they are tortured beyond endurance. So will men. Dogs will go mad in hot weather, when deprived of water. So will men. Dogs do not perspire through the skin. Hence, it is a refinement of cruelty to muzzle them. Instead of a muzzling law, there should be a law compelling people to furnish water to dogs, as in some German cities, where each householder is compelled to keep in front of the house a pan of water for dogs. This, in the home of "frightfulness," and where they have no hot, dry summers, like ours.

Dogs that are fed on carrion become worm-infested, and sometimes go mad from that cause. Dogs become savage when fed exclusively on flesh, as do all animals, including man, especially when they get little exercise. The bite of any carnivorous animal, especially when angry, is poisonous. This includes men who eat largely of flesh.

I had a big St. Bernard, with the most intelligent and kindly face I have ever seen on a dog. She was brought up with the babies. The cat slept with her, and the parrot bullied her around the yard. If you raised a stick at her she would wag her tail, because she had never been beaten. Yet, when I went with her for a stroll, if she ran in an affectionate way to greet a child, the parent or guardian, after saying: "What a beautiful dog!" almost invariably added: "Will she bite?"

Dogs bite when they have been trained to bite. Many men take delight in making them fight. They think the torture endured by a dog who runs through a crowd with a tin can attached to its tail is fun. Dogs are taught to be savage. Parents do not teach their children to be kind to animals, and when they grow up they are unkind to men.

Regular Meal Hours.

FOLLOWING is by Agnes Brown, M.D: "The human system seems to form habits, and it performs its functions to a great measure in accordance with the habits formed. This seems to be particularly so in regard to eating, and you might say drinking, too. The stomach gets into the habit of accepting a meal at a certain hour every day, and at that hour it is ready for it. If, however, meals be taken at irregular hours, the stomach is taken by surprise, and when it does it is not in that state of readiness for prompt and perfect performance of its work. Be more careful about what you eat, when you eat it, and there will be less dyspepsia."

A Healthy Baby.

FOLLOWING is from a Los Angeles man: "While I am no doctor-hater, realizing how much the services of a capable, conscientious physician mean to humanity at certain times, and, while I do not agree with everything you say in your fine articles in the Care of the Body, I do believe that your advice as a rule is far better than that of the average physician, and it is very easy to understand why the Medical Trust has no use for you. Since the science of healing is not a perfect science, by any means, and since the doctors themselves disagree on so many points, I do not see where the State has any right to tell you or me that we must be treated for any special malady by any special school of healers.

"My wife and I have been following your instructions rather faithfully for some time, and we feel that we have been well paid for it, especially as it has cost us only the price of The Times Sunday edition.

"Just a word about our baby. He is now a year and a half old, and he has never been sick one hour of his life. Since he escaped from the hospital, a week after his birth, he has never been fed a single meal after 6 o'clock and he sleeps twelve hours every night, without a cry. He has been fed three times a day on milk, fruit, raw eggs and occasionally graham crackers. He has been given no candy, no sugar and no cereals or white bread. We have never had to give him a single dose of medicine of any kind. He sings and plays all day long, except when he is taking his afternoon or morning two-hour nap.

"Yet, when his mother attempts to tell other mothers about the secret of our baby's health, they either laugh or sneer at her, and tell her that their own little ones are ill 'in spite of the fact that they treat them according to doctors' orders.'

"Our baby is sound and strong, although, thank goodness, he is not fat, and we don't want him to be. We want to keep him away from doctors as long as possible. As for vaccination, well, while no one knows what he would do under certain circumstances, I think now that I would shoot any man who should try to scratch poison into the pure blood of my little boy. I am sending you my name and address, and if you want to give it to any physician who might care to make a test of this vaccinating proposition, some time in the future, you are welcome to do so."

Vivisection in Schools.

MAINE is one of the first States in the Union to incorporate upon its statute books a law designed to prohibit or control the use of living animals for the purpose of vivisection, despite organized opposition of medical and medico-educational organizations throughout the State.

It is a disgrace to a civilized country that such a law should be necessary.

"Alienists."

"ALIENISTS," who testify in court according to the way in which they are hired to testify, have become a bad joke, and bring further discredit on a profession that is already losing its grip on the people, so that it has to turn to legislative force.

Pyorrhoea.

HITHERTO, dentists have confined themselves to constructive work, in which they have developed praiseworthy skill. Now they are imitating the surgeons, and are pulling out all the teeth, for pyorrhoea and other ailments. In this they are aided and abetted by the doctors, who seem to have a mania for destruction.

Intelligent dentists now admit that pyorrhoea is a blood disease, caused by auto-intoxication, or foulness of the colon, due to wrong diet. The gums are merely an outlet, where the foul condition happens to manifest. How, then, can it possibly be cured by pulling out the teeth?

Prostatitis.

IT IS claimed by some that every man over 40 years of age has more or less congestion of the prostate.

In his recently published book "Prostatic Diseases and Impotency" (published by the author, Los Angeles, Cal.) George Starr White, M.D., explains this as follows:

"A man of sedentary habits sits a great deal, and that gives pressure against the prostate, especially if the bottom of the chair is made in the abominable fashion of being elevated in the center toward the front.

"If a person is on his feet a great deal, gravitation is also pulling liquids down into the prostate.

"If a man has been addicted to alcohol or tobacco, his blood vessels have become

The Great Breadth of Chiropractic:
"It is better to die living than be living dead."
The person who knows Chiropractic, that is, having been properly educated in its principles understands all phenomena or expressions of Nature in and through the human body; he relates all abnormality or disease to disturbance of the Nerve System.
In Chiropractic is to be found the one and only means of specific and permanent removal of nervous obstruction and thus permitting a return of the full quota of vital forces and resultant restoration of normal function without the assistance of other so-called "sciences," pills, potions, manipulations, stimulations or medicament whatsoever.
Through Chiropractic the "Insane Wards" of the many State Institutions will be emptied, the inmates thereof being rehabilitated and returned to lives of usefulness.
Those persons whose names appear below practice pure and unalloyed Chiropractic. Any and all other forms of Chiropractic are spurious.

MAKING AMERICANS IN LOS ANGELES.

BY M. C. FREDERICK.

LOS ANGELES is essentially an American city. Approximately one-fourth of the residents are foreign born, but there are cities that are only 10 per cent. American.

There are now in the United States 17,500,000 foreigners. Less than 6,000,000 have become naturalized. The other 11,500,000 enjoy nearly the same rights and privileges as citizens, except voting and holding office, and are exempt from military service unless their countries are allies of America. The number of those who do not speak and read English is nearly as great as that of the unnaturalized.

In the early part of the war (1915) it was estimated that the foreign born in Los Angeles were 148,750, as is thought to now be about the same. The nationalities were listed as follows:

EARLIER IMMIGRATION.

Germans	11,000	French	3,000
English	11,000	Danes, Swiss Dutch	3,500
Canadians	10,000	Norwegians	2,000
Scotch	5,000
Irish	5,000
Swedes	4,500	Total	55,000

Later immigration, mostly within the preceding ten or twelve years:

EUROPEAN.

SLAVIC.		NON-SLAVIC.
Russians	7,500	Hebrews	10,000
Croatians	7,500	Italians	6,500
Serbians	2,000	Armenians	2,500
Poles	2,000	Arabians, Gypsies, Hindoos, etc.	2,500
Bohemians	500	Magyars	2,600
Slovaks	500	Greeks	1,500
Montenegrins	300	Spanish	1,500
Ruthenians	100	Syrians	500
Slovenians	100	Finns	250
Bulgarians	100	Rumanians	200
Total	20,600	Lithuanians (Letts)	200
		Total	28,650

NON-EUROPEAN.

Mexicans	35,000
Japanese	7,500
Chinese	2,000
Total	44,500

The police record of arrests for 1918 names fifty-four nationalities, including several from South America.

European Farmers Become American Factory Hands.

IN THEIR own countries many of our non-English-speaking immigrants were small farmers and fruit growers. In Los Angeles the majority of them are day laborers, collectors of garbage, rubbish and junk, fruit peddlers, truck drivers, track hands and such occupations, or they work in factories, beef-packing plants, lumber yards, brick yards, gas works, etc. The women prefer laundry work and the factory to domestic service.

Some at least do not enjoy the change, and long for the country, but find it expedient to remain in the city and adapt themselves the best they can.

How they like America is largely a matter of temperament. Some find it a veritable paradise and are superlatively content. Others feel cheated in having come to what they thought was a free country and finding themselves hedged about by restraining laws and are resentful accordingly. Some of the best of them like everything but our law courts, which they consider a travesty on justice.

According to a recent but incomplete survey, 96.1 per cent. of those from Britain are able to read; Jews, 75.2 per cent.; France, 87.7 per cent.; Jews, 75.2 per cent. Less than half of the Mexicans and Russians read and the Italians and subjects of Turkey are about equally divided. Literacy and naturalization are closely related. Nearly all the British, Germans and French are naturalized, more than half the Jews, comparatively few of the Italians and Turks and almost none at all of the Mexicans.

Christian people for many years have been doing "Americanization" work in Los Angeles, though that isn't what they called it, through schools, settlements and missions. Then the immigration problem loomed large and California established her Commission of Immigration and Housing for the purpose of bringing to the immigrant the best opportunities for education and citizenship and for encouraging naturalization; not by creating new machinery but by co-operation with existing agencies.

It was an entirely new venture and there was no precedent to follow, in this country or any other. The first act of the commission after studying the situation was to enlist the aid of the women's clubs, secure necessary laws, set the wheels of the public schools in motion and invent the home teacher as the magnet to draw the immigrant mother and her family into the closest possible relations with the school. The home teacher also relieves a great amount of sorrow and distress in the family by putting them in touch with the organized help of which they are in need. Financial, juvenile, legal, medical—aid of whatever nature is theirs when their need becomes known.

Los Angeles Was Able to Cope With War Conditions.

THE commission works through the libraries, settlements, missions, playgrounds, employment bureaus and other public and private agencies. When the war came and the nation suddenly discovered its condition and went hastily to work to fuse its disintegrated elements, Los Angeles already had its programme well in hand

The public school organization and equipment were made available to every member of the immigrant family who could be induced to use them. The night school gave the adult an opportunity to acquire both an education and a trade and was made the portal to naturalization. The course of study, including American history, civics, and the Constitution of the United States, is prescribed by the Board of Education and approved by the District Federal Court. Upon successfully completing the course in citizenship a diploma is granted, which is accepted by the court instead of the regular examination.

The Mexicans, Japanese, Russians and Austrians have the largest numbers in the night schools, the Germans, Turks, French and Americans the smallest.

Under supervision of the school board classes are formed in places outside the school buildings. The public libraries are seeking every means to extend their usefulness to Americans-in-the-making, co-operating with all other agencies. The International Institute (Y.W.C.A.) also co-operates with all other mediums in training girls to a self-reliant Americanism and has a home for foreign girls. The Y.W.C.A. is doing effective work in a colony of 600 Armenians. Many of these foreigners have left families in their own country and expect to return.

The Neighborhood Settlement House, the Brownson House and the Los Angeles Settlement House each reach about 600 families, the Ida Straus Day Nursery and Settlement ministers to the Jewish people. The Music School Settlement is in the Italian quarter. St. Elizabeth's Day Nursery takes care of eighty children, including Japanese, Chinese and negroes. There are several other nurseries, besides those in the public schools.

In 1917 the Garment Workers' Union organized classes in English for foreign-born women, which have developed into a vocational high school of many branches, including a very successful art school. It is now a part of the city school system and its fifteen teachers are paid by the city.

Other points of contact are the children's hospitals, the charities visitor, the city nurse, the housing inspector, and the probation officer. The seven playgrounds in the foreign district attract more than 1500 people every day.

The Daughters of the American Revolution have lent a hand and even private individuals aid in the work. Nearly all the leading denominations have missions among the immigrants, a number of them including industrial classes.

The mingled nations: Children of four different countries are represented in this doorway in Sonoratown—Japanese, Italian, Syrian and Rumanian.

Making Men and Women Over no Easy Task.

TO AN outsider it would seem that if there is any means for developing the American ideal that is not now being tried it is because no one has been able to originate it or find it elsewhere and that efforts would soon cease for lack of material. But Americans are not made over night, and "you may lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink" until he is ready. It is no small thing for a man who has worked hard all day to study when he is tired at night. To do it in an unfamiliar language amounts to heroism. Then the gifted teacher requires a Christlike humility, sympathetic understanding and infinite patience, and such teachers are not always available.

Fifteen of the city schools have evening classes with an enrollment of 5637 and an attendance of 992. The writer recently attended a session of the District Federal Court where a class of seventy-seven—a few of them women—presented themselves for admission to citizenship. Nearly all were accepted on diplomas received for completing the citizenship course of study.

Of these, twelve were subjects of Great Britain, eleven of Germany, eight each of Italy, Austria, Hungary, Russia and Sweden, three of France, two of Norway, and one each of Switzerland, Belgium, Greece, Montenegro and Turkey. Nine without certificates were subjected to searching oral examination, each separately and according to the nature of his replies. Three of these were British, two German, one Russian, one Italian, one French and one Swiss. That was said to be about the average number per month seeking admission. A few applications were deferred for various reasons.

Several of those with diplomas were fine upstanding fellows in soldiers' uniforms, who dropped their unpronounceable or otherwise undesirable names and took good American names along with their citizenship. Another, a gray-haired German, wore the revered blue which told he had fought for the Union more than half a century ago.

Although they waited for the draft—I heard of only one who enlisted—the foreign-born, naturalized or subjects of Allied nations seem to have gone willingly when called and served well. District Sixteen sent forty-two Chinamen and two Japanese.

Interesting side lights were brought out by the questions, the most tragic being the experience of a Russian who left his wife and children behind, and the war coming on he has been unable to get any trace of them, letters, money, and tickets to America all being returned. This no doubt has occurred in many instances.

Although by far our greatest number of immigrants are Mexicans—some insist there are 50,000 of them in Los Angeles—and far more work is done among them, it is rarely that one is naturalized. Almost nomadic in their instincts, they have a strong attachment for their native land, which is too easily reached for them to take root in the land of the Americano.

Also, we have the Russian Bolshevik. We may educate him and give him more power—for good, if we at the same time develop his moral nature—for evil, if we do not. The most outstanding fact of Bolshevism is its hatred of the Bible and all it represents. This nation was founded and built upon the Bible. It is the basis of our laws, our only standard of right and wrong. There is no other. We can no more dispense with the foundation and preserve the structure than the artist can dispense with a human face and preserve its smile.

Shipbuilding In Japan.

In the matter of expeditious ship building, Japan has shown herself to be the equal of any other nation. The keel of the Raifuku Maru was laid on October 7, the boat was launched on October 30, and successfully underwent its trial trips on November 7. A few days later it sailed with a full cargo for South American ports. This is a record of which Japan has every reason to be justly proud.

The Raifuku Maru is a steamer of 5800 tons gross, and it has a dead weight of 9000 tons. It is 385 feet long, 51 feet beam, and 38 feet deep, and it has a speed of 14.3 knots per hour, so, it will be seen, it is a good-sized boat. It was built at Kobe by the Kawaski Dockyard, Limited.

HARRY ELLINGTON BROOK, N. D.

"Contagious" Diseases.

ACCORDING to a dispatch from St. Paul, Minn., dated July 12, two St. Paul physicians will expose themselves to contagious diseases in a duel to the death to prove which supports the best scientific theory. Dr. H. A. Zettel, electropath, challenged Dr. H. W. Hill, executive secretary of the Minnesota Public Health Association, to the duel and Dr. Hill accepted.

Dr. Zettel will use nothing but "pure sanitation, pure air and sanitary food and drink" to prevent what he terms "so-called contagious diseases" from affecting him. Dr. Hill is to brave the diseases after inoculation and vaccination. They will expose themselves to the most virulent cases they can find and will then go into quarantine to await developments. Even leprosy will be used in the test.

"The survivor shall be an honorary pallbearer for the victim," says Dr. Zettel's challenge. Should we both be fortunate enough to survive we will hold a rally at the Auditorium and tell the people of our experiences."

The entire affair grew out of the acceptance of a similar challenge by Dr. J. B. Fraser of Toronto, in an article "Do Germs Cause Disease?" published in a physical culture magazine. Dr. Fraser defied any Board of Health in the United States or Canada to prove that germs cause disease. Dr. Hill asked him to name the time and place for the experiment. Dr. Zettel, who is an exponent of Dr. Fraser's theory, offered himself in his contemporary's place and issued the challenge.

Such a test is quite unnecessary. The fact that so-called "contagious diseases" are not contagious—except that skin and sex diseases may be communicated by direct physical contact—has been proved over and over again, under the most searching medical supervision. Little is said of this by medical men, because it upsets their pet germ theory, although Virchow, parent of the theory, admitted, before he died, that germs are not the cause but an effect of disease.

Among others, the late Thomas Powell, M.D., of Los Angeles submitted to a number of tests, under rigorous medical control. He was fed enough bacilli to wipe out an army corps, including germs of Asiatic cholera, his throat was scarified and painted with fresh diphtheria culture. He inhaled the dry sputum of a dying tubercular patient. Other cultures were injected subcutaneously. Dr. Powell failed to develop a symptom of any of the diseases, and lived many years thereafter.

However, before entering upon any such test, you should see that you have freed your blood of waste matter, by adopting an abstemious, non-mucus and non-acid-forming diet. Otherwise, the germs—or scavengers—will attack the waste and start a house-cleaning and there will be a hurricane that will upset you for a time.

When atmospheric conditions are favorable to the spread of disease, many, whose blood is full of waste matter, are attacked simultaneously, as many on a ship become seasick, when the water is rough. Then it is called an epidemic, and the disease is falsely supposed to be communicated from one person to another.

It follows, of course, from this, that all quarantines and fumigations are a useless and annoying waste of time and money.

Light Wine and Grape Juice.

THE lowest alcohol content in natural California wines, made in Northern California, is about 10 per cent. Hard cider contains about 8 per cent.

In the Azores Islands they make a sweet natural wine that is quite low in alcohol content. Following is from an article in the National Geographic Magazine:

"Several kinds of sweet and sour wines are manufactured, but that most widely used is the red wine (vino de cheiro.) It contains a very small percentage of alcohol, and has a rich grape flavor. A liter of this pure wine is sold for 60 reis, or about 5 cents in American currency. It is almost impossible to become intoxicated on this 'vino de cheiro,' and drunkenness among people of the islands is rare."

Such a wine is more wholesome than grape juice, as it is usually consumed, that is to say, when swallowed like water. When consumed in that way, grape juice—or any other fruit juice—ferments forming alcohol and gas in the stomach.

The proper way to use grape juice is to mix it with two parts water and the juice of half a lemon to a glass, and then sip it very slowly. In such form it is a wholesome drink.

A beverage containing a small percentage of alcohol is less harmful than liquid or solid food that causes the formation of alcohol in the stomach, because that is accompanied by gas, a leading cause of many functional disturbances, such as high blood pressure

Many strict prohibitionists are perambulating stills, although they do not know it. They know only that they feel "comfortable" or "satisfied" after mixing sugar and starch in their stomachs, just as the non-abstainer does after a drink of whisky.

The Diet Cure.

A SAN BERNARDINO woman writes: "I find at times what a cleansing diet does for me—brightens the eyes, makes red lips, clear skin and even the hair is changed. I have really wondered at times if it were possible one could become attractive by just a simple diet. And only a few days of overeating mars one's appearance immediately. It's wonderful to watch the effects of foods on the body, when once you study these things, and it sounds good to hear people say 'How fine you look! You look ten years younger.' So I am expecting wonderful results, if I keep up my grit."

"Major Operations."

WHEN they do not die on an operating table, people often feel relieved for a time, after a surgical operation. This is mainly suggestion. The reaction soon follows. No necessary organ of the body can possibly be exterminated without producing harmful results and premature death. Henry Lindlahr, M.D., writes:

"My observations during nearly eighteen years of practical experience prove positively that the average length of life after a 'major' operation, performed on important, vital parts and organs, is less than ten years, and that after such an operation the general health of the patient is, in a great majority of cases, not as good as before. This is confirmed by many other conscientious observers among Nature Cure practitioners, as well as physicians of other schools, and of allopathy itself."

And 95 per cent. of these operations are not only harmful but useless and unnecessary.

Massage.

SCIENTIFIC massage is a most helpful means of removing congestion and stimulating circulation. Broad-minded and intelligent physicians recognize this. Unfortunately, there are many of another kind. Here is an extract from a letter I received from an experienced hydrotherapist and masseur:

"For six months I have been trying to make my living by practicing massage, but without success. People do not seem to be interested in massage at all. Yet it is such a great thing, if you know how to administer it. The general public seems to regard it as a luxury, while some think it downright foolishness. I have been trying to interest M.D.'s in it, but all I ever got was empty promises. Some M.D.'s know the value of massage, others don't, but all of them, or nearly all of them, do not want it. Deep down in their hearts they hate and fear it, as a competitor. It 'hurts their business.'

"There is another angle to this story—the ethical side of it. This applies especially to Los Angeles. Here there are few massage institutions where men are not treated by womn. While I do not regard it as objectionable, under proper conditions, to give massage treatments to the opposite sex, it is well known that many men go to massage establishments, not for the sake of massage, but on account of the women who give this so-called massage. Such business robs the profession of its dignity, and makes it hard for a scientific masseur to get along."

Mad Dogs.

THE "hydrophobia" season is now here Hydrophobia is exceedingly rare; so rare that pound keepers in cities like Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and Denver, after being bitten scores, or hundreds of times, have never seen any such thing as hydrophobia. Sending heads or carcasses of dogs to laboratories usually "brings results," although it is only a few years since anyone pretended to identify the germ of rabies. The Pasteur institutes are mercenary grafts. A celebrated French physician has said: "Pasteur does not cure hydrophobia; he gives it."

The only result of the establishment of a Pasteur institute in any part of the world has been an enormous increase of cases and deaths reported to have occurred from hydrophobia, and the one country where there has been no single case reported for years is England, where, thanks to the protests of the anti-vivisectionists, there is no Pasteur institute to play upon the credulity of the ignorant.

The condition that goes under the name of hydrophobia does occur, but it is easily cured by what is known as the Buisson

SOME FAMOUS WOMEN SCOLDS

Scolding has seemed to be a soil in which philosophy thrived, as witness Socrates, than whom no living man was probably ever more cruelly berated.

Speaking of the wife of that great philosophical divine, John Wesley, who at the age of 48, married a widow with four children, Southey says:

"By her outrageous jealousy and abominable temper she deserves to be classed in a triad with Xantippe and the wife of Job."

The first husband of this vixen had quickly succumbed to her tyranny, but the good John Wesley patiently endured it for twenty years, when, no longer having youthful incumbrances to burden her, she abandoned her victim, taking with her his papers and journals, the latter of which he never recovered. Wesley is probably in heaven now. He had his hell on earth.

Another of the world's most eminent preachers—the Rev. George Whitefield—doubtless agreed with a declaration of the afflicted Scaliger, made centuries before:

"A wife is a hectic fever and not to be cured but by death."

A chronicler, referring to Whitefield, says of his wife: "Her death in 1760 set his mind much at rest." Could he have enjoyed this mental rest if he had not experienced the opposite?

A striking contrast exists between the present amiable Duchess of Marlborough and Sarah, wife of the great soldier-duke of that title, who, in spite of the wretched existence which she led him, loved his virago to the day when death released him from the torments which she inflicted. Her temper was such that to spite him she one day actually shaved off her beautiful hair, in which he took a great pride, and placed it where he would see it. The tempest she had hoped to arouse was never manifested, and it would seem as though even her cruel heart might have been touched upon finding after his death her shorn tresses locked away in a cabinet among treasures which he most prized. When this great soldier, whom no fortunes of war had ever daunted, succumbed to his wife's ceaseless persecution and lay palsied and dying, his duchess released some of her temper upon the physician in attendance and was known to follow him to the door, swearing with a fluency that shocked Dr. Garth.

Van Brugh, architect of Blenheim Castle, was wont to call its duchess "that wicked woman of Marlborough!" She kept him constantly seething in her wrangles, for besides £10,000 to spend upon Blenheim, her good lord had bequeathed her an additional £12,000 a year "to keep herself clean with and go to law," of which latter permission she was prompt to avail herself. Her loving husband had meant no aspersion upon her in the first clause of this bequest. In those days great ladies wore fine clothes till they became much soiled, and then cast them away. Compare what the old duke accomplished with the record of the present duke, and you may learn of the value of a shrewish wife.

At one time England kindly permitted men to sell their wives, for there were at that time courageous hearts to be found willing to attempt the taming of a shrew.

There was also in use a "scold's bridle," made of metal bands, which held the tongue so that it could not move. Strange to say, the name of a man with foolhardiness enough to apply this device has never been published, and its inventor thought best to conceal his identity.

The married man who said he "went to the war to have peace" only imitated the eloquent French advocate Pasquer, who exclaimed: "To have peace I am ever obliged to be at war." It was his wont to drown his wife's angry voice with the thunder of his own.

The Earl of Shrewsbury, who was living apart from his wife, received in 1590 a letter from the Lord of Litchfield and Coventry wherein a fellow feeling creeps through these lines of admonition:

"But some will say, in Your Lordship's behalfe, that the countess is a sharpe and bitter shrewe, and therefore licke enough to shorten youre life if she should keepe you. Indeed, my good lorde, I have heard some say so; but if shrewdnesse or sharpenesse may be a just cause of separation between a man and wife I thinck fewe men in Englande would keepe their wives longe; for it is a common jeste, yet trewe in some sense, that there is but one shrewe in all the world, and every man hath her; and so every man must be rid of his wife that would be rid of a shrewe."

butchery. Chris's head throbbed hotly, his eyes were blurred with red. He scrambled to his feet, and with gun in one hand shook his clenched fist impotently.

"You kill my sheeps, you kill my dog, you try to kill me!" he yelled furiously. "Mebbe I kill you first, you verdammter—"

He blazed away. The flame from his single-barrel flared forth, the pellets hissed and pattered. An instant of silence followed.

"Ouch!" remarked a voice. "I reckon I'm all poxed up!"

"Why, that was the Dutchman!" protested somebody in awed, astounded tone. "Shot at us, didn't he"

"He shore did!"

Behind his sage-brush Chris was feverishly attempting to reload, with the empty shell. It was his only cartridge. His fingers fumbled in his excitement.

"Fire that tent, some one," ordered a voice, "so we can see!"

"I can see. Wait a minute! I know his bush," intercepted a second. "Be ready to pot him if he jumps."

A moment and from a saddle spat a thin tongue of fire—and another and another, with three flat reports of an automatic pistol. Silence again ensued.

"Got him, I reckon!" volunteered a cowboy presently.

"I reckon so," agreed the shooter coolly "I'll just ride around and see, though."

He did, by the one side; comrades took the other. He peered gingerly, his pistol held forward for sudden service.

"Yep," he announced. "Another herder gone to hell!"

"Might plug him once more for luck. He may be playin' 'possum."

"All right!"

The pistol cracked. The riders turned away.

"Now give the woollies another round, boys, and set fire to that tent stuff."

The main work was resumed and soon finished.

"Anything left?"

"Not much."

"Well, looks like we'd learned these sheep not to come in where cattle want to run."

"Yes, suh! That herder's done taken his keep along with him. He'll have roast mutton now foh the rest of his days!"

The company rode away again into the recesses of the misty night; joking, laughing boisterously—but with a gayety somewhat forced. As they rode one by one they dropped off upon their several trails.

III.

The buzzards were first upon the scene in the morning; the sun's beams followed. Here, where but yesterday they so warmly flooded the 3000 low, shaggy folk, old and young, quick with eager life, gleaning through the fragrant brush, now the beams beheld only a sprinkling of wretched fugitives and a sickening array of wounds and mangled carcasses.

Through the sage moved a few sheep unharmed—trotted, walked, halted, trotted again, sniffing fearfully at the bodies they encountered; calling, listening, calling, anxious, wild, confused and puzzled. There were other sheep which moved—some with broken legs, some with great gashes and with bloody holes, some prone with broken backs, only lifting their sad heads.

The gray-green of the sage was plashed with red. From the woolly pulp of the bedding-ground protruded crushed heads, splintered slender limbs, pathetically up-pointing hoofs. In the midst of the carnage stood one mother ewe, with shattered shoulder, nosing, dumbly nonplused, a limp baby at her feet.

Oddly twisted, his tousled tow hair matted and crimsoned, his faded blue eyes widely open, staring among the stems of brush as if seeking, by wont, for lost charges, behind his sage clump lay Dutch Chris, the herder.

From where she had fallen, before the tent—now but a black cinder heap—Kitty, the dog, dragged herself a little further.

The gray-green of the sage was splashed died.

Helen and Warren.

"Your game's up," roughly, with a laugh. "We've nailed you this time."

"What do you mean?" shrilly. "You'll pay for this mistake."

"Oh, cut that spiel! Where's the swag?"

One of the men flung back the closet door, but the shelves were empty.

"Open up those trunks!" taking off the receiver to silence the phone.

Miss Stanley wildly insisted that they were her trunks—that they had no right to open them. Coolly ignoring her frenzied protests he took a chisel from his pocket and forced the lock of the largest trunk.

Taking out the tray, they dumped its contents on the bed. There were two under trays filled with expensive lingerie—all carelessly, hurriedly packed.

"Made a good haul, didn't you?" sneered the man with the black mustache. "Took the tickets all off. If those store detectives had been on the job—we'd have had you before now."

Here Miss Stanley dropped to the floor in a fit of hysterical weeping. As the two men not very gently jerked her to her feet, Helen, with a swift impulse of self-protection, turned to the door and slipped out.

Through the hall, down the outside steps, and half way down the block, before she paused breathless and with throbbing fear glanced back. Neither of the detectives nor the officer were in sight.

A taxi was standing at the corner. Darting toward it she gave her address to the driver and sprang in.

Her heart still beat in her throat. They could have made her a witness! Her name and Warren's would have been dragged into the papers. He would never have forgiven her.

He had warned her to go to a reputable shop and pay a fair price. Her face burned as she recalled his contemptuous, "You're always trying to get something for nothing—always got some new stunt to get things cheap."

Ignoring his advice, her feminine greed for bargains had led her into this unsavory adventure. It had been a mortifying but salutary lesson.

Audience Disinfected.

During the "flu" epidemic at Rome, special permission was given to hold a patriotic celebration, says the June Popular Mechanics Magazine. The audience of 4000 persons assembled in the theater at the appointed day, and conversation buzzed before the curtain rose. But not for long. Ushers stepped into the aisles bearing monster syringes, bowed with Latin courtesy, and squirted a cloud of disinfectant down the row of seats until it mingled with the cloud from the next aisle.

Some Good Short Stories from Everywhere.

Compiled for The Times Illustrated Magazine.

A Misunderstanding.

"THE Germans are always being misunderstood, and this misunderstanding is always to the poor fellows' disadvantage."

The speaker was Adolph Junck, the millionaire dye importer of Duluth.

"I know a German motorist," he went on, "who arrived one June evening at a crowded country roadhouse. When the clerk told him the house was full, he said desperately:

" 'Can't you at least give me a bundle of hay somewhere?'

" 'There ain't a thing left, mister,' said the clerk, 'but a bit of cold mutton stew.' "

Getting a Lawyer.

A DENVER lawyer tells of a man arrested in that town on a serious charge, to whom was assigned a bad lawyer. The crude appearance of the man retained to defend him distressed the prisoner.

"Is this my lawyer?" he asked.

"Yes," replied the judge.

"And he is going to defend me?"

"Yes."

"If he should die, could I have another lawyer?"

"Yes."

"Then Your Honor, I request the privilege of seeing him in the back room for a few minutes."

The Neutral.

"ALL neutral hotel workers have been turned out of their jobs in France by the French alliance of hotel men. A good job, too."

The speaker was Oscar, the famous New York head waiter.

"A good job, too,' he repeated, "for a neutral, say what you will of him, is too cautious for these full-blooded times.

"Neutrals remind me of the schoolboy who listened calmly to a lecture on Nero. The lecturer recounted all Nero's debaucheries, cruelties and crimes. Then afterwards he asked the boy:

" 'Well, what do you think of him?'

"The boy squirmed in his seat, but made no reply.

" 'Come,' said the teacher. 'Speak up. What do you think of Nero? Was he a good man? Would you care to introduce your sister to such a man? Would you like to know him?'

"The boy squirmed again; then he whined:

" 'Well, Nero never done nothin' to me.' "

Why, it's Daddie.

LORD CHELMSFORD, who, as Viceroy, is having rather an anxious time on account of the Indian disturbances, is "one of the best," says London Tit-Bits. "The friend of all and the enemy of none," was the verdict when he left New South Wales, where he had become the most popular of governors, for India.

His lordship blushed, however, when, attired in gorgeous uniform at the swearing-in ceremony at Government House, a shrill voice from the gallery cried: "Why, it's daddie." It was one of the small Chelmsford girls, who until then had never seen her father in his state uniform.

How Sunday Started.

THERE is an interesting story of how Billy Sunday, the evangelist, burst into the limelight. He was born in Ames, Iowa, and had risen there to the position of janitor and was getting $25 a month. Every year the town gave a dramatic entertainment at which local talent recited, and this particular year, Billy thought he'd be in it. It seems almost prophetic that his carefully prepared piece should have been called "The Maniac."

Sunday prepared for the occasion with the utmost care. He even let his hair grow for months so that it came down over his eyes. He wore a shirt open at the throat and raved and screamed for three minutes.

His act eclipsed anything on the programme. Girls screamed and boys looked on with frightened eyes. And that was the foundation for the volcanic evangelism he preaches today.

Had Her Guessing.

OF ALL the royal personages met on the other side, none is more popular with the doughboys than Princess Marie of Rumania. Once she visited one of the Yankee recreation posts with her mother the Queen and after seeing a game of baseball and some athletic sports, declared that she had heard so much about the American dancing that she'd like to see some.

Accordingly it was arranged and a regular dance given after the prevailing army mode. This arranges that when the whistle is blown, each man relinquishes his partner and there is a free-for-all on the part of the rest to grab her.

When the dancing started a good looking Yankee, not the least abashed because of her station, asked the Princess if she wouldn't like to dance. She would, and did, and it wasn't many minutes before the rest of the buddies knew she was on the floor.

When the whistle blew, permitting a break, there was a wild scramble which nearly bowled the young lady off her feet. She was puzzled for a moment, until she grasped the system and then yielded merrily to the spirit of the game.

For an hour she was passed from buddie to buddie in a breathless whirl and when it was over she cried:

"What a wonderful place America must be. Every man is a king." Then she sighed and added. "And I don't believe any European princess was so danced with before."

Praising the Teetotaler.

THE attacks on President Wilson which followed his message in support of wines and moderate drinking, led Levy Mayer, the famous Chicago lawyer, to say:

"It reminds me of a temperance lecturer. This lecturer was introduced to his audience one evening by the Mayor of the town. The Mayor, though the lecturer didn't know it, was a saloon-keeper.

" 'Ladies and gents,' the Mayor began, 'I take pleasure in introducing Dr. John B. Goff Hoskins to you. Dr. Goff Hoskins is going to lecture against the moderate drinker, and I hope he'll give him Hades, for there's no bigger rascal under the sun.

" 'The moderate drinker, ladies and gents, comes into your saloon, orders a schooner of beer, and sits down with it in the arm chair beside the stove. He collars all the newspapers in the house, and there he holds forth until closing time. All you get out of him, ladies and gents, is a nickel. So much for the moderate drinker.

" 'But the teetotaler—heaven bless him—the teetotaler sneaks up to your back door, gets two flasks of whisky and a pail of beer, and is off like a shot.' "

Pie Proof.

SENATOR BORAH said in an argument on the League of Nations:

"The proof of that fact is overwhelming. It's pie proof, in a word."

He smiled and went on:

"A man entered a lunch joint, took a piece of custard pie, and sat down in his chair with it when he remembered that he wanted coffee.

"So he ran over to the coffee urns, and when he came back again his chair was occupied.

" 'That's my chair,' he said politely to the occupant.

" 'How do you know it's your chair?' the occupant growled.

" 'Because I can prove it.'

" 'Oh, how can you prove it?'

" 'By my pie—my custard pie. You're sitting on it.' "

The Selfish Son.

"THE Germans," said Senator Lodge, "display a naive selfishness in their peace demands which reminds me of a story.

"A father patted his son's shoulder in sentimental fashion one day and said:

" 'My son, when I die I propose to leave you every dollar I possess.'

" 'I'll allow you a 5 per cent. discount for spot cash, father,' said the son."

Oh, Gosh!

HERE is a little story from the Mason City (Iowa) Globe-Gazette:

"Seven years ago a farmer living near this city hung his vest on a fence post by the barnyard. A calf chewed up part of the garment, including a pocket in which was a standard gold watch.

"Last week, the animal, a staid old milch cow, was butchered for beef, and the timepiece was found in such a position between the lungs of the cow, that the respiration—the closing in and filling out of the lungs—kept the stemwinder wound up so that the watch had lost only four minutes in the seven years."

In the Old Days.

WHEN Mayor Snyder began the arrangement of the political personnel at City Hall last week there was a tempest in a teapot but the new Mayor was obdurate. "I'm out for an efficient administration," he declared, and added, "if I can help it I'm going to keep Los Angeles away from 'those good old days' when city work was done something after this fashion:

"First Councilman: 'Here's a fine looking street.'

"New Member: 'You're right. What's the best thing to do with it?'

" 'Let's have it dug up for a sewer.'

" 'But wouldn't it be better to pave it first?'

" 'Of course. I thought you would understand that. Then, after it is paved and drained, we'll have it repaved.'

" 'All in readiness to be dug up again for gas pipe? I see you understand the principles of municipal economy. And after we have had it repaved for a second time, what then?'

" 'Well, then it will be ready for widening. There's nothing I admire so much as system in the care and improvement of our roadways.' "

Sizing Up Father.

LITTLE Johnny has a sister of whom he is very proud. His mother the other day heard him talking to the infant and this was what he said:

"It's too bad you can't go anywhere. You can't go to the movies; you can't go to see Gen. Edwards. You haven't seen any big men at all—only uncle and father, and they ain't so very big."

How papa learned of the incident hasn't been disclosed, but it can be imagined that mother, for a while, had a large sized twinkle in her eye.

Her Bluff.

AT A RECENT reception, one of the newspaper men asked Secretary of State Lansing how it was that the Fiume affair had so suddenly dropped out of sight.

"Because there was nothing to it," answered the diplomat promptly, "just as there was nothing to Mrs. Murphy's supper.

"Murphy had not been married very long before he discovered that his wife, to whom he had unwillingly turned over the management of purse and house, was mighty stingy.

"One evening he was working in the garden when his wife came to the door. He nearly dropped dead with surprise and joy when he heard her call:

" 'Terrance, come in fer yer tay, toast and eggs.'

"Terrance dropped his spade in astonishment and ran into the house. 'Sure an' yer only kiddin' me,' he cried, hopefully.

" 'No Terrance,' retorted his better half, 'not you! 'Tis the neighbors I'm after kiddin.' "

Finding Out.

"BUT even your views may be mistaken," said a constituent one day to Senator Sorghum.

"Of course," was the answer, "but it is my duty to state them just the same. Perhaps there are a lot of others who are making the same mistake that I am.

"Now if I state my view and some chap comes along and shows where I am wrong, it will be for the common good."

Perplexing Problem.

WHILE strict secrecy is one of the most pronounced things about the office of Uncle Sam's local collector, Carter, even this sphinx couldn't keep to himself the little incident that happened during the collection of the income tax.

A prepossessing young woman came into the office and when her turn came, said:

"I have figured very carefully, and I find that I owe the government 3 cents taxes."

"Yes ma'am," murmured the deputy encouragingly.

"And what I want to know is," continued the young woman, "will the government accept a postage stamp in settlement?"

Felt Like Saluting.

"EVIDENTLY giving soldiers jobs isn't quite as simple as it sounds," remarked Mayor Snyder the other day. "I was going through a factory with a friend of mine and he pointed out the ex-soldiers who were working for him.

" 'And how do they get along?' I asked.

" 'Well,' said my friend, 'that chap over there was a lieutenant; over yonder is a major; and that man over there was a colonel. I'm not saying a thing against them, but believe me, I'm mighty glad that I haven't got any generals here.' "

Ignoramus.

"CUPID" SPARKS, owing to his position as marriage license dispenser, gets numberless invitations to weddings and once in a while he goes. Once it was on a ranch a little way out from Los Angeles.

While waiting for the minister, the near bride and groom sat on a couch, he with his arm around her waist and she resting her head on his shoulder. The girl's brother was something of a wag and thinking to stir up a bit of fun asked:

"Have you a headache, sis?"

On getting no answer he pressed the question, adding, "Ef you have, I can give you some tablets that'll fix you up in a jiffy."

The bride rolled her eyes around until they focused on the would-be wit and snapped out:

"Headache, you fool; if you don't know the difference between true love an' a headache, you'd better go out an' pick grass with the geese!"

"Those, sir, are race cups, to be awarded as prizes," the clerk answered politely.

"Well, if that's the case," said the stranger, picking up the largest one, "suppose you race me for this one."

He started off, with the clerk after him, but the stranger won the cup.

Size and Looks Don't Count.

WILLIAM GRAPEJUICE BRYAN was speaking of great men and things. He sprung the old adage of "handsome is as handsome does" and pointed out that Lincoln, though great, was not handsome.

"And," he added, "that reminds me of the modernized version of Cinderella. Said the prince:

" 'My wife has the smallest foot in the kingdom.'

" 'Ah,' sighed the courtier, 'it is true.'

" 'But,' continued the prince, 'she can put it down as hard as anyone.' "

MARRIED LIFE OF HELEN AND WARREN

BY MABEL HERBERT URNER.

Helen's Feminine Greed for Bargains Leads to an Unsavory Adventure.

"FOR SALE—Mole scarf. Cost $120. Never worn. Sell for $45. Miss Stanley, 145 West —— street."

With a verifying glance at the number, Helen returned the clipped advertisement to her purse, and mounted the shabby unswept steps.

A slatternly maid with soiled apron and straggling hair answered her ring.

"I should like to see Miss Stanley."

Turning back into the dark, dubious hall, the girl knocked at the farthest door.

"Who is it?" came a cautious voice.

"Lady to see you!"

The door opened and Helen was ushered into what had once been the back parlor of a fine old residence. The mantel and woodwork, now scarred by a procession of "roomers," still testified to prosperous days.

Miss Stanley was attractive and well gowned, about 30, with long, jet ear-rings and a slightly foreign accent.

"I believe you advertised a mole scarf," began Helen awkwardly.

"Oh, I'm so sorry—I just sold that. But I've some beautiful skunk."

"No, thank you, I wouldn't be interested in skunk."

"Just let me show it to you. And I've a fox scarf—perhaps you'd care for that," opening a large closet, the shelves filled with packages.

The room was crowded with trunks and boxes. On the bed was some exquisite neckwear—expensive lace sets and fichus, all new.

"Isn't there anything else I can show you?" When Helen again disclaimed her interest in any fur except mole. "Could you use any neckwear?" taking up a dainty hand-made fichu. "This is only $2."

Two dollars! It was worth at least five. Helen laid it aside.

"You wear a very small glove, don't you?" taking a box from the closet. "Here're a lot of small sizes that you can have for 75 cents."

They were exquisite French gloves, mostly white, and many of them still in their tissue paper folders. Helen took three pairs of 5½.

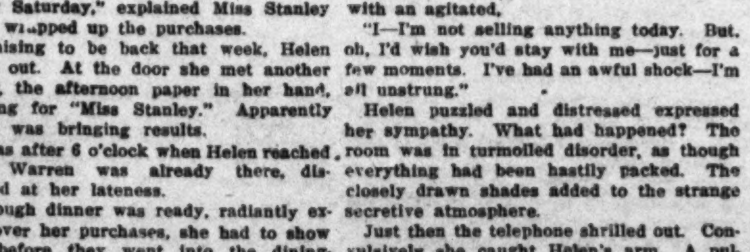
Where did she get these things? How could she sell them so cheap?

"I bought out a small shop," as if in answer to Helen's thoughts. "Their lease expired and they didn't want to renew. They had lovely things—but only odds and ends. Not enough to open a shop—so I'm selling them this way."

"That's very interesting," murmured Helen, impressed by the quality and the low prices. "Have you any underwear—nightgowns or petticoats?"

"No, but I've a lovely dressing sacque," opening one of the trunks.

It was a dainty pink crepe de chine trimmed with elderdown, which Helen promptly bought at the absurd price of $6.



"Here are some bags that are real bargains," getting out another box.

Having a weakness for bead bags, Helen took one for $12 that was easily worth $25.

"That's all the money I have with me—but I'll come in again."

"You'll have to come this week—I'm leaving Saturday," explained Miss Stanley as she wrapped up the purchases.

Promising to be back that week, Helen started out. At the door she met another woman, the afternoon paper in her hand, inquiring for "Miss Stanley." Apparently the ad was bringing results.

It was after 6 o'clock when Helen reached home. Warren was already there, disgruntled at her lateness.

Although dinner was ready, radiantly excited over her purchases, she had to show them before they went into the dining-room.

"Dear, I'm going back tomorrow," aglow with enthusiasm. "They're exquisite things—and she's selling them for almost nothing."

"Where'd she get 'em?" demanded Warren.

"She bought the stock of a small shop that went out of business."

"Well, if it's all right stuff—why does she have to sacrifice it?"

"I suppose she wants to get rid of it. She said she wouldn't be there longer than this week."

"Huh, sounds fishy," as he strode in to the table. "Now you take my advice and steer clear of any such cut-throat bargains."

"Why, dear, what do you mean?" The things are perfectly new and fresh. There's nothing the matter with them."

"Screw loose somewhere," shaking out his napkin with unnecessary vigor. "You're always trying to get something for nothing—always got some new stunt to get things cheap. Now you go to a reputable store and pay a fair price—or you may get into trouble.

Fearing that Warren would absolutely forbid her going back tomorrow, she adroitly changed the subject. But her determination to go was unshaken.

It was 4 o'clock the next afternoon when Helen again approached the shabby brown stone front of 145 West —— street.

A man with a black mustache and a slouch hat pulled low over his eyes was lounging against a lamp post before the house. She felt the keen scrutiny of his glance as she went up the mud-stained steps.

As she rang the bell, instinctively she looked back. He was still watching her. Vaguely disturbed, she was relieved when the door opened and she stepped into the sheltering darkness of the hall.

The same slatternly maid had let her in, but now she shuffled down the rear stairs, leaving Helen to knock at the door of the back parlor.

"Who's there?" the voice held a strangely tense note.

"I—I was here yesterday buying some things," disconcerted, for the "Who's there" was awkward to answer.

A sound as of a hastily closed trunk, then the bolt slid back.

Amazed Helen stared at the haggard woman before her, hardly recognizing the alert well-gowned Miss Stanley who had received her yesterday. She was without make-up, her hair disheveled and dark rings shadowed her eyes.

Rebolting the door, she turned to Helen with an agitated,

"I—I'm not selling anything today. But, oh, I'd wish you'd stay with me—just for a few moments. I've had an awful shock—I'm all unstrung."

Helen puzzled and distressed expressed her sympathy. What had happened? The room was in turmoiled disorder, as though everything had been hastily packed. The closely drawn shades added to the strange secretive atmosphere.

Just then the telephone shrilled out. Convulsively she caught Helen's arm. A pulsating pause and again the clamorous ring.

"No—no, I can't answer it! I want them to think I'm not here." Then hoarsely, "Was a man standing outside when you came in? A big man with a black mustache and his hat pulled over his eyes?"

Helen nodded.

The woman's face grew grayish pale. The phone was still ringing.

Warren's warning flashed through Helen's mind, as vaguely frightened she turned toward the door. Something was wrong! There was dread and fear in the very air.

"Oh, don't leave me yet!" piteously. "Just a few minutes!"

"I—I don't understand," faltered Helen. "I'm sorry—but I'm afraid I can't stay."

A peal of the front door bell. A breathless wait. Sounds of voices in the hall. Heavy steps toward the door—then a loud, imperative knock!

Shrinking back white and trembling, she motioned Helen to silence.

Another knock—thundering, terrifying, above the still shrilling phone.

"Open this door—or we'll break it in!" came a stentorian voice.

Miss Stanley now crossed to the door and struggled with the bolt. Her tremulous hands had hardly strength to slide it back.

The next moment an officer and two men, one with the black mustache and slouch hat, burst in. Their keen glance swept the room including Helen.

"What do you want?" demanded Miss Stanley, struggling for composure. "What right have you to break into my room?"

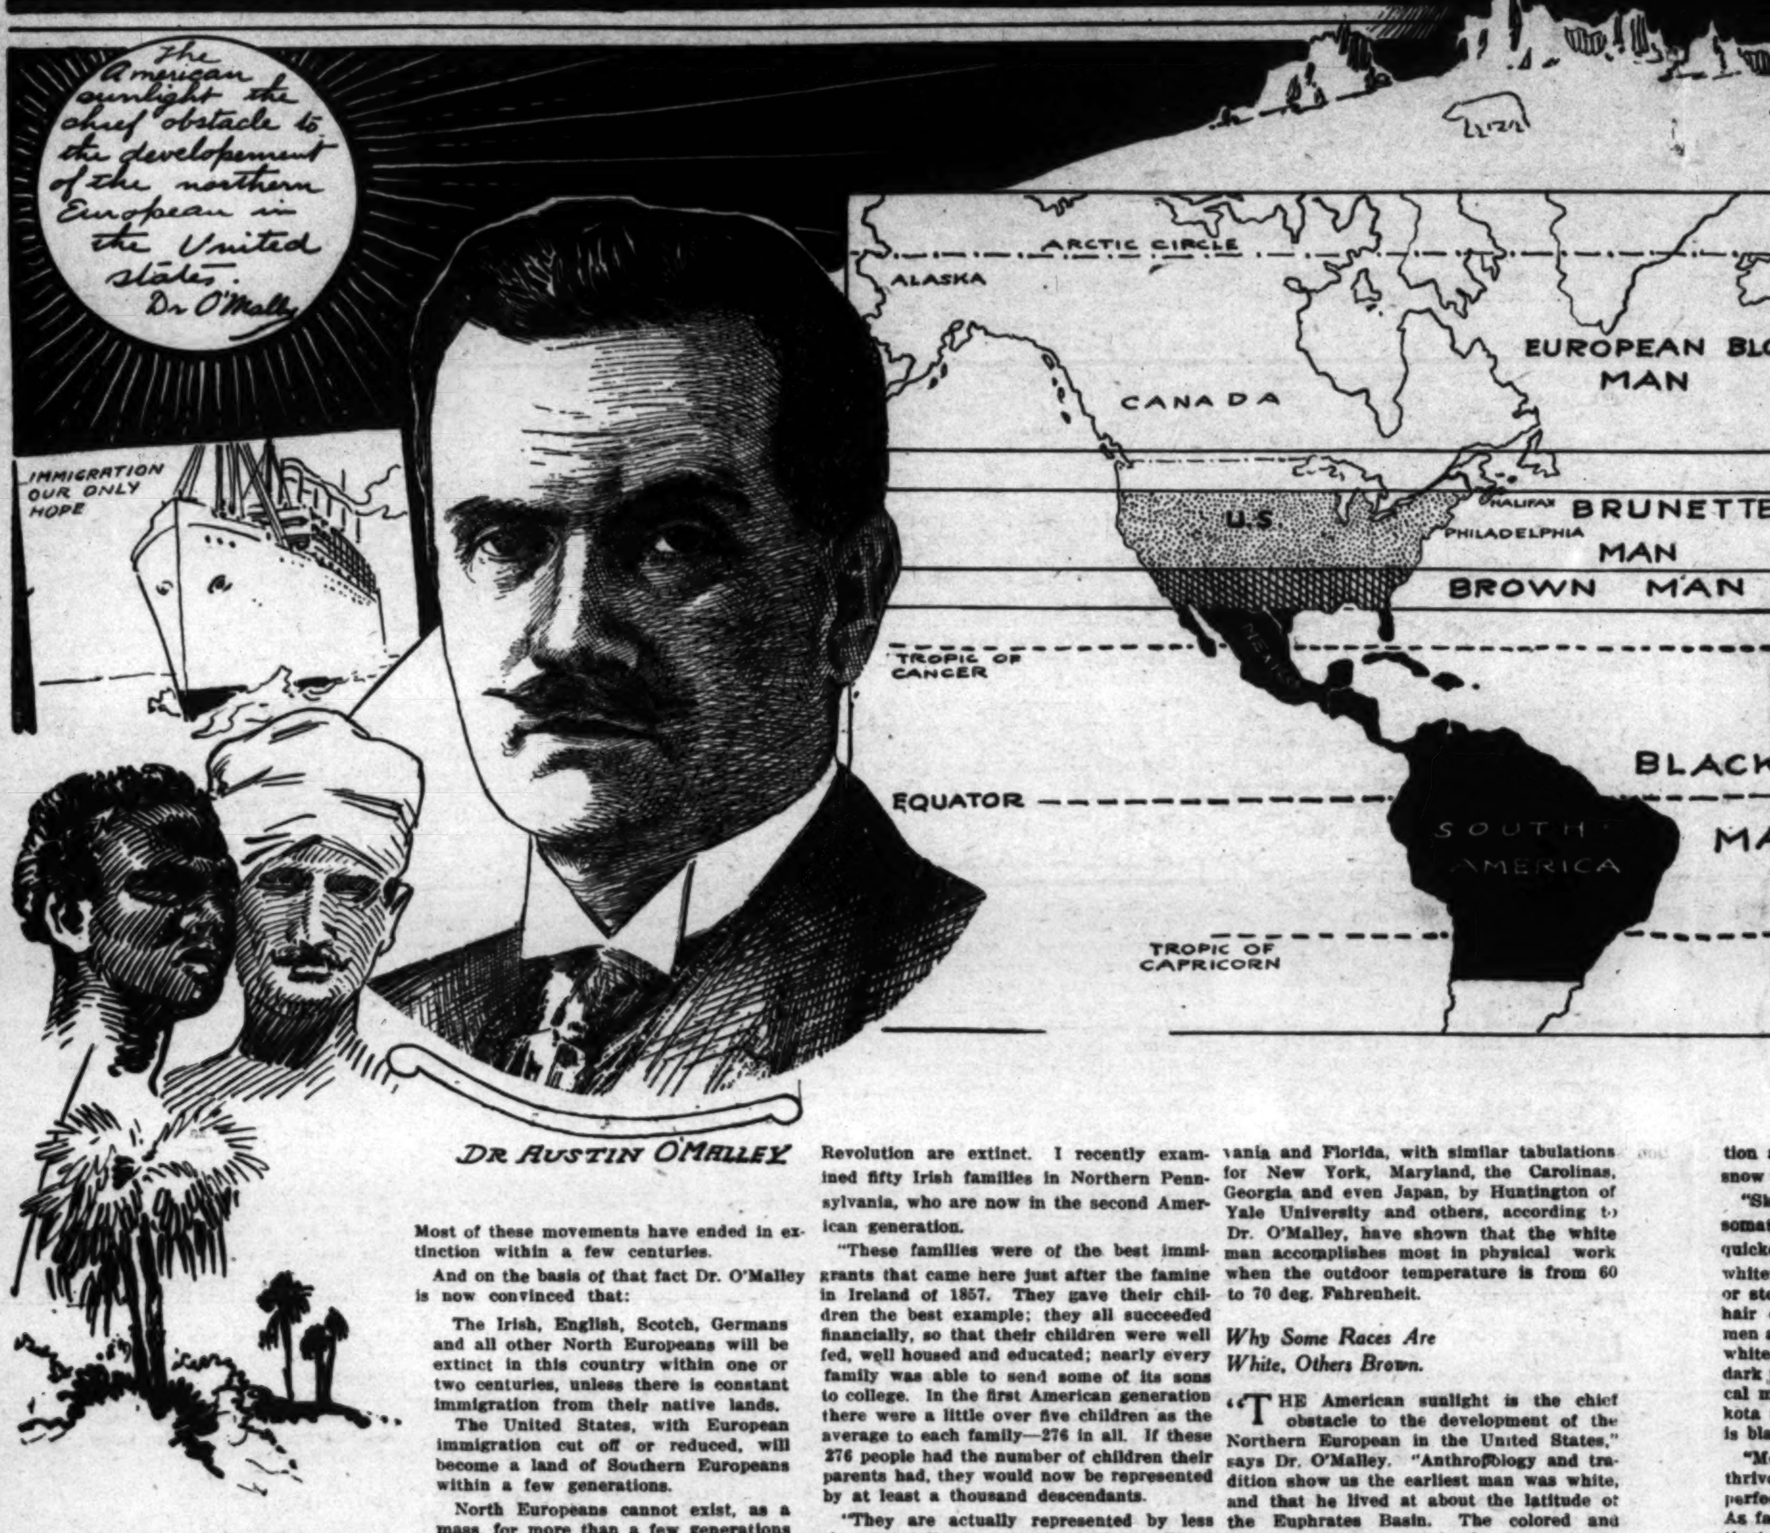
ARE WHITE MEN DOOMED TO GIV



DR AUSTIN O'MALLEY

By William A. McGarry.

AMERICAN "pep" is a mockery. To put it in scientific language, which is at the same time perfectly good everyday American, the national bustle, instead of being a virtue to be cultivated and handed down to generations that they may rule the world, is nothing but a neurotic irritability. It is a sign of mental and physical deterioration, to check which all the knowledge of the man of medicine and science is powerless, for the simple reason that mankind has not yet reached a stage of intelligence that would make it possible to prescribe for a nation.

The foregoing is but one of many remarkable conclusions reached by one of Philadelphia's most eminent scientists, Dr. Austin O'Malley, widely known physician, former professor of English literature at Notre Dame University, and author.

Dr. O'Malley has been making a study for years of the effect of climate on races. Already equipped with a scientist's knowledge of archeology and history, he has traced the movement of all known races from the times of the earliest civilization. Most of these movements have ended in extinction within a few centuries.

And on the basis of that fact Dr. O'Malley is now convinced that:

> The Irish, English, Scotch, Germans and all other North Europeans will be extinct in this country within one or two centuries, unless there is constant immigration from their native lands.
>
> The United States, with European immigration cut off or reduced, will become a land of Southern Europeans within a few generations.
> North Europeans cannot exist, as a mass, for more than a few generations in most parts of the United States. As quickly as they migrate into such sections as Philadelphia they shall perish—literally burned up by the ultra-violet rays of the sun.

Irish Families in the United States Dying Out.

ENOUGH proof of these assertions to fill a library has been obtained by Dr. O'Malley. But the most outstanding piece of evidence, because it is available for the study of every one, is the record of the American Revolution. According to a record of the testimony given by Maj.-Gen. Robinson, the English commissioner sent to this country during the Revolution for the exchange of prisoners, Gen. Washington's army consisted of "one-half Irish, one-fourth natives and the rest were Scotch, German and English."

"During the war of the American Revolution," says Dr. O'Malley, "almost the entire Pennsylvania and Maryland line in the American army was made up of Irish; there are now almost no Irish names among the Daughters of the Revolution, the Order of the Cincinnati, and similar societies made up of persons who had ancestors in the Revolutionary War, because the Irish of the Revolution are extinct. I recently examined fifty Irish families in Northern Pennsylvania, who are now in the second American generation.

"These families were of the best immigrants that came here just after the famine in Ireland of 1857. They gave their children the best example; they all succeeded financially, so that their children were well fed, well housed and educated; nearly every family was able to send some of its sons to college. In the first American generation there were a little over five children as the average to each family—276 in all. If these 276 people had the number of children their parents had, they would now be represented by at least a thousand descendants.

"They are actually represented by less than 200 delicate, neurotic children. These families will be extinct in a few more generations. One group of seven families in this list had forty-nine children in the first American generations, of which 9 per cent. became insane, but the second American generation consists of six delicate children, and there will be no more. Instead of a progression in the second generation there is a retrogression by more than 86 per cent."

The underlying cause of this retrogression, according to Dr. O'Malley, is climate—attempts by light-complexioned nationalities to exist in degrees of light against which nature has not protected them. Without the protective pigment that will shut out the ultra-violet rays, he declares, the northerner in this climate first becomes irritable and unduly hurried—American "pep." In his children or his children's children, still less capable of withstanding the rays, they work additional havoc until within a few generations the family name disappears, unless there is a blending with more immigrant blood or with darker skinned races better equipped by nature to withstand the sun.

Plots of the work curve of more than seven thousand men and women in the factories of Connecticut, Western Pennsylvania and Florida, with similar tabulations for New York, Maryland, the Carolinas, Georgia and even Japan, by Huntington of Yale University and others, according to Dr. O'Malley, have shown that the white man accomplishes most in physical work when the outdoor temperature is from 60 to 70 deg. Fahrenheit.

Why Some Races Are White, Others Brown.

"THE American sunlight is the chief obstacle to the development of the Northern European in the United States," says Dr. O'Malley. "Anthropology and tradition show us the earliest man was white, and that he lived at about the latitude of the Euphrates Basin. The colored and blonde races were such by development. As the white man migrated southward he slowly acquired protective skin pigment and became brown. Farther south, in the tropics, he grew black to defend himself from the ultra-violet rays of the sun and to radiate heat more readily. As he migrated northward he lost the protective pigment which was worthless to him, and became whiter, so that he could retain animal heat better.

"Physicists that work with extraspectral rays, Roentgen rays, Becquerel rays, rays from radium and the like omissions, must protect themselves by rubber, lead glass, sheet lead and similar means. The ultraviolet radiation changes the protoplasm of cells so as to let in salts which disintegrate and kill the cells. There were more than twenty physicians killed in the United States alone by the action of the X-ray before methods for protection were devised. Similar rays exist in the sunlight.

Finsen, in Denmark, found that skin pigment can protect animal tissues from the ultra-violet rays of the sun. Therefore, the stronger and more direct the sunlight upon the earth and the less relative cloudiness of the sky the more darkly pigmented the people that live under it. The Eskimos, an apparent exception, are dark, as a protection against the sun's glare on the Arctic snow during their day of six months.

"Skin pigment has a relation also to somatic heat. The blacker an object is the quicker it radiates the heat it receives; the whiter it is the slower it radiates received or stored heat. Arctic animals have white hair or fur for this reason, and northern men are white; the further north you go the whiter men are. Tropical animals have dark pelts, and are nocturnal in habit; tropical men are black. A Sioux Indian in Dakota is white, an Apache Indian in Arizona is black.

"Men are differentiated into races and thrive, develop and reach physical perfection within well-defined climatic areas. As fauna and flora exist and persist as distinct species within certain zones bounded by isotherms, men so exist and persist as distinct races. Nature preserves the race that is best fitted to a given environment and kills off the unfit. The natural geographical position for the black man is, roughly, from the equator to the thirtieth parallel of north or south latitude. From the thirtieth to the thirty-fifth parallel is the zone of the brown man, like, say the Malay. From the thirty-fifth to the forty-fifth parallel of latitude is the zone of the brunette Mediterranean type of white man. The zone of the European blonde is above the fiftieth parallel."

To indicate just what this would mean to Americans of the North European types, Dr. O'Malley points out that the fiftieth parallel in America passes through British Columbia about 480 miles north of the uppermost boundary of the United States. The forty-fifth parallel passes near Halifax, Bangor in Maine, Ogdensburg in New York, Ottawa in Canada, St. Paul, the lower border of Montana and the uppermost third of Oregon.

In Europe it runs near Bordeaux, Turin, through Bosnia, Rumania and the Crimea. "Madrid, Naples and Constantinople," says Dr. O'Malley, "are north of Philadelphia; New York is as far south as Naples; Boston and Chicago as Rome; St. Louis as Athens, and Washington city is at the level of French Africa."

Heat Also Has an Effect on Man's Color.

HEAT zones must also be considered in a study of the effects of climate on man. Humidity, says Dr. O'Malley, is almost as important as heat and light. "As the summer heat is greater than in Europe," he continues, "the winter cold in America is severer. Above Europe is a partly thawed sea; above America hundreds of miles of ice-covered land.

The European mountains are high and they lie east and west and cut off the arctic winds; Southern and Eastern Europe is protected behind high mountains.

The American mountains run north and south and let down the cold winds. When roses are in bloom on the Italian Riviera, which is up at the level of Lake Superior, the frost may be nipping the Florida orange groves, which are down at the middle of the Sahara Desert and almost within the tropics.

Norwegians Could Not Live in Southern Climate.

"A MAN from the north of Ireland going to Philadelphia to live," says Dr. O'Malley, "moves southward 1000 miles; if he goes to New Orleans, he moves more than 1700 miles. A Norwegian going to Texas moves south 2000 miles, and fifty years ago a large Norwegian colony was actually foolish enough to try this experiment. Today there is not a single male or female descendant of that colony in existence.

"The Lombards went from what is now Hanover and the Altmark of Prussia down to Middle Italy. Their kingdom began in Italy in 568 and ended in 774; it lasted 206 years, and the name alone remains; the people and their speech have disappeared.

The Teutonic Goths, who most probably came originally from the south coast of the Baltic, were important in the fourth, fifth and sixth centuries. They took Italy, Sicily and Dalmatia and extended their power over a large part of Gaul and nearly the whole of Spain. They lasted in Italy sixty-two years. They lost Spain in 534, and by 601 the Gothic language began to go out of use in Spain."

"The Vandals went down from Brandenburg and Pomerania, and about 428 some 80,000 of them passed over into Northern Africa, at the level of Virginia. By 536, that is 108 years after they had left Spain, the Vandals disappeared from history, annihilated, not by war or pestilence, but by the climate.

Early in the thirteenth century a body of Burgundians and Germans invaded Greece. Two generations after the conquerors had set foot on the Peloponnesus many of their leading families were extinct. There are ruins of old Frankish castles there now, but nothing more."

American Hustle and Bustle Only Neurotic Irritability.

THESE and other instances thickly strewn through the history of the world, Dr. O'Malley holds, prove that a northern man cannot thrive anywhere in the South. "The Yankee," he says, "goes down to Georgia to take charge of a cotton mill there, and for six months he awakens the sleepers; then the joins them." The doctor also points out that the heavyweight pugilist common here thirty or forty years ago was a foreigner or a first-generation man. Now he has almost disappeared and is replaced by the lightweight.

The bustle of Americans, their rapidity in business transactions, is not a virtue but a neurotic irritability," says Dr. O'Malley. "Even at a place of recreation, like, say, Atlantic City, instead of strolling leisurely as people do at Ostend, Americans run as to a fire; and the brighter the sunlight the quicker they run. To one returning from a long sojourn in Europe, the unnatural hurry on the streets of our cities is the most striking fact.

"From South Carolina to near Canada is the zone in light and summer heat for the olive-tinted white man, the Mediterranean type," Dr. O'Malley says, "and this man tarives here fairly well, despite the winter, which is more severe than that of his European home. If, however, a man from Scotland, which was an average of 259 cloudy days in the year, and a very slanting sun, migrates to Yuma, Ariz., where there are about nineteen cloudy days annually, a very slightly slanting sun, and sometimes a temperature of 120 deg. Fahrenheit in the shade, or to El Paso, Tex., which has about twenty-eight cloudy days in the year, he is stimulated for a short time, then nervously exhausted, and, finally, degenerates rapidly. Spaniards deteriorate rapidly in Central and South America. The Irish degenerate physically even in the Northern United States."

Uncle Rufus Tells a Story.

BY W. A. ARMSTRONG.

Look heah yo' li'l Rufus, yo' on'ry no 'count chap,

Musical Mysticism.

"What is that tune you were playing on the piano?"

"That isn't a tune. That is a sonata."

"What's the difference?"

"Well, with a sonata it's hard for the average listener to detect mistakes. With a tune you've got to know pretty well what you are about."—[Boston Transcript.

An' Ever'thing.

Martha, who is about ready to finish her kindergarten, had seen the circus parade, and, at dinner, was telling her father of the wonderful sights:

"An', papa, I saw one o' those grea', grea' big potmusses; an' a whole lot o' shepherds (papa's questions developed she meant leopards) an' white mens; an' some elephants playin' crack the whip, hol' o' each other's tails; an'—ever'thing in the world."—[Indianapolis News.

Expensive Pier.

Pier Eighty-six, North River, built by the city of New York at a cost of more than $4,000,000, and taken over by the government last year, is one of the most perfectly equipped steamship piers in the world. Its upper deck is used as a sub-postoffice, devoted chiefly to handling soldiers' mail.

Restaurant Regality.

"Oh, lady of beauteous mien,
Of all your surroundings the queen,
Though you answer your customers' call,
You are absolute ruler of all!"

"Aha! my young friend," replied she,
With a flash of sublime repartee,
"I know what you're trying to say—
That I'm the monarch of all I serve—eh?"
